Mr. SISSON. Called the Capitol Plaza. That is property that was taken over a few years ago by the United States Government and added to the Capitol Grounds. Just as the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds has been granted funds he has been removing the old buildings. There was the exception of the Maltby Building, which belongs to the United States Government. That is Government property. Since the war broke out there has been no disposition on the part of the committee and no insistence on the part of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds to remove those buildings, because practically all of them are occupied, and they are arranging now, as I am informed, to have all of those buildings opened up for occupancy. That space is being used, and the Government may have to use a great many of those buildings for its own activities.

The Clerk read as follows:

Dust prevention, cleaning, and snow removal: For dust prevention, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, under the immediate direction of the commissioners, and for cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the discretion of the commissioners, including services, and purchase and maintenance of equipment, rent of storage rooms; maintenance and repairs of stables; hire, purchase, and maintenance of horses; hire, purchase, maintenance, and repair of wagons, harness, and other equipment; allowance to inspectors and foremen for maintenance of horses and vehicles or motor vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed for each inspector or foreman $25 per month for a horse-drawn vehicle, $30 per month for an automobile, and $15 per month for a motorcycle; purchase, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled vehicles necessary in cleaning streets; purchase, maintenance, and repair of bicycles; and necessary incidental expenses, $320,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee, with this appropriation are we to have the same character of service in cleaning the snow and ice from the streets that we had during last winter?

Mr. SISSON. If we have the same sort of winter I suppose we will have practically the same conditions.

Mr. DOWELL. With this appropriation, is it not possible that something at least can be done to clear the snow and ice from the streets?

Mr. SISSON. I think not, because this item is for the purpose of keeping the streets clean every day in the year. What are known as the "white angels" that the gentleman sees on the street are paid for out of this fund, and it is for the purpose of keeping the streets clean every day in the year. When the streets get covered with snow it would take a perfect army of people during that short time to clean the snow away.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there any provision, or has the gentleman investigated, as to whether or not there is or can be a provision whereby the property owners will be required to clean the snow and ice from the walks and streets?

Mr. SISSON. I think that would be a very desirable thing. It is said that Jerusalem was the cleanest city in the world, because each man was required to clean in front of his own door. From an investigation that we have made that seems to be the only practicable way to do when the streets get covered with snow. Let every individual clean his own sidewalk. It is a very simple matter if each man cleans in front of his own door.

Mr. DOWELL. I desire to inquire if the committee has made any attempt to require the property owners to clear the snow and ice from the sidewalks in front of their property?

Mr. SISSON. This committee has no right to do that. We are not a legislative committee, but an appropriating committee.

I am informed that some time ago a law was passed by the Congress requiring that to be done, when the District Commissioners thought the snow was sufficiently great to require that the property owners clean in front of their own property, and the Supreme Court of the District knocked that law out.

Mr. DOWELL. With that in view, should not this provision be stricken out of the bill—not appropriating any money to clear the snow and ice, and leave it up to the property owners?

Mr. SISSON. They do not clean the sidewalks at all out of this fund. They clean the streets.

Mr. DOWELL. It appears, from my experience, that they do not clean it from any fund.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman would knock this fund out, without having some provision to have the streets cleaned, he would have the city in such a filthy condition in two or three weeks so that we could not live here.

Mr. DOWELL. I certainly do not want that to happen, but what I am anxious about is that some provision be made to require these streets to be kept in proper condition when the snow and ice is on the ground.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, as the gentleman understands, that is a legislative matter, but this last winter the conditions were such that you could not get labor and teams to haul coal to the freezing people, much less get teams to haul snow and débris from the streets. That was a very unusual condition.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I see that there is a provision here for inspection, and I assume that it is somebody's business in the District of Columbia to observe whether there are dangerous defects in the highways. Several months ago I noticed on Massachusetts Avenue, just beyond Sheridan Circle, a place where the avenue goes across Rock Creek—that large viaduct filled in with gravel for the most part, except in the center—where the sidewalk is undermined. About the only thing that keeps the sidewalk on Massachusetts Avenue at this point from caving in is the fact that it is a solid mass of concrete. It is perfectly evident that unless something is done, and any undue weight comes on that part, there will be a serious accident to people walking along there.

The bank has apparently washed out from under the sidewalk. I notice that this has not been fixed. It has been that way for some time, and I simply wanted to ask whether it is anybody's business—the business of the police or anyone else—to observe such things and report them and have them fixed?

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that if that had been called to my attention I would have either notified the policeman on the beat or notified the District Commissioners of the condition. This inspection referred to here is not inspection of that character. This is an inspection as to the cleanliness of the streets and as to whether or not this department that cleans the streets is cleaning them properly; but in the office of the engineer commissioner there are several inspectors whose business it is to inspect the condition of the streets as to dangerous places.

Mr. DALLINGER. If anyone ever went by there he could not help but see it.

Mr. SISSON. I believe I should have called it to the attention of the District Commissioners. I do not know, of course, whether inspectors have done their duty or not in reference to the particular item that the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. DALLINGER. I notice also that there are a number of places through the District where the fences on these viaducts and bridges have been seriously injured, and apparently nothing has been done to repair them. I was wondering whether it was anybody's business to see those things were kept up.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendments will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposal of city refuse: To enable the commissioners to carry out the provisions of existing law governing the collection and disposal of garbage, dead animals, night soil, and miscellaneous refuse and ashes from private residences in the District of Columbia, including inspection and allowance to inspectors for maintenance of horses and vehicles or motor vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed $25 per month for each inspector for horse-drawn vehicles, $30 per month for automobiles, and $15 per month for motorcycles; fencing of public and private property designated by the commissioners as public dumps; and incidental expenses, $608,997, to be available immediately: Provided, That any proceeds received from the disposal of city refuse or garbage shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "from private residences."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, at the end of line 8, insert the following: "that every person, corporation, or institution in the District of Columbia shall be permitted to transport in closed metal containers from the place of origin to places outside of the District of Columbia any table refuse, including meat, bread, and vegetables, not in a decayed or decomposed condition, to be fed to poultry, pigs, or other live stock at any place where said feeding is not prohibited by law."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that until I can see just what the gentleman's amendment does.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman; the amendment proposes to take care of a somewhat peculiar situation in the District of Columbia. Under the present law the contractor is paid to haul away garbage that persons would be willing to haul away themselves. There is one concrete instance that has come to my attention. If I may have the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi, Providence Hospital needs fresh eggs and things of that kind, and they own a farm over in Maryland, where they have some chickens and pigs and cows. Under the present law they can not take the bread that is left on the table, nor the meat scraps that are left on the table, nor remnants of vegetables left on the table, and haul them out to their farm in Maryland with which to feed their own chickens and pigs. By this amendment I have proposed they will have that right.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. In the provision in the other bill that has passed, the House gave this same authority, and would not that authority be given under the other legislation without any amendment to this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is a question whether it would or not, but not feeling sure about it I have offered the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. I intended to ask my friend that very question. The provision is in the law now, and I understand it has passed the Senate, and I suppose has been signed by the President.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, not knowing whether or not the statement made by the gentleman is correct is the very reason I offer it here.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, the whole paragraph would be subject to the point of order if the bill has not become a law. Now, I have no objection to the amendment going on here, except it seems to me that it is surplusage, because it is already in the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is not surplusage if the Senate struck out that amendment.

Mr. SISSON. But I understand it has not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know whether it has or not.

Mr. SISSON. I think the bill was passed in the Senate without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Even so, it would not do any harm to insert it here.

Mr. SISSON. I do not see any harm could come from this. It still leaves this discretion with the District Commissioners to adopt any one of these methods which was in the mind of the gentlemen when the bill was passed, though I think it is a mere surplus amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Even so, it will not do any harm, and I trust the gentleman will interpose no objection.

Mr. SISSON. It is not subject to a point of order, because it is already in the law.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph appropriates $608,997 for the disposal of city refuse. The garbage bill which passed the House, coming from the District Committee two or three weeks ago, contemplated the taking over of this work, did it not?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This appropriation would carry the commissioners over until the new law takes effect; is that the idea?

Mr. SISSON. No; it is to carry out the new law before the contract expires. In other words, the District has to make arrangements to take care of the garbage on the 1st day of July, and therefore they have got to make preparations to do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask if this same amount was carried in the bill that was before the House recently?

Mr. SISSON. This amendment is a little less, a few dollars less than was authorized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It does not represent two amounts for one year?

Mr. SISSON. No, indeed; there is no appropriation in the bill as it passed the House the other day; that was merely an authorization.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But even then that would be caught up by the Committee on Appropriations if the question of duplication should arise?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; but there is no duplication at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Playgrounds: For maintenance, equipment, supplies, tools, construction of toilet facilities, wading pools, installation of telephones and telephone service, installation of electric lights and electric service, grading, and repairs, including labor and materials, and transportation of materials, maintenance and repair of storehouse, and necessary incidental and contingent expenses for all playgrounds, under the direction and supervision of the commissioners, $25,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph. I believe it will be better that I reserve the point of order on the paragraph and go ahead and read down to the end of line 25, and then make the point of order to the whole proposition.

Mr. SISSON. That is entirely satisfactory, because the amendment I would offer to carry out the law and the idea of the gentleman from Kentucky would come properly there, so I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request? The Chair could not hear the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph with the understanding that we read down to and including line 25, and there I will make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves the point of order, and in the meantime asks unanimous consent to read down to the bottom of page 32. Is that it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Down to the bottom of page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries: Supervisor, $2,500; inspector of playgrounds, $1,200; clerk (stenographer and typewriter), $1,200; to be employed not exceeding 10 months—20 directors of playgrounds or recreation centers at $65 per month each, assistant director at $60 per month, general utility man at $60 per month; to be employed not exceeding 7 months—2 assistant directors at $60 per month each, 3 assistant directors at $50 per month each; to be employed not exceeding 3 months—3 assistant directors at $60 per month each, 20 assistants at $45 per month each; to be employed 12 months—20 watchmen at $50 per month each, clerk (who shall be a bookkeeper) at $75 per month; for services of extra directors at not exceeding 35 cents per hour, $800; for services of extra watchmen at not exceeding 25 cents per hour, $600; in all, $38,530;

For supplies, installing electric lights, repairs, maintenance, and necessary expenses of operating five swimming pools, $3,000;

For five guards or swimming teachers for four months at $60 per month each, $1,200;

In all, for playgrounds, $67,730.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the playground provision, on the ground that the existing law is to the effect that all of that should be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, and no such provision is made in the bill.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I will state for the benefit of the Chair and of the committee that it was an oversight on the part of the subcommittee that they left out the language "to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia." If the gentleman will reserve his point of order, and if I may be permitted, by unanimous consent, to amend, at the bottom of page 32, after line 25, by inserting "to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia," then, as I understand, the gentleman will have no objection, and it would be in order. If I can get this amendment in by unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] asks unanimous consent to offer a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report, pending the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 32, at the end of line 25, after the figures, insert "to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I supposed unanimous consent would adopt that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked if there was any objection to offering the amendment, and there was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting: For purchase, installation, and maintenance of public lamps, lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures of all kinds on streets, avenues, roads, alleys, and public spaces, and for all necessary expenses in connection therewith, including rental of stables and storerooms, livery and extra labor, this sum to be expended in accordance with the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912, and with the provisions of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, and other laws applicable thereto, $415,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the chairman whether the District develops its own power for lighting or if the current is bought?

Mr. SISSON. The current is bought.

Mr. SNELL. From one of the local companies here?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Can you tell the price paid for the current?

Mr. SISSON. Well, it is all regulated by law. You would have to get the schedule in order to find out.

Mr. SNELL. I have wondered many times, and I have tried to find out, where the current came from, and the price, but I have not been able to get it.

Mr. SISSON. You would have to see the contract to be able to get a very intelligent idea about it.

Mr. SNELL. Where would a man go to get the information about it?

Mr. SISSON. You could get it from the District Commissioners' office. In other words, they have lamps of different power, and the contract is by the year for a certain character of lamp.

Mr. SNELL. They do not buy it for so much per kilowatt hour?

Mr. SISSON. They do not buy it by the kilowatt hour, although I believe they try to figure out the annual kilowatt consumption on the lamps, but the contract is for so much per year for a lamp.

Mr. SNELL. I did not know but on account of the amount of current the Government bought they would have a flat price for so much per kilowatt hour.

Mr. SISSON. That has not been done. And I take it that at the price of coal, for the last year or two, while in the past they might have paid a pretty good price for it, they are getting a pretty cheap rate now.

Mr. SNELL. This is all manufactured by coal power?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Does the Government own anything in connection with the Great Falls?

Mr. SISSON. No. The Government owns the aqueduct from the edge of the District up here to Great Falls, and the Government owns a certain amount of land, I do not know how much, at the intake of this aqueduct.

Mr. SNELL. And you do not understand that they own any part of that power there?

Mr. SISSON. Except the general control that the Federal Government would have over navigable streams.

Mr. SNELL. You do not know how much of this $415,000 is actually paid for current used, and the only way to find out would be by looking at the contract?

Mr. SISSON. That is all. I think they have paid a pretty good price in the past for their light, but I do not think they do now. I think under the present coal consumption they are getting a pretty fair price.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is such a large matter that it is due to the country as a whole to investigate, when you already pay that much for light.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; I think the gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCK CREEK PARK.

For care and improvement of Rock Creek Park and the Piney Branch Parkway, exclusive of building for superintendent's residence, to be expended under the direction of the board of control of said park in the manner now provided by law for other expenditures of the District of Columbia, $22,000.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the member of the committee in charge of this bill whether he thinks that $22,000 a year is sufficient for the care and improvement of a park the size of Rock Creek Park?

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that that is what they have had heretofore, and your subcommittee felt that if you could keep the park in reasonably good condition at this particular time, when so many demands were made on the Treasury, it might be just as well to repair and maintain it. There was no increase asked for, to amount to anything—perhaps two or three thousand dollars more—but we gave them just what they had last year.

Mr. DALLINGER. I simply want to say that, in my opinion, whether it is the fault of the committee or the District Commissioners, the policy that is now being pursued in the District of Columbia of not keeping up the roads in the park and the District is going to result in a tremendous expenditure that will have to be made later on to rebuild these roads, and that would be saved if this work was done now.

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe the statement of the gentleman is warranted. I believe we are keeping them up, and I believe when the opportunity is had to repair the streets and parks you will find the streets and parks are not neglected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 26, 1918:

H. R. 10783. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to increase the facilities for the proof and test of ordnance material, and for other purposes.

On May 1, 1918:

H. R. 9832. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $25,000 for the purpose of constructing dikes, flumes, and other works to confine the waters of Lowell Creek for the protection of said town.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Officers: Superintendent, $6,000; assistant superintendents—1 $3,500, 1 $3,000; director of intermediate instruction, 13 supervising principals, supervisor of manual training, and director of primary instruction, 16 in all, at a minimum salary of $2,200 each; secretary, $2,000; clerks—1 $1,600, 1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 3 at $1,000 each, 1 (to carry out the provisions of the child-labor law) $900; 2 stenographers, at $1,000 each; messenger, $720; in all, $60,520.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DALLINGER offers the following amendment: Page 36, line 2, after the figures "$6,000"——

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the original paragraph as read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves a point of order on the original paragraph. The amendment can not be offered until the point of order on the paragraph is determined.

Mr. COX. Pending that reservation, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the reservation of the point of order on the original paragraph, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] offers an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 36, line 2, after the figures "$6,000," insert the word "two," and strike out, in line 3, "1 $3,500, 1 $3,000," and insert in lieu thereof "at $3,500 each."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that amendment. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order on the original paragraph is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Special beginning teacher in the normal school, $800; in all for teachers, $1,727,150.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a committee amendment on page 38, after line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 38, after line 8, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The salaries appropriated herein for teachers in classes 1, 2, and 3 during the fiscal year 1919 shall be in lieu of the present basic or initial salaries for such classes, and the present rates of longevity increases of pay for the said classes shall apply to the basic or initial salaries appropriated herein."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I would like to hear the gentleman's statement as to why he wants to change the basic pay.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman had the longevity act before him, he would find that it makes an enumeration; for instance, the salary is $600 for the first year, $625 for the second, $650 for the third, and so on. It was not the intention of the subcommittee in increasing the salaries of the low-grade teachers to change the longevity law. Personally, I have great objection to the provisions of the longevity law, but I will not go into that now. Since we are appropriating money in accordance with the law, we have no disposition to change the longevity status of any individual teacher, and we simply make the basis of the different classes the basic pay provided in the law, except the three classes in which we have increased the pay. If the gentleman had a copy of the act before him he would find that class 1 is so arranged that in the first year the teacher receives $500, the second year $525, the third year $550, and the fourth year $575 up to $600, which begins class 2, and then successively $625, $650, $675, up to $700. Now, I think there is not any doubt as to the construction to be placed by the auditor upon the amendment as I have offered it. It is not for the purpose of changing the calculation of longevity pay.

Mr. MADDEN. Does this start them in at a higher compensation?

Mr. SISSON. It starts them in at a higher compensation.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no. The salaries have already been increased, and those items have been passed. The base pay in classes 1, 2, and 3 has been increased to $750. The purpose of this amendment is to remove doubt as to exactly upon what the longevity shall be calculated.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not that already figured out several times?

Mr. SISSON. No, sir. I have just tried to explain that your subcommittee, in granting increases of salary, has taken the exact form in which the statute is passed, giving the first year $500, the second year $525, the third year $550, the fourth year $575, and then $600. That is what is called class 1, the basic salary being $500 in that class, and in class 2 the basic salary being $600, rising successively to $625, $650, $675, and up to $700. The base pay of $500 and $600 has been raised to $750. Now, this amendment insures the computation of the longevity increase on the base pay as is outlined in this act. It was not our intention to repeal that law.

Mr. MADDEN. It looks to me as if the gentleman was doing exactly what he did not intend to do; that he has fixed the thing so that there will not be any longevity pay a little later.

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman any objection to hearing the amendment read over again?

Mr. SISSON. No; not at all. I will give the gentleman a copy of it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Thirty-seven gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the District of Columbia appropriation bill, H. R. 11692, found itself without a quorum; whereupon he caused the roll to be called, when 281 Members answered to their names, and he handed in the names of the absentees for printing in the RECORD and Journal.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the committee resumed its session, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Librarians and clerks at minimum salaries as follows:
Librarian in class 4—1 $800; librarians and clerks—14 in class 3 at $650 each, 8 in class 2 at $600 each, 15 in class 1 at $500 each (including 1 additional for Central High School); in all, $22,200.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking a question I move to strike out the last word. I have received a communication which leads me to ask a question, whether there is any discrimination in the matter of the pay between the white and colored teachers? For instance, I am told, as to the assistant supervisor of manual training, that the man in the white school receives $1,500, with longevity pay of $100 for 10 years, and that the one in the colored school gets $1,300. For the assistant directors of music, drawing, and physical culture I am informed that in the colored schools there is a basic pay of $1,300, with longevity pay of $50 for five years, and that in the white schools the director receives $1,500, with a longevity pay of $100 for 10 years. I am also informed that the board of education and the District Commissioners have recommended an equalization of this pay, but that is not contained in this bill. I am just asking for information.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that there is nothing in the law which treats them differently. In some instances, where teachers have been employed longer than other teachers, their pay will be greater because their longevity pay has been running longer. They get a certain increase annually. If there is any discrimination made, it is not made either in the law or in this bill.

Mr. MASON. I understand that the law as originally passed contemplated no discrimination; but here is an assistant superintendent of the colored schools who gets $3,000, while the assistant superintendent of the white schools gets $3,500.

Mr. SISSON. If there is any disparity in salaries it is due to the fact that under one assistant superintendent there would be a great many more schools and a great many more teachers; but if you take teachers of white schools and teachers of colored schools of the same class, they get identically the same pay. That is, their base pay is identically the same; so I think the gentleman has perhaps been misinformed as to the condition of the law.

Mr. MASON. The only information which I have is what I have received this morning in a communication.

Mr. SISSON. I think if the gentleman will investigate it that he will find there is no discrimination.

Mr. MASON. I will investigate it, and I feel sure that the chairman of the committee wants fair play.

Mr. SISSON. I think every member of the subcommittee, as well as of the full committee, feels the same way about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Longevity pay: For longevity pay for director of intermediate instruction, supervising principals, supervisor and assistant supervisor of manual training, principals of normal high and manual training high schools, the assistant principal (who shall be dean of girls) of the Central High School, principals of grade manual training schools, heads of departments, director and assistant director of primary instruction, directors and assistant directors of drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, domestic art, kindergartens, and penmanship, teachers, clerks, librarians and clerks, and librarians to be paid in strict conformity with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended by the acts approved May 26, 1908, May 18, 1910, and June 26, 1912, $400,000: Provided, That hereafter the board of education is authorized, on recommendation of the superintendent of schools, to withhold the longevity increase of any teacher because of an unsatisfactory efficiency rating.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso contained in lines 14 to 18, inclusive, on page 39.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, it is subject to a point of order, and I ask permission to make this one statement: The purpose of the Board of Education in asking for this provision was to be able to give the increased pay to meritorious teachers, while those who did not deserve it would not get it. I concede that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. MADDEN. In other words, the board of education wanted to have the power to grant the longevity pay to those teachers whom they wanted to favor and to take it away from those whom they did not want to favor.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent to return to line 15, page 31, for the purpose of making an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to page 31——

Mr. SISSON. For the purpose of making an inquiry only.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. For the purpose of making an inquiry only.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. We have progressed in the reading of the bill faster than I ever dreamed we would, or I would have been more prompt in making the inquiry. I congratulate the gentleman on the success he is attaining in getting his bill through. It is quite unprecedented.

The item about which I wish to inquire is that relating to the bathing beach. I am one of the small boys of Washington who like to swim, and last summer I used the opportunities of the basin as often as opportunity permitted, and thereby had a chance to do some observing. I am informed that it is the intention to employ as the superintendent this year, at a salary of $600, the gentleman who had charge of the shack down there on the basin where we used to bathe last summer. Is that so?

Mr. SISSON. No; this item refers to the concrete pool. I will state for the gentleman's benefit that what he has in mind is the item carried in last year's sundry civil bill providing for a new bathing beach. If the demands on the labor market do not prevent the work being finished, the new bathing beach will be completed before the weather gets very hot. But that is not covered in this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Where is this bathing beach, then, that is provided for on page 31?

Mr. SISSON. This is the little concrete pool down on the Mall, not very far from the Monument. The new bathing beach is an entirely different proposition, carried in last year's sundry civil bill, but not in this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then I have no further interest in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, including clocks, pianos, and window shades for additions to buildings; equipment for kindergartens; and tools and furnishings for manual-training, cooking, and sewing schools, as follows: Three kindergartens, $2,400; two sewing schools, $520; one housekeeping and cooking school, $800; one cooking school, $580; two manual-training shops, $1,480; portable schools, $30,000; in all, $35,780, to be available immediately.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I yield to the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. YANGCO].

Mr. YANGCO. Mr. Chairman, I should like to read a cablegram which my colleague, Mr. de Veyra, received this morning from Manuel L. Quezon, the president of the senate, and Sergio Osmeña, the speaker of the house of representatives of the Philippine Islands.

MANILA, P. I., May 2, 1918.

VEYRA, Washington:

Memorial services were held the night before last at the session hall of the house of representatives in honor of Mr. JONES, with attendance of the Governor General, members of cabinet, legislature, and supreme court, provisional governors, municipal delegations, Army, and Navy, etc. Speakers were the Governor General, presidents of both houses of the legislature, a representative from the Filipino Chamber of Commerce, a representative from labor unions, and leaders of political parties.

MANUEL L. QUEZON,
President Philippine Senate.
SERGIO OSMEÑA,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was called from the Hall for a few minutes when the item in reference to the medical inspectors was read. Will the gentleman state why the chief medical and sanitary inspector and his associates are placed under the health officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SISSON. For the reason that the health activities of the District should be coordinated under one head. We do not want to have too many independent organizations working under different directors. Take the medical department of the District. The Board of Education knows nothing about the laws of health, but it is well enough that the activities be directed by that activity of the government which has charge of the health of the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be all right; I have no fault to find with the system if it is all right and so understood by the committee. But the medical inspectors are appointed by the Board of Education, and the health officer is appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, I understand.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman understands, too, and I hope it will be changed in the near future, that the Board of Education appoints the teachers, and the Board of Education is not appointed by the District Commissioners. The health officer is appointed and is under control of the District Commissioners. But when the health officer and inspectors of schools act under the direction of the health officer, who is an experienced, skilful physician, a man with some reputation throughout the country——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Dr. Woodward is a skilled physician and an excellent officer.

Mr. SISSON. And has a splendid standing as a health officer throughout the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question is whether or not circumlocution lends unnecessary work in passing up reports.

Mr. SISSON. No such complaint has come to the District Subcommittee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The committee has heard nothing of that kind?

Mr. SISSON. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

For textbooks and school supplies for use of pupils of the first eight grades, who at the time are not supplied with the same, to be distributed by the superintendent of public schools under regulations to be made by the board of education, and for the necessary expenses of purchase, distribution, and preservation of said textbooks and supplies, necessary labor not to exceed $600, including one bookkeeper and custodian of textbooks and supplies at $1,200, and one assistant at $800, $80,000: Provided, That the board of education, in its discretion, is authorized to make exchanges of such books and other educational publications now on hand as may not be desirable for use.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the proviso. While I reserve it I wish to say that it looks as if it would give the Board of Education the power to change the textbooks whenever they please, and in that way create a lot of expense that ought not to exist. Of course, the expense would not be imposed on the individual who uses the books; but, nevertheless, if it means that it is going to add to the expense of the public by changing the textbooks, giving the Board of Education the right to do it, I would insist on the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. This is not a new provision; it has been the language of the bill for the last five or six years.

Mr. MADDEN. That does not make it right.

Mr. SISSON. I think it has worked well. The books are bought by the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. I know that.

Mr. SISSON. If they did not have the right to adopt another textbook and have a right to use the old textbook and sell those and get what they could for them, the textbooks might be lost entirely.

Mr. MADDEN. They are probably lost, in a way—sold for old paper.

Mr. SISSON. I think it is not any extra expense at all.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact that the editions of books are sometimes changed and you are permitting them to turn in the old editions to get a new and later edition? If this was not in the bill they could not do that.

Mr. MADDEN. If that is true it furnishes some reason for it.

Mr. SISSON. If there is an improved edition of a history or a geography, the textbook companies would give a certain price for these old books.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Connecticut says that they turn the old book in and get a new one.

Mr. TILSON. They get an allowance toward the new one.

Mr. MADDEN. If you do that that is a very good trade, but if you are going to sell the old books for junk and buy new ones at a price fixed by the booksellers, that is another proposition. If this enables the Board of Education to do that whenever it pleases, impose new conditions on the scholars and additional expense upon the people who pay the bills, that is another proposition to which I would be opposed. But if you can turn in books no longer needed for books that must be obtained and are needed, of course, I would favor it. Does anybody here know exactly what they do do under this provision?

Mr. SISSON. It permits them to have new textbooks, as in the example I used a few moments ago—histories. It enables them to get a better price out of them than they would get by selling them to secondhand-book dealers. They are able thereby to save a great deal of money, and there is no expense attached to the exchange of the books, because they have to have some clerical force there to take care of purchasing new books and the distribution of the books, and the same force that does one service does the other.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me ask this question: Does the proviso grant authority to the Board of Education to transfer the contract from a publishing house from which it may have been purchasing books to a new publishing house, to furnish totally different books, and also give the Board of Education the power to transfer what books it has on hand to a new publisher, in order that he may be able to take the contract away from the old publisher?

Mr. SISSON. No. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. MADDEN. What does it have to do with?

Mr. SISSON. This is to deal with the books that have been turned in by the pupils, that are on hand, and if we did not make this disposition of the books we would be compelled to sell them under the law in reference to the sale of property at public auction, and the secondhand-book dealers would buy them up, and we would thereby get much less money for the books.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the proviso give anybody any authority to impose any additional burden of taxation upon the people of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not.

Mr. MADDEN. Does it give them the authority to discontinue the use of a given textbook?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not.

Mr. MADDEN. For the purpose of trading in an old one and adopting a new one?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not; because they have the authority not by virtue of the proviso, but they have without that the right to change the textbooks if they adopt the method provided by law.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely. I am looking for information.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman understands that this proviso has been in the law for five or six years?

Mr. MADDEN. That does not make it law.

Mr. GALLIVAN. He understands that it has been there?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Has he heard of any violation of it?

Mr. MADDEN. I could not tell. I am not in the detective business, and I would like to get information from those who have studied the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of United States flags, $1,350.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Page 47, line 6, strike out the figures "$1,350" and insert "$1,370."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, the reason I do this, adding $20 to the amount, is to provide for a service flag for this House.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, you can not pay for it out of that appropriation.

Mr. GALLIVAN. A service flag is not a United States flag.

Mr. SISSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that. You can not get it there. It is subject to a point of order, since the gentleman has stated the purpose for which he offers the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment does not state that purpose.

Mr. SISSON. It would be subject to a point of order if he had stated the purpose. The gentleman can not get it in that way.

He would simply give an amount not asked for here to buy flags for the schools.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of necessary expenses connected with the organization and conducting of community forums and civic centers in school buildings, including equipment, fixtures, and supplies for lighting and equipping the buildings, payment of janitor service, secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks, and employees of the day schools may also be employees of the community forums and civic centers, $10,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the paragraph to be found in lines 14 to 20, on page 48. I do not know whether that is new law or not.

Mr. SISSON. That is in the current law?

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering why we pay people for the privilege of using the schools for public meetings.

Mr. SISSON. We do not do that.

Mr. MADDEN. We pay the expenses, do we not?

Mr. SISSON. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Most of the cities in the United States where they permit the use of public schools for public purposes outside of strictly educational purposes charge a rent for the use of the buildings, and here we give those who use the buildings something in addition to their use.

Mr. SISSON. This is in accordance with the law which was passed by the Congress authorizing the use of the school buildings through certain forums which were organized in the community, and this money is being expended now, especially, for the purpose of taking care of the young ladies and those people who have come here to the District of Columbia to do war work, in order that they may become a part of the social life of the city.

Mr. MADDEN. That is a good work, and I have no objection to it, and I do not make the point of order. I simply wanted to get the information.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee whether this is in accordance with the movement of some months ago?

Mr. SISSON. It has been in operation about 2 years—18 months, I think.

Mr. FESS. We had a good deal of agitation about meetings on Sunday.

Mr. SISSON. I know what the gentleman has in mind, yes. The Secretary of War asked that an additional item be placed in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill in order to do the work that they did not have the money to do under the old appropriation, and that item was carried, as the gentleman will recall, in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill and amounted to $10,000.

Mr. FESS. There has been some opposition upon the basis that you did not provide for the janitor service.

Mr. SISSON. That is provided for now. We appropriated last year $5,000 and $10,000 was carried in the urgent deficiency bill which is now available, and with that $10,000 plus this $10,000 for public buildings to go through next year. They are doing very valuable work. It is work which is very essential. There are many strange young ladies coming to the city, and they can become part of the community by going to these meetings which are presided over by the good women of the community, those who patronize the schools, and this is for the purpose of keeping up that organization, keeping up with their addresses and to see that they are in proper rooms and proper surroundings, and I think no money could be spent more wisely than this small amount that is for this great purpose.

Mr. FESS. I am in sympathy with what the chairman says about the matter, but I was not sure as to the source of it.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is right about it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings and grounds: For the construction and erection of portable schools, including necessary grading, improvements, and toilet facilities, $231,000, to be available immediately.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether this $231,000 is intended to cover all expenditures for new public-school facilities in the District of Columbia for the coming year?

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that if he had heard the statement I made in presenting the bill originally he would recall that I said that we had this whole matter up for a number of days, and I know the gentleman will appreciate this because it refers to a line of business with which he is thoroughly familiar. We authorized $75,000 three years ago for an addition for one school of eight rooms. The time came for the contract to be let according to the law. Advertisements were made and the smallest bid, as I recall, was $85,000. They came back to us then and asked for a deficiency, and we gave them the amount of money they asked for. Then the advertisement was had according to law the succeeding year, which was some time this year, and for that work the lowest bid they got was $141,000, so that was, of course, beyond the reach of any fund which they had.

Mr. MADDEN. For the same work?

Mr. SISSON. For the same work—the same eight-room building.

Mr. MADDEN. Why did not they let the contract at the $85,000?

Mr. SISSON. They could not, as I tell the gentleman, because they advertised for bids. When they could have gotten it the year before for $85,000 they had only $75,000. Then they came to us and we gave them $85,000. They again advertised for bids, and the lowest bid was, as I say, $141,000. After discussing the matter with the District Commissioners and the board of education, we had items aggregating $1,600,000 for school buildings. Now, if we had authorized that amount of money—I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the engineer commissioner stated that he did not know that any of these buildings could be completed at all—the result would be this influx of population, some ten or twelve thousand, which would come in the District of Columbia, with the congested conditions even prior to the influx, would amount at least to ten or twelve thousand, would have no school facilities. After discussing the matter with the Board of Education and District Commissioners, your subcommittee went over the matter very carefully, and the only thing left for us to do was to provide these portable buildings to take care of the immediate situation.

Mr. MADDEN. These are the summer schools, are they?

Mr. SISSON. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Can they be made in such form as to——

Mr. SISSON. We have many of them.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). As to permit children to attend them in winter?

Mr. SISSON. We have many of them now, and they are provided with the same furniture, the same equipment, that any other rooms would have. These portable buildings were examined by your subcommittee. They went out and examined them. They are very nice little schools; comfortable and warm, and well lighted, and they are serviceable for unlimited use. They can be taken down at a very small expense. One whole side of the building, some 40 feet long, can be carried over then to some other place and used, so this money is not money that is thrown away at all, but it was the only means which your subcommittee could find to take care of the situation at the beginning of the next school term.

Mr. MADDEN. Now the question arises, Have we provided enough money to take care of the influx and also for the children over and above that where we only have buildings sufficient to accommodate them for half a day?

Mr. SISSON. We think so. We gave them all the money they asked for that purpose, and we think we have given them ample funds for use in the construction of these buildings; and if they should find they do not need——

Mr. MADDEN. I think they will need a good many more.

Mr. SISSON. I doubt that, because this is two hundred and odd thousand dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. How many buildings would be embraced in that $231,000?

Mr. SISSON. About 60.

Mr. DAVIS. There are 152 buildings in use now.

Mr. SISSON. A hundred and fifty-two buildings in the city.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what we have now.

Mr. DAVIS. I will state specifically. There are 10 or 15 of the permanent buildings that needed additions thereto which would approximately cost $1,600,000. The chairman of the committee has stated that the engineer commissioner and the other commissioners stated it would be impossible to accomplish any of that during this year and possibly not the succeeding year owing to scarcity of labor and material at this time. Also that even if obtainable the cost of such additions would be abnormally high.

There is a congestion now, and it is increasing all the time, so we have made provision, after very mature deliberation and examination, that 60 of these portable buildings should take care of the congestion now existing, and that may exist for some time in the future at the same ratio that it is now increasing. So take, for instance, the John Eaton School, which needed several additional rooms. We have placed near to that three of these portable buildings. The John Tenley School needed several more rooms, so that will be taken care of by four portable buildings. The Force School, the Takoma School, and many others needed additional rooms, and they are all amply provided for by the 60 portable buildings in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. On an average cost of about $4,000 each?

Mr. DAVIS. Hardly as much as that, but nearly so.

Mr. MADDEN. How many children can attend each one of these schools?

Mr. DAVIS. I believe between 40 and 50 in each room.

Mr. MADDEN. In how many rooms?

Mr. DAVIS. In one schoolroom.

Mr. MADDEN. You have more than one teacher?

Mr. DAVIS. Two teachers, I think.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it intended that those who attend will go a full day or half a day?

Mr. DAVIS. Just the same as they go to the other schools. This is to take care of the congested condition that now exists in the District. This is the only possible way to accomplish the result.

Mr. MADDEN. Sixty schools, with fifty children in each school, would make 3,000 scholars, would it not?

Mr. DAVIS. It will take care of them. The gentleman said a few moments ago it would not take care of them. We have made provision here for quite a number of these in anticipation of those that might come in the near future. Sixty are more than necessary at the present time.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] said a moment ago that 12,000 additional children had come into the District, and that this $231,000 that is being appropriated for portable schools will take care of 3,000 children. What are you going to do with the other 9,000?

Mr. SISSON. They did have a good many of these portable buildings constructed. Now, at some portions of the city, where they were preparing to construct buildings, they built portable schools, and some of them are in storage—how many I do not now recall. But all of them can be used. The superintendent of schools and the commissioners said that this will take care of them.

Mr. DAVIS. A few extra buildings are added on for any emergency that might arise.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, according to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi, it would take 200 of these schools to accommodate 10,000 children, and that is assuming that you are going to get 50 children in each one of these schools; and if you have 12,000 pupils, and you have only 60 schools, you can imagine how many children will be walking the streets without an opportunity for an education. Why do we not spend a few dollars to educate the children and keep them off the streets, keep them from getting killed by the automobiles, put them where they ought to be, under the care of somebody who can teach them what they ought to know?

We spend money for all the trash we can think about—hog cholera, and beetle bugs, and boll weevil, and all kinds of humming bees, and everything like that, and you forget the children, who are going to make the manhood of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois, if I can get his attention, that the figures that may have been given here offhand by the chairman of the committee and myself may not be exactly accurate. But when the number of these portable schools was finally determined on there were present in the committee room not only the chairman of the Board of Education, Mr. Hamilton, but the superintendent of public instruction and the engineer commissioner, and they then and there figured out all it was possible to use under existing conditions and for some time to come, and the 12,000 children that the gentleman stated over here as being new pupils that come in here he may be mistaken about and I may be mistaken about, but the number of portable schools has been definitely settled by the school authorities of the District of Columbia as ample and sufficient and the only way to take care of the children at this time.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Minnesota is perfectly satisfied that the statements made by the Board of Education or those who represent the board were such as to convince him that there will be no doubt whatever that the children will have a chance to go to school?

Mr. DAVIS. I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. MADDEN. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preliminary to permanent appointment as patrolman, there shall be a period of probation for such time as may be fixed by the commissioners, and no person shall receive a permanent appointment who has not served the required probationary period, but the service during probation shall be deemed to be service in the uniformed force if succeeded by a permanent appointment, and as such shall be included and counted in determining eligibility for advancement, promotion, retirement, and pension in accordance with existing law. If the conduct or capacity of the probationer be unsatisfactory to the commissioners, the probationer shall be notified in writing that at the end of such probationary period he shall for that reason not be retained in the service. The retention of the probationer in the service otherwise shall be equivalent to a permanent appointment therein.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the section. May I ask the chairman of the subcommittee what is the method of getting new appointees attached to the service under existing law?

Mr. SISSON. That, of course, is left largely with the commissioners. These appointees are called upon to pass a very rigid examination.

Mr. WALSH. Under the existing law?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; and under the regulations also of the police department. They must be as nearly physically perfect as possible for men to be. Of course, they have to go out in all sorts and kinds of weather, and then they ought, in the nature of things, to be strong men. Now, before one can become a member of the police force, subject, of course, to all the protection of the municipal rules, this probationary period is for the purpose of enabling the commissioners to determine a man's temperament along with his physical capacity, to determine whether or not he is a proper man to go permanently on the police force. The commissioners urged this provision very strongly and impressed all the members of the subcommittee with the fact. In other words, you could hardly get a man off of the police force that you had put in the department. It is almost impossible to get him out.

Mr. WALSH. They can prefer charges against him.

Mr. SISSON. That is true; but it would have to be by trial, and this is so much better and is in accord with the methods used in all the up-to-date cities, and if he is a good man he would have no trouble in retaining his place.

Mr. WALSH. I know; but according to the proposal he might be kept on a period of probation for quite a lengthy period of time. I think under the civil-service regulations the period is fixed.

Mr. SISSON. I think it is six months.

Mr. WALSH. It says here it shall be a period of probation for such time as may be fixed by the commissioners. Now, it seems to me that a man ought to know——

Mr. SISSON. In some cases, of course, they might be satisfied in a few months. In other cases they might be willing to give a man a little further trial. It is largely a question of administration until he becomes a part of the police force. This is the same provision that they now have in the fire department.

Mr. WALSH. For the District?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; for the District; and the same men administer the one law as the other.

Mr. WALSH. And the period of probation is fixed by the commissioners? That is, the District Commissioners?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. It is in the nature of an ordinance.

Mr. WALSH. That is to say, there are no police commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. There are three commissioners, but no police commissioner. The three commissioners acting together would make this regulation. After a policeman has served his probationary period he would then go automatically on the force.

Mr. WALSH. And this provision is designed to improve the personnel?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including purchase of new wagons, rewards for fugitives, modern revolvers, maintenance of card system, stationery, city directories, books of reference, periodicals, telegraphing, telephoning, photographs, printing, binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, furniture and repairs thereto, beds and bed clothing, insignia of office, purchase of horses, bicycles, motorcycles, police equipments and repairs to same, harness, forage, repairs to vehicles, van, patrol wagons, motor patrol, and saddles, mounted equipments, and expenses incurred in prevention and detection of crime, and other necessary expenses, $35,000; of which amount a sum not exceeding $500 may be expended by the major and superintendent of police for prevention and detection of crime, under his certificate, approved by the commissioners, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended: Provided, That the War Department may, in its discretion, furnish the commissioners, for use of the police, upon requisition, such worn mounted equipment as may be required.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HICKS. I do so merely to ask the chairman a question. What is meant by "worn-out equipment"? What is this equipment that is being requisitioned?

Mr. SISSON. It is worn mounted equipment.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House of Detention: To enable the commissioners to provide transportation, including purchase and maintenance of necessary horses, wagons, and harness, and a suitable place for the reception, transportation, and detention of children under 17 years of age, and, in the discretion of the commissioners, of girls and women over 17 years of age, arrested by the police on charge of offense against any law in force in the District of Columbia, or held as witnesses, or held pending final investigation or examination, or otherwise, including 2 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 drivers, at $780 each; 6 guards, at $600 each; 3 matrons, at $600 each, to possess police powers of arrest; motor station wagon, $1,000; miscellaneous expenses, including rent, fuel, gas, ice, laundry, meals, maintenance of motor station vehicle and other necessary expenses, $6,000; in all $15,960, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 55, line 12, strike out the sum "$600" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$720," and in line 16 strike out the sum "$15,960" and insert the sum "$16,320."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Chief engineer, $3,500; 2 deputy chief engineers, at $2,500 each; 8 battalion chief engineers, at $2,000 each; fire marshal, $2,000; deputy fire marshal, $1,400; 2 inspectors, at $1,080 each; chief clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,400; 38 captains, at $1,500 each; 40 lieutenants, at $1,320 each; 41 sergeants, at $1,200 each; superintendent of machinery, $2,000; assistant superintendent of machinery, $1,200; 27 engineers, at $1,200 each; 27 assistant engineers, at $1,140 each; 2 pilots, at $1,150 each; 2 marine engineers, at $1,200 each; 2 assistant marine engineers, at $1,140 each; 2 marine firemen, at $720 each; 342 privates of class 2, at $1,140 each; 103 privates of class 1, at $960 each; hostler, $600; laborer, $600; in all, $757,220.

Mr. GALLIVAN. This item carries a large increase in the sum provided for salaries in the organization of the fire department in this city as compared with the item last year. Our committee has provided for a two-platoon system, which has been long wished for by the members of Washington's fire-fighting force.

The two-platoon system is one of the complex social questions confronting the American municipality to-day, because it embraces the cardinal principles upon which our great Government is founded—equality, justice, and humanity.

Child labor, day of rest, compensation, and widows' pension laws have recently been enacted for the express purpose of correcting a most apparent abuse of our social system. Everything seems to have been fairly well regulated with the exception of the hours of duty of city firemen.

The two-platoon system would permit a fireman in Washington to have one-half of his time off duty, as against one-fifth of his time, as now allowed. Under the two-platoon system one shift would be at rest at all times, and in case of a conflagration the off shift would be called on duty; by this means at least from five to seven companies could be placed in service by using the reserve apparatus of the department. These companies could be placed to cover the territory vacated by the companies operating at the fire, the remainder of the shift would report to the officer in charge at the fire, who would double up on the engines, thereby doubling his fire-fighting force without additional fire apparatus. This would be accomplished by leading out additional lines of hose from the engines already working at the fire, which would be two lines from each engine, and in case of an emergency three lines could be laid from some of the larger engines. In other words, it would place a double fire-fighting force at the seat of the conflagration, and at the same time provide fire protection in the uncovered territory.

The two-platoon system is nothing more than a scientific adjustment of the fire force serving two purposes: First, using the fire-fighting apparatus to the utmost capacity, thereby decreasing the expense of purchasing and operating additional apparatus. Second, to permit the members of the department more time off duty, which will make for efficient service by reason of a contented personnel, all of which certainly is justifiable owing to the vast amount of Government records, property, and increase population, which calls for a prompt and efficient fire force. The two-platoon system places a reserve fire force at the command of the chief engineer, which in the event of a large and long-drawn-out fire the off shift or platoon would come on duty and relieve the shift already working at the fire; these men would, after a period of 10 hours, be somewhat tired out and weak; the shift coming on duty would be fresh and vigorous and would take hold of the task with a vim.

A considerable number of the personnel have severed their connection with the department for positions of shorter hours and better wages. Should the two-platoon system be not established a considerable number of vacancies will occur by reason of members leaving the department to accept better positions both in hours and money, which, of course, will reduce the efficiency of the department by the loss of trained and efficient men.

The two-platoon system is not an experiment—no more than is the building of a skyscraper or a bridge over a river. It is a scientific adjustment of the working hours of firemen and guarantees efficiency. It provides an opportunity to keep on duty a better average crew than is now possible with the defects of an imperfect system of fire-department operation.

The two platoon removes the inhumanity of irregular meals, deferred leaves, needless details, and broken sleep. Doctors attest that after 10 or more years in the fire department many men are unfit for duty, and Chief Kenlon, before the Mayors' Pension Commission, March 4, 1914, said: "We have had examinations made by our medical staff, and, while the figures were never given out, I believe that the results were startling. If we were to examine all the men for defects, it would deplete the department. After 20 years their condition is pretty low. Perhaps one or two men in the fire department know their defects, but a great many do not know that themselves." And Chief Kenlon's statement at the hearing before the board of aldermen, November 10, 1916, wherein he made an attempt to explain his former testimony that what he intended to say was "that after 10 or 15 years of service under the present system the condition of the men is very low."

The hard, grueling condition of a fireman's calling, especially during the long, cold winter months, renders him susceptible to many minor ills, and if proper steps are not taken immediately to prevent them—by virtue of the unreasonable hours of duty—serious consequences may develop. He is laid up with pneumonia. Under the two-platoon system, a fireman receiving the inevitable wetting has a change of tours within a few hours, at which time he can administer a remedy, go to bed in his own home, and by next roll call he has arrested the threatened affliction. Are men so cheap that no provision is made for their personal comfort? Must a fireman's caliber be determined by the extent of the cruelties he is able to withstand without flinching or falling in his tracks?

A list of cities in which the two-platoon system is now in operation and those in which it has been authorized but has not yet been placed in effect includes Berkeley, Cal.; Lincoln, Nebr.; Pueblo, Colo.; Bayonne, N. J.; Topeka, Kans.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Braddock, Pa.; Billings, Mont.; Helena, Mont.; Superior, Wis.; Missoula, Mont.; Colorado Springs, Colo.; Atlantic City, N. J.; Kansas City, Kans.; Paterson, N. J.; Hibbing, Minn.; Hamilton, Ohio; Anaconda, Mont.; Scranton, Pa.; Great Falls, Mont.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Omaha, Nebr.; Chicago, Ill.; Newark, N. J.; Duluth, Minn.; Yonkers, N. Y.; Kansas City, Mo.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Butte, Mont.; Seattle, Wash.

And in the following cities the system is authorized but not in force: San Francisco, Cal.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Camden, N. J.; Orange, N. J.; Cleveland, Ohio; Elizabeth, N. J.; St. Paul, Minn.; Hoboken, N. J.

We do not always stop to think that while war has its heroes, so, too, has peace. The fireman is the hero of peace—always ready, always faithful. His is the life of danger and hazard; his business is to save life and property, not to destroy them. He knows that death and destruction may be his reward at any time; and he faces both with a modest manliness and indifference to consequences that mark him as the most heroic figure in our peaceful public service. Yet the fireman has no piping days of peace; he sleeps constantly upon his arms; for in the hurly-burly of the day and out of the stillness and darkness of the night his call to arms comes suddenly, to be answered promptly regardless of cost.

Seldom a year passes that does not add to the grim tally of death, amidst stifles of suffocating fumes and the fury of fire and flames. Let us remember that it is the business of the fireman to save life and property, even if it costs him his own life; and in doing this duty the sting of death is multiplied by its horrors since the manner of death is devoid of all spectacular accompaniments.

The fireman is one of the most heroic figures in our modern civilization. He is truly the exemplar of those simple virtues, courage, devotion to duty, and self-sacrifice, which humanity has agreed are the sum total of true heroism. The example of that famous regiment which called the name of its most heroic dead at every roll call in order that the splendid response, "dead on the field of honor," might be given to honor the dead and inspire the living, could and should be repeated in every firehouse in the Republic which has contributed one victim to the muster roll of the heroic dead. All honor to our heroes of peace!

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, on page 56, line 9, I wish to amend by striking out after the word "machinery" the figures "$1,200" and inserting "$1,500."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous: For repairs and improvements to engine house and grounds, $15,090.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have long been interested in the question of two platoons, and I have some data here as to the application of this sum, particularly regarding the operations of the system in Chicago, Ill., which I wish to submit:

The following is a comparative statement of how the double-platoon system has effected the health, discipline, and efficiency of the fire department from April to December 31, 1917, as compared with the corresponding months of 1916 under the old system, as shown by the civil service and fire-department records:

Average time lost to the city per member on account of sickness for the last nine months of 1916 under the old system 2.68 days.

Under the double-platoon system for corresponding nine months of 1917, 1.27 days.

A reduction of time lost to the city of 52.6 per cent.

The trial board cases were reduced from 72 to 44, or 38.8 per cent.

The fire losses were reduced $818,496, or 22.7 per cent, during the nine months of 1917, while the double-platoon system was in operation, as compared with 1916, and this notwithstanding the added war hazard during all of that time, which has caused a general increase in fire losses throughout the country.

[Double-platoon system went into effect Apr. 1, 1917.]

	1916	1917
April	$241,035	$236,357
May	388,930	266,593
June	194,994	138,504
July	595,608	802,945
August	539,155	276,776
September	201,388	130,159
October	408,712	152,587
November	371,270	154,629
December	963,226	627,367
Total	3,604,383	2,785,887

A reduction of $818,496, or 22.7 per cent.

[SEAL.] GEO. B. HARGAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to apparatus and motor vehicles and other motor-driven apparatus, and for new apparatus, new motor vehicles, new appliances, employment of mechanics, helpers, and laborers in the fire department repair shop, and for the purchase of necessary supplies, materials, equipment, and tools: Provided, That the commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to build or construct, in whole or in part, fire-fighting apparatus in the fire department repair shop, $17,500.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ROBBINS. I see here that you have in this item the purchase of new vehicles, and on turning back to page 55, in lines 3 and 4, I see you have this item, "For the purchase and maintenance of necessary horses and wagons." Then if you turn over to line 21, on page 54, you find you have there an appropriation of $3,000 for additional motor vehicles, which is a repetition of the same items.

Is the city of Washington going into the automobile business, that we must buy all these new wagons and automobiles? What does it mean? How many are we to buy? What limitation is there on this expenditure? What necessity is there for it?

Mr. SISSON. I want to say to the gentleman that they are preparing and constructing this fire-fighting apparatus and as the city increases in size it becomes necessary to buy additional equipment. We have to equip another fire-engine house. The language of the law, I will say to the gentleman, in all these various items, does not mean that they are going to buy all of them. They will buy only what they need. Another thing is absolutely essential, and that is that the city is getting to be very much larger than heretofore, with much more territory to be covered, and the officers who attend the fire apparatus have to be more numerous than heretofore.

Mr. CANNON. Did I understand the gentleman to use the word "apparati"?

Mr. SISSON. I believe that is the plural of "apparatus." I am not under cross-examination. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the paragraph beginning with line 19, page 64.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, in line 19, page 64, the word "maintenance" is incorrectly spelled. I ask unanimous consent for the correction of the typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Police court: Two judges, at $3,600 each; clerk, $2,200; deputy clerks—one $1,600, one $1,500, two at $1,200 each, one (who shall be a stenographer and typewriter) $900; deputy financial clerk, $1,500; probation officer, $1,500; assistant probation officer, $1,200; 7 bailiffs, at $900 each; deputy marshal, $1,000; janitor, $600; engineer, $900; assistant engineer, $720; fireman, $600; 2 assistant janitors, at $300 each; matron, $600; 3 cleaners, at $360 each; telephone operator, $480; in all, $32,880.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 63, line 24, strike out the sum "$900" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$1,200," and on page 64, strike out, in line 5, the sum "$32,880" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$33,180."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, payable one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $975,408.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question. I heard his opening statement, but I do not understand the manipulation of the city sinking fund. Having owned some property in this city at one time, I understand that the city pays half the expenses of the District government and that the United States pays the other half. Now, as I understand it, the debt that this sinking fund is created to pay as it matures is a debt of the city of Washington. I should like to ask the gentleman why it is that it requires such a large sum of money as this to provide for this sinking fund, when, I understand, that there is in the Treasury quite an accumulated sum of money collected from the taxes of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. On the 30th of last June there was remaining of the old debt about $4,000,000. This will be paid off by 1924. To go into a long explanation of that would involve a good deal of history.

Mr. ROBBINS. I do not want to annoy the gentleman to go into a long statement, but I should like to have a brief statement as to why the sum required is so large—$975,408 per year? Is that the amount fixed by law?

Mr. SISSON. It takes exactly that amount to pay the interest and retire the bonds by the maturity of the bonds. The bonds are simply taken up at maturity; or from time to time, when they can get the bondholders to surrender the bonds, they sometimes purchase them.

Mr. ROBBINS. What rate of interest do these bonds bear?

Mr. SISSON. They bear a rate of 3.65.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Training School for Girls: Superintendent, $1,200; matron and 4 teachers, at $600 each; overseer, $720; 2 parole officers, at $600 each; 7 teachers of industries, at $480 each; engineer, $720; assistant engineer, $600; night watchman, $480; 2 laborers, at $300 each; in all, $11,880.

Mr. WALSH. I move to amend by inserting in line 10, page 72, before the word "matron," the word "treasurer."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 72, line 10, after the figures "$1,200" and before the word "matron," insert the word "treasurer."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this simply restores existing law.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, this item has been carried in the bill for a number of years, but that is the only one of these institutions that has a treasurer. This $600 can not be used for any purpose in the world except to carry that one place. All the money is paid out of the treasury of the District, and all the other institutions have their funds handled through the facilities which exist in the District Building, the auditor and disbursing officer of the municipal government. It is a useless office, and your subcommittee did not feel that it ought to be continued, and, although the item is not a very large one, they felt that in good administration it ought to come out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it may be as the chairman of the subcommittee states, that this is the only institution which is provided with a treasurer, but the office is authorized by the law creating the institution, and it has had a treasurer, a very competent person who acts not only as treasurer but also as secretary, and in a way as an assistant to the superintendent. The trustees have not asked for any change, and later in this bill an amendment has been inserted by the committee, in the nature of a limitation, as they say in their report. As a matter of fact, it is a change of existing law, and this is an attempt to change the existing law and an attempt to dispense with an official who has acted for a great many years, and who has done much to keep up the efficiency of this institution, and has added much to its administrative force. I do not think the reasons given by the chairman of the committee are sufficient to warrant this office being abolished. The mere fact that it is the only institution that has a treasurer certainly is not sufficient, and the fact that the trustees are not in favor of dispensing with this official, and the additional fact that under the law authorizing the establishment of the reform school for boys and the reform school for girls this office is specifically authorized, it seems to me, should warrant the treasurer being retained. I trust that the amendment which I have offered, which makes the paragraph conform with the existing law, will be adopted.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it is possible that I am not so well posted about this that I ought to say anything, but some years ago I was chairman of this same subcommittee and was very familiar with this institution. I remember well going over there several times and investigating it. I know the person who is president of the board. He is an unusually public-spirited, efficient, and exemplary officer, and he is strongly of the opinion that the amendment offered by my colleague ought to be adopted. It seems to me that the institution is not receiving quite fair treatment, for the reason that when its president was before the committee no suggestion was made at all that the treasurer was to be dispensed with, so the board had no opportunity to show the reasons for the existence of this office. I think they ought at least to have had an opportunity to be heard, and when they were present no intimation of such a change was suggested. So it seems to me, in fair play to them, this amendment ought to be adopted. I think I am as desirous as is my colleague on the committee to reduce expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the total be changed to $12,480.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Training School for Girls, $31,880: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1918, appropriations for the National Training School for Girls shall be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia in the manner now provided by law for expenditures from appropriations for general expenses of the government of said District.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SISSON. I concede the point of order. I ask unanimous consent that the total on the top of page 73 be changed in accordance with the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, and for the payment of commutation of subsistence for enlisted men who may be detailed to guard or move the United States property at home stations on days immediately preceding and immediately following the annual encampments, damages to private property incident to encampments, instruction, practice marches and practice cruises, drills and parades, fuel, light, heat, care, and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses, practice ships, boats, machinery and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, horses and mules for mounted organizations, street car tickets (not to exceed $200) necessarily used in the transaction of official business, and for general incidental expenses of the services, $7,500.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman in regard to the expenses of the Militia of the District of Columbia. Upon what basis does the committee figure?

Mr. SISSON. I know what the gentleman has in mind——

Mr. TILSON. I have in mind that the National Guard has gone into the Federal service and is not on the same basis that it was before.

Mr. SISSON. The adjutant general for the District says that under the present law this is all the money that he can spend. He has about sixty-odd thousand dollars now; there is some legislation pending to which I think there will be no objection, and as soon as that legislation is passed then it will be necessary that he should have an additional fund. I think he has $69,000 of that fund now on hand that he can not spend this year. Unless he gets the additional legislation the adjutant general can not undertake the expenditure of additional money. A bill is pending both in the House and in the Senate.

Mr. TILSON. I have in mind the fact that there is legislation proposed. A bill will probably be before the committee of which I am a member in relation to the creation of a new National Guard in the District of Columbia. It has seemed to some of us that it was perfectly proper that we, as representatives of the legislature of the District of Columbia, corresponding to what is the legislature of the States, should do for the District something along the same line that the States are doing for themselves in the absence of the National Guard. Nevertheless, it occurs to me that this would not be the proper time to attempt to reconstruct the National Guard system, or even to attempt a beginning at it, when there is uncertainty as to what condition the National Guard will be in after the war is over. While the amount here proposed is considerably less than last year, I wondered in what way this amount was going to be expended.

Mr. SISSON. The adjutant general has a good deal of property here that has to be cared for. We gave him all the money he could use under the present law. They have, as I say, a good deal of property to look after, and we thought it well enough not to take away from the District Militia the property which they have. I do not know what would be done with it. The property is rented and the lease might be terminated if we had not given them the money.

Mr. TILSON. That was going to be my next inquiry in regard to leases and the money to pay the rent. I was surprised that so small an amount as is here proposed would suffice. Only last year we authorized the making of leases running five years of property for the District Militia.

Mr. SISSON. They did not make the contract for that length of time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of approximately 84 civilian guards during the fiscal year 1919, the employment of whom was made necessary by the removal of the military guards stationed on the Washington Aqueduct and its accessory structures, and for the purchase of necessary equipment, $64,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. What does it mean by "approximately 84 civilian guards"? Do they not know how many may be taken away and how many they want to replace?

Mr. SISSON. The number fluctuates. The maximum is 84. This is one of the war-emergency matters. Perhaps the gentleman is aware that the whole city of Washington is dependent on water that comes through the water main from here to Great Falls. One bomb would put the entire city out of business.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that, but I wondered why there was any discretion as to the number of guards that should be employed. Here you say "approximately," and it seems to me it would be safe to keep all that are needed.

Mr. SISSON. When we have great crowds of people in the city, the War Department thought it was necessary and wise that we should have more guards, and to give them some little leeway so that they might be able to secure more guards we make the maximum number 84, and not compel them to keep all the number on the permanent roll.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the services of draftsmen, assistant engineers, levelers, transitmen, rodmen, chainmen, computers, copyists, overseers, and inspectors temporarily required in connection with sewer, street, street cleaning, or road work, or construction and repair of buildings and bridges, or any general or special engineering or construction work authorized by appropriations may be employed exclusively to carry into effect said appropriations when specifically and in writing ordered by the commissioners, and all such necessary expenditures for the proper execution of said work shall be paid from and equitably charged against the sums appropriated for said work; and the commissioners in their annual estimates shall report the number of such employees performing such services, and their work, and the sums paid to each, and out of what appropriation: Provided, That the expenditures hereunder shall not exceed $80,000 during the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire whether the waterworks fund is sufficient to operate the waterworks system, or whether the city is compelled to pay out of other funds any moneys to make up a deficit?

Mr. SISSON. I am of the opinion that the water rates at the present time will not perhaps pay the expenses of the water system. There has been a considerable increase in the cost of coal and in the price of labor. I think they will have to increase the rate to a small extent in order to take care of that.

Mr. ROBBINS. What is the meter rate per thousand gallons? I see you have a large force of meter raters here.

Mr. SISSON. The average cost per meter for maintenance is 25 cents. The rate charge for water under the meter system is 4 cents per 100 cubic feet for all used in excess of 7,500 cubic feet. The minimum charge to each premises, allowing the use of 7,500 cubic feet, is $4.50 per annum, which is the cheapest water rate in the world.

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes; that is a very cheap rate.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the services of assistant engineers, draftsmen, levelers, rodmen, chainmen, computers, copyists, and inspectors temporarily required in connection with water-department work authorized by appropriations may be employed exclusively to carry into effect said appropriations, and be paid therefrom, when specifically and in writing ordered by the commissioners, and the commissioners in their annual estimates shall report the number of such employees performing such services and their work and the sums paid to each: Provided, That the expenditures hereunder shall not exceed $13,200 during the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. If he will turn back to page 88, section 2, the gentleman will see that he has there the services of draftsmen, assistant engineers, levelers, transitmen, rodmen, chainmen, computers, and so forth, to be paid out of an appropriation amounting to $80,000, and in this paragraph the same class of men—rodmen, chainmen, computers, and so forth—are to be paid out of an appropriation of $13,200. It is all the same character of work.

Mr. SISSON. One item is for bridges, buildings, sewers, and things of that character, and this other item is for water service, water mains.

Mr. ROBBINS. It does not say so, does it?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; in lines 16 and 17.

Mr. ROBBINS. Oh, very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That all per diem employees and day laborers of the District of Columbia who have been regularly employed for 15 working-days next preceding such days as are legal holidays in the District of Columbia, and whose employment continues through and beyond said legal holidays, shall be granted such leave of absence with pay as is granted the regular annual employees of the District of Columbia for said legal holidays.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi concede the point of order?

Mr. SISSON. No. I think it would do the employees of the District a very great injustice to cut this out entirely.

Mr. WALSH. Why not restore the language as formerly in the act?

Mr. SISSON. If you cut this out, it all goes out.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if this goes out the gentleman is permitted to offer an amendment to restore the original language.

Mr. SISSON. The only purpose of this amendment is to have all of the employees of the District of Columbia treated exactly alike.

Mr. WALSH. That is why I am making a point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Because the gentleman does not want them trented alike?

Mr. WALSH. I do not want employees who have simply come in and worked for 15 days to get the same as others.

Mr. SISSON. They do not do that.

Mr. WALSH. That is what this provides—

All per diem employees and day laborers of the District of Columbia who have been regularly employed for 15 working days next preceding such days as are legal holidays in the District of Columbia and whose employment continues through and beyond said legal holidays shall be granted such leave of absence with pay as is granted the regular annual employees of the District of Columbia for said legal holidays.

Mr. SISSON. The item carried in the last appropriation law, not permanent law, provides that they shall be granted a leave of absence with pay for legal holidays where their employment continues through and beyond said legal holiday, and that simply meant that the employees on the per diem work would get every Saturday afternoon without doing a day's work. That does not apply to the employees on the regular monthly roll, so we simply intended by this to restrict the per diem people just as we do the regular employees. If the point of order be sustained the per diem employee will not get anything, will not be treated as the others at all, because it goes out entirely. This is for the purpose of enabling the per diem employee to be treated as the others are treated.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This is intended to increase the number of holidays with pay which per diem employees enjoy.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no; it cuts off part of the half holidays that they would get by the provision carried in last year's appropriation act. The District Commissioners objected very seriously to paying for that half day that they did not work, and yet the auditor and the comptroller said that under the provisions of that act they were entitled to the half holiday on Saturday.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, according to my interpretation of the new language incorporated in section 5 it is to grant to those per diem employees and day laborers who have been regularly employed for 15 working days before a legal holiday such leave of absence with pay as is granted to regular annual employees of the District. Now, it certainly does not seem fair if we have got a per diem or day laborer who has been working——

Mr. SISSON. I want the gentleman to understand what we are trying to do; the purpose is a good one, but if the gentleman makes the point of order, then, during the entire year all of these per diem employees will work one-half a day and be paid for a whole day, where those on the monthly roll will be compelled to work all day Saturdays except during the summer months. Here is the law in reference to the District of Columbia:

All per diem employees and day laborers of the District of Columbia who have been regularly employed for 15 working days next preceding such days as are legal holidays in the District of Columbia, and whose employment continues through and beyond said legal holidays, shall be granted leave of absence with pay for such legal holidays.

That is the statute; that is the existing law.

Mr. WALSH. Then, why change it?

Mr. SISSON. I am not trying to change it, except to do this: I am trying to put a provision in this bill that when the per diem employees do not work Saturday afternoon that they shall not be paid for it, but that whenever the District employees on the annual roll get their legal holiday with pay, then the per diem people would get their legal holiday with pay, so that they may be treated just alike.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is any law authorizing per diem employees for the District of Columbia to get Saturday afternoons off and pay for it?

Mr. SISSON. I have just read the gentleman the law.

Mr. WALSH. I find that in last year's act, but I do not see anything in there that gives the per diem and day laborer a Saturday holiday.

Mr. SISSON. All the departments of the Government in the summer time get a half holiday.

Mr. WALSH. Under what authority?

Mr. SISSON. By proclamation.

Mr. WALSH. Of the commissioners?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Well, they can dispense with it by proclamation if they want to do so.

Mr. SISSON. They can not do it with the per diem employees unless this amendment goes on. The District Commissioners themselves agree with the gentleman. The District Commissioners were turned down by the auditor and by the comptroller, and that is why they asked to have this provision which is in the language we carry here. It is doing the very thing the gentleman wants done and that is the purpose of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, there is clearly a difference in language here, and despite the very clear explanation of the gentleman in charge of the measure I can not see where, by adopting the language as reported in section 5 of this bill, you are safeguarding the treasury of the District. Instead of giving them leave of absence for the legal holidays you are granting them the same leave of absence you grant the regular annual employees of the District. That is what the language says and that is the plan, and in my opinion it is increasing the number of holidays for the per diem employees and the day laborers.

Mr. SISSON. Suppose, without this amendment that we put in this bill, that a day laborer should work three days, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, and work half of Saturday, and say, "I am not going to work any more."

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows what he would do if he was commissioner for the District.

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely. I would do exactly as the auditor for the District, or I would do exactly as the District Commissioners did. I would not give him the half day. But the comptroller says he is entitled to that half day under the provisions of the act. Now, we provide that before he can make any claim for that half holiday, as a per diem employee, he must have worked the 15 preceding days before he can get it.

Mr. WALSH. That is the present law.

Mr. SISSON. I know it is the present law, but under the provisions of the act, as it is there carried in the bill, the construction was that he would be entitled to a half day. In other words, he would take the half day just as anybody else did, irrespective of whether he had worked 15 days or 3 days or worked 1 day.

Mr. WALSH. Could he get pay if he quit Wednesday noon?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely. What the commissioners asked your subcommittee to do was to prevent that being done and enable the employee to not get the half holiday unless he worked at least 15 days preceding the holiday. That is all.

Mr. WALSH. Before the gentleman takes his seat I wish to say that he has divulged a very peculiar situation here in the District, namely, that if a man can be put on the per diem roll or go to work as a day laborer and quit at 12 o'clock on any working day, under some decree of the auditor he has got to be paid for a whole day. There is no authority of law for any such construction as that under the statute which the gentleman has read.

Mr. SISSON. The attorneys for the District of Columbia and the attorneys for the Government have decided that issue against us, and having decided against us I am endeavoring to meet that decision.

Mr. WALSH. Just one further question before I decide whether or not to withdraw the point of order. If the new language is kept in the bill, do I understand that the annual employees of the District do not get any Saturday half holidays?

Mr. SISSON. Yes, they will; but they get them under the provision of the law which gives the District Commissioners the right to do that which they see proper to do. Now, what the gentleman has in mind is to carry out the present law, and that was all the committee and the District Commissioners had in mind when they put this provision in the last appropriation bill. But the construction of the language in the last appropriation bill was just what the committee and the District Commissioners did not think it would be. Therefore we are endeavoring now to make it comply with the regular statute, so that they must work for 15 days before they are entitled to a legal holiday.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is the present law. You have got to work 15 days and through and beyond the legal holiday before being entitled to pay while absent for said holiday. But if the annual employees are entitled to the half holiday under the language of section 5, you make the per diem and day laborers entitled to it.

Mr. SISSON. They are not.

Mr. WALSH. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the language:

Shall be granted——

Mr. SISSON. In order to construe that statute you have got to construe it with the other statute.

Mr. WALSH. What other statute?

Mr. SISSON. The other statute is that the annual employees are only entitled to the half holidays when the District Commissioners see fit to grant them to them. Now, the legal holidays granted to these other per diem employees are granted by an act of Congress, and, construing the two statutes together, when the per diem employees were working only a few days, when they would begin work on Friday, we will say, the next Saturday, under the regulation for the employees of the District government on the annual roll, they would get the half holiday; and under the construction of the statute in this year's appropriation bill the per diem man would also get the half holiday, although he has only worked a day and a half and quits Monday. We do not want that to be done. We only want to require that they shall work 15 days prior and through the holiday, provided the District Commissioners should see fit and proper to grant the half holiday to the regular employees of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Well, it looks to me as though they were going to have a riot of half holidays in the middle of the week if we are going to be guided by the construction which the attorneys or the corporation counsel have placed upon the existing law, and if they come within a thousand miles of construing this law as peculiarly as they have done, all a man has got to do is to quit on Wednesday and take a half holiday, and when it comes along Saturday he can take another one; and he can claim pay for it simply because he is a per diem employee or a day laborer. And just in order to give this legal talent an opportunity to make a ruling and another construction upon this statute equally peculiar with the one already referred to, and in order to encourage half holidays when the circus comes to town and the like, I am going to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the commissioners are authorized to employ in the execution of work the cost of which is payable from the appropriation account created in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1905, approved April 27, 1904, and known as the "Miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia," all necessary inspectors, overseers, foremen, sewer tappers, skilled laborers, mechanics, laborers, special policemen stationed at street-railway crossings, 1 inspector of gas fitting, 2 janitors for laboratories of the Washington and Georgetown gaslight companies, market master, assistant market master, watchman, horses, carts, and wagons, and to incur all necessary expenses incidental to carrying on such work and necessary for the proper execution thereof, such services and expenses to be paid from said appropriation account.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I do so to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he expects, if we should complete the consideration of the bill this evening, to have more than one or two roll calls upon these amendments that have been adopted?

Mr. SISSON. I hope to have no roll calls at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, there is a clerical error, as I am informed—although I have not made a comparison—in the amendment offered to the bill by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] yesterday, and I ask unanimous consent to have the correction made so as to have it appear in the right place.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the clerical error made yesterday in the Gard amendment be corrected. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendments thereto, back to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SISSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE PASSPORT BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 10264, known as the passport bill, be in order to be considered to-morrow after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. ROGERS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman have any objection to my speaking for 15 minutes prior to the taking up of that bill and after the reading of the Journal, and so on?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would not, if we get the unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if there will be a disposition to have the reading of the bill started at once, or whether it would be advisable to have a period of general debate on it?

Mr. KITCHIN. You can arrange that to-morrow with the Chairman, Mr. FLOOD. I would not like to enter into any arrangement about that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am in favor of the bill, but there are some members of the committee who are opposed to some part of it and they are not here.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think that there will be any trouble about having full debate.

Mr. GILLETT. You will be disposed to have full and fair debate?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. There will be every disposition to have full debate and not cut it off.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I gave notice this morning that after the reading of the Journal to-morrow I wanted to take up the conference report on the naturalization bill. I should not like to have this interfere with that.

The SPEAKER. Why not take up that conference report right now?

Mr. BURNETT. The other conferees are not here. I would be perfectly willing to have it taken up right now, and then adjourn pending the consideration of it.

Mr. GILLETT. The conference report would have its right of way ahead of this bill, would it not?

The SPEAKER. Not if the request is made in a certain form.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will modify my request by saying that it is not to interfere with conference reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow after the reading of the Journal and the cleaning up of business on the Speaker's table H. R. 10264 shall be in order, not to interfere with conference reports. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina the reason for this demand for haste in the consideration of this measure. Does it change existing law with reference to passports?

Mr. KITCHIN. It adds some restrictions. I will say that the President of the United States phoned Mr. POU, of the Rules Committee, this morning that it is very necessary and urgent that this bill be passed immediately.

Mr. WALSH. That sounds familiar.

Mr. ROGERS. If I may supplement the statement of the gentleman, the testimony before the Committee on Foreign Affairs was that this bill is a change of existing law, and not merely a codification.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not say a codification. I said it added restrictions. It adds restrictions and prohibitions to the entry and departure of persons to and from this country.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The departments of the Government, including the Army, Navy, Immigration, and State, united in the most vehement request that this bill be passed without the slightest delay.

Mr. WALSH. I think the bill should have been sent to the proper committee. The espionage law, which was considered by another committee of this House, had several provisions in it relating to passports, and made some changes in the existing law. This measure has apparently come in very suddenly. The urgency of it is stated upon very high authority. Unless there is to be an understanding that there will be plenty of opportunity for discussion, I am inclined to oppose it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will assure the gentleman that there will be opportunity for discussion.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Has the bill been considered by a committee?

Mr. KITCHIN. By the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and unanimously reported. That is, I presume some members of the committee would want to amend it or add to it; but, on the whole, I understand it is a unanimous report.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from Massachusetts called attention to the fact that another committee might have jurisdiction over one part of this bill. That is true, but that committee very generously waived jurisdiction over that portion of it in order that it might all be considered at once.

Mr. WALSH. Not the committee, but probably somebody representing the committee. Well, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conference report is disposed of and prior to the consideration of the bill just mentioned, H. R. 10264, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] asks unanimous consent that after the conference report in charge of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is disposed of, and before we go into the consideration of H. R. 10264, he be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBBINS. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. ROGERS. I want to supplement the remarks that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] made this morning on the subject of the soldiers' vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 3, 1918.

(Legislative day of Thursday, May 2, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Asburst	Hardwick	New	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Henderson	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Hollis	Overman	Smoot
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Sterling
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Sutherland
Culberson	Kellogg	Pittman	Thomas
Cummins	Kenyon	Poindexter	Thompson
Curtis	King	Pomerene	Tillman
Dillingham	Kirby	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	Knox	Reed	Underwood
France	Lenroot	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gallinger	McKellar	Sheppard	Warren
Gerry	McLean	Sherman	Watson
Gronna	McNary	Shields	Weeks
Gulon	Myers	Simmons	Williams
Harding	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BAIRD].

Mr. BECKHAM. I announce that my colleague [Mr. JAMES] is detained by illness.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are detained, taking part in the third liberty loan campaign.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is detained by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent that not later than 4 o'clock this afternoon all debate on the conference report shall be limited to 20 minutes. I want to say that for months and months we have tried to pass some bills to punish spies. It seems one would judge from looking into the Senate and seeing what is going on that there are no spies in this country, no Bolshevik program going on, no German propaganda, that there are no I. W. W.'s in this country. There are none in my State, but I am told that there are in the West. Why not pass this legislation, which is of vast importance, and pass it quickly, and punish somebody? The Attorney General tells me that he is helpless. I ask the Senate to give me unanimous consent to try to adopt the conference report to-day, and get it enacted into law.

Senators discussed yesterday afternoon for two or three hours a question that is not before the Senate. Section 4, as it passed the Senate, is not in disagreement at all; the House conferees agreed to it. Why discuss that matter when the Senate had already acted on it?

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. It will be in order if the conference report is rejected to instruct the conferees to recede on the amendment of which the Senator is speaking?

Mr. OVERMAN. I said that yesterday—that that is the only way to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is the only way to do it, and if the conference report is rejected and some one else does not, I expect to make that motion.

I wish to ask the Senator another question. I did not hear his request. It was that after a certain time speeches be limited to 20 minutes.

Mr. OVERMAN. After 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. NORRIS. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to limiting the debate now. I wanted to say something on the conference report all day yesterday, and tried to get recognition, but was unable to do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked that speeches be limited to 20 minutes. The bill has been discussed here for three months.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have about 30 minutes myself.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will make the request that speeches be limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from North Carolina. Why not make it apply now?

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well, I will ask that all speeches on the conference report be limited to 30 minutes hereafter, and that no Senator shall speak more than once.

Mr. REED. After 4 o'clock.

Mr. McCUMBER. After 2 o'clock. I gave notice that this morning I intended to speak upon a subject that is related to the whole question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not intend to cut off the Senator from North Dakota. I would like to hear his speech. I will say 2 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator submits his request I wish to correct an observation which I heard as I came into the Chamber that the bill has been discussed for three months. It has been discussed off and on in a desultory way, but during that time a great many other important bills have been passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been up here for days and days and for weeks.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not want the impression to go out that it had been discussed for months.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will not agree that the debate shall be limited after 4 o'clock.

Mr. NELSON. Allow me to suggest to the Senator to make it 2 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggested that and the Senator from Illinois objected. Another Senator suggested that it be limited after 4 o'clock. Therefore I will renew my request that all speeches after 4 o'clock be limited to 30 minutes, and that no Senator shall speak more than once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to an agreement that after 4 o'clock speeches shall be limited to 30 minutes and that no Senator shall speak more than once. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to give notice to the Senate that I shall ask the Senate to stay here and adopt the conference report if we have to stay all night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs two bills for the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reports will be received.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4365) to authorize the President to make provision for the care and treatment of persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States who are citizens of any nation at war with a nation with which the United States is at war (Rept. No. 421); and

A bill (S. 4428) to amend section 272 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (Rept. No. 420).

Mr. SMITH of Maryland, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 3172) to provide for the abandonment of Piney Branch Road between Allison Street and Buchanan Street NW., in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 422) thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 11692. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LABOR CONDITIONS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. POINDEXTER and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In view of the importance of the matter embodied in the letter and resolutions which I hold in my hand, I ask unanimous consent to have them read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., April 27, 1918.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: At a specially called meeting of our union April 26, 1918, the inclosed resolution was adopted by our local and a copy of the same ordered sent to you by mail, in which we have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, yours,

SHIPWRIGHTS' UNION, LOCAL 1184.
JNO. STERNS, Secretary.

SEATTLE, WASH., April 25, 1918.

Whereas we have been requested by the Central Labor Council of Seattle and vicinity to vote on the question of striking on May 1 if Thomas Mooney is not set free before that date; and

Whereas this matter has been referred to President Wilson, who will, we feel sure, see that justice is done in the case; and

Whereas our Army in France is looking to us to build ships so that enough men, food, clothing, arms, and ammunition may be sent there so that they may continue their fight for honor and liberty unhampered; and

Whereas by ceasing work for even one day would be unpatriotic, un-American, and uncalled for, jeopardizing the lives of our men over there, and the cause for which we have spent billions in money: Be it

Resolved, That we refuse to concur in the request of the Central Labor Council in the matter of striking on May 1 if Thomas Mooney is not set free.

Resolved, That we again pledge our loyal support to President Wilson in his prosecution of the war, believing that by so doing we are helping not only Thomas Mooney but all lovers of honor and liberty.

SHIPWRIGHTS, JOINERS, BOAT BUILDERS, AND MILLMEN LOCAL 1184.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have asked that this be read by the Secretary in order to give proper credit to this labor union, Local 1184, of the shipwrights, ship joiners, calkers, and boat builders, of Seattle, Wash., because the publicity which it will thus acquire will be a valuable example, I believe, to other labor unions.

I desire to say in this connection that in resisting the dark force in their own ranks that sought to betray them into acts of disloyalty to their country and into the support of a policy of lawless force and violence, blackmail and coercion, which ultimately would have led to their ruin, these labor-union men have displayed intelligence, independence, and courage. By this act they have earned the sincere esteem and gratitude of all good citizens. In refusing to follow the false and criminal members of their organization who have sought to betray them into the service of the German Kaiser this labor union has given an example of true patriotism. They have done more by this act to advance the interests of union labor, by the development of a favorable public opinion, than all the sabotage, militancy, direct action, and bombs ever devised.

INCREASE OF THE ARMY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia, as he rose first.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I received this morning from the secretary of the chamber of commerce of the city of Atlanta a telegram which I wish to read to the Senate. Mr. Cooper is a man of ability and thought. The sentiments he presents in this telegram come from his earnest desire to express the patriotic purposes of the people of Georgia to do all within their power to help bring the war to a triumphant conclusion. All he says is worthy of consideration. I will read his telegram:

ATLANTA, GA., May 3, 1918.

Senator HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations on 5,000,000 bill, but let me urge you to double number at once. Now is the crucial moment to let the world, our allies, and Germany know our determined purpose. Put in a bill authorizing the President to draft 10,000,000 men as fast as they can be trained and transported. Pledge all necessary funds to him and pledge ample backing to Russia in reorganizing her army. Send agents there to overcome German influence and help reorganize army, industry, railroads, and finance. There are 40,000,000 Poles, Roumanians, Slavs, and Czechs groaning under Germany's yoke who will join Russia when she raises her new army. She will raise it if effective aid is given. This can be done by inviting Japan and China to join allies on the basis of Asia for Asiatics, Europe for Europeans, America for Americans, and the world for democracy. The time has come for bold and decisive action, both military and psychological. In this supreme hour of destiny the psychological offensive with force behind it is worth millions of men and it travels with the speed of lightning. Strike now with the blows of a giant Nation and victory will speedily be ours. The heavier the blows, the quicker they come, the sooner it will be over and the more lives will be spared. God help Congress and the President to rise to the heights of this great emergency. The people are aroused and will back the Government to the last dollar and the last man. Victory is worth all of that, and without victory nothing has any value.

W. G. COOPER.

PETITIONS.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Converse County, Wyo., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of the County Medical Society of Concordia, Kans., praying for advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Kansas Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, of Ottawa, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide a national ocean-to-ocean highway over the pioneer trails of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4479) for the protection of the water supply of the town of Sunnyside, Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 4480) granting a pension to Charles H. Woodward (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4481) to cancel the allotment of Davie Skootah on the Lummi Reservation, Wash., and reallot the lands included therein; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CALDER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) providing a commission to consider the question of the adoption of the zone system for the construction of buildings in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 to enable the Secretary of State to pay to any secretary to the counsel of the United States as remuneration for services rendered by him in the preparation and trial of the case of the United States at Geneva, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HARDING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LENROOT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on this conference report. I have not the fear that many Senators have, that the bill on which the conference report is made, if passed, is going to impinge upon the right of free speech by the American people. The only people who will be in danger under this proposed law, in my opinion, will be those whose hearts are wrong. Every true American to-day is talking for America; he is pleading for our great cause; he is presenting it to the public, to everyone with whom he comes in contact; he is showing what it will mean to the world if we win and what it will mean to both the world and us if we should lose. If those kind of Americans—and they are the only true Americans—who give utterance to their patriotic views should see fit to condemn a department of the Government, stating that it is not doing its duty, should criticize any one of the branches of the Government for its malfeasance or its negligence, such persons are not going to be prosecuted under this proposed law.

I had before me yesterday, Mr. President, a newspaper which is published in the State of Minnesota in a foreign language. I could not read one word in that paper, but there were two cartoons in its which impressed me, as I looked at them, with the belief that the editor of that paper was a disloyal man and ought to be out of this country and not in it. There was nothing in those cartoons which would possibly subject him to prosecution, but there was sufficient in them to indicate a sentiment of disloyalty, a lack of sympathy, and a purpose to impose that sentiment upon the readers of the paper. Then I made inquiry of some one who knew the gentleman who edited this paper, and I was told he was one of the most disloyal men in the United States. If you should read that paper, you would probably find that there has been nothing ever said in it in support of the great American cause.

It is such persons who are liable to be caught by this proposed law, because, having in their hearts a hatred against our cause, they will sometimes lose discretion and will give utterance to sentiments which ought to send them to the penitentiary. Such persons ought to be prosecuted upon general principles, and if we shall at some time get something against them which will enable the law to get hold of them and dispose of them as they ought to be disposed of I shall not worry. I know hundreds and hundreds of people in the United States who are saying nothing to-day. Why? Because of the fear of just such a law as this one which is proposed. I hope the law will be so strong that we shall keep the fear of the Lord and of the Government in their hearts until we get out of this war, and then I wish there was some possible way of separating the black sheep from the white and sending the black ones out of this country, for the man who can not appreciate the justice of this world war against military autocracy and whose heart does not respond to that sentiment in loyalty ought never to be allowed to claim this as his country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota permit an observation at this point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. KING. It was disclosed in the investigation by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the activities of the German-American Alliance that a number of the German press at the outset of the war had admonished Germans and those who were readers of the press to be silent, to keep quiet, and many of them who are disloyal have been quiet and silent by reason of the admonitions of disloyal newspapers.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, lest the suggestion of the Senator from Utah might be misunderstood, I think it is but fair for me to say that the paper to which I refer was not a German paper, but was printed in another foreign language.

However, Mr. President, I rose particularly to discuss the results of one year of the United States being in this great war, its lessons, and its suggestions for our action in the ensuing year.

THE FIRST YEAR OF THE WAR.

Mr. President, on the 6th day of April, 1917, the United States declared to the world that it accepted the responsibilities and the duties of a war which had been thrust upon this country, and thereupon Congress pledged all the resources and directed the President to employ all the naval and military forces of the Government to bring the conflict to a successful termination.

That day, Mr. President, must forever live in story, either as the birth of a new national freedom, broad as the expansive breast of earth, or the destruction of that partial liberty acquired through centuries of warfare by a few progressive peoples of the earth—partial in that no liberty is complete so long as it lives in the shadow of an ever-impending danger—so long as it must stagger beneath the load of armaments that its mere existence may be assured.

The great issue which confronted this country on that fateful day was whether henceforth all nations should lay down their arms and devote their energies to the pursuits of peace, interchanging the products of their toil in friendly competition, or whether henceforth they should become armed camps breathing the pestilential air of hate and misery; whether this should be a world of many free nations, living in political tranquillity and assurance, or a world of one powerful master nation, arrogant, brutal, domineering, and other slave nations, crushed, cringing, and despoiled.

To preserve these sacred rights of nations and to defend our own, we entered this conflict and made this war our war. It is most proper, therefore, that remembering our great cause we should look back on this our first year of war efforts, review its accomplishments, and, in the light of its experiences and the shadow of its errors, make the real might of this great Nation felt as a decisive factor in a victorious termination before the end of another year.

Mr. President, since we entered the war more than 3,000 noble ships, builded to carry the commerce of the world, to feed the hungry, and to carry comfort and joy into every home have, without signal or warning, been sent to the bottom of the ocean by those cowardly monsters of the undersea that exult in murder but dare not fight. During this brief period of one year a tonnage has been swept off the waves equal to two-thirds of the entire trans-Atlantic tonnage before the war, when commerce ruled at its highest and best.

Since we entered the war there have been killed probably not less than 2,500,000 men, the flower of the manhood of the world. Since we entered this war there have been maimed for life probably not less than another 2,500,000 men. And when we contemplate the meaning of this slaughter, in widows bereaved, in children made fatherless, in homes made desolate, in cities demolished, in whole States made sterile, the picture is so appalling that it paralyzes our imagination.

And while our allies alone have been so battling and dying in our common cause what service has this great, powerful Nation been rendering in this conflict? What we may have in contemplation may be worthy of our praise. But, Mr. President, it is with a feeling of neither pride nor satisfaction that we are compelled to chronicle the little we have accomplished, the meager assistance we have given, during this our first year.

We have a population two and a half times greater than the most powerful of our allies, Great Britain, and resources at least five times those of that country. At the beginning of the war Great Britain was as unprepared as we were. To-day, with back to the wall she is battling against overwhelming numbers, against artillery that is superior, against an army that on the whole is better organized and disciplined, and, I fear, generally, more efficiently officered.

We proposed to have in France at the end of the first year of our war not less than 1,500,000 fighting men. The year ended with less than 200,000. We purposed to have in France before the end of the first year a flying squadron of about 12,000, to be increased to 20,000 shortly thereafter.

And though there has been voted for aircraft alone $640,000,000, enough to cover the whole expenses of an ordinary war, at the end of the first year we find this enormous appropriation has been worse than criminally squandered, and a call is made for another $400,000,000 to begin the real construction of our air machines.

Mr. President, yesterday's papers gave an account of a soldier boy who was dishonorably discharged and sent to prison for five years because he declined to be operated on for hernia. The soldier on the front who would purloin a loaf of bread to appease his hunger, the soldier sentry on the line of battle, no matter how tired and weary, who should sleep at his post of duty would pay the penalty with his young life. These are the rigid rules which are applied to those who offer their lives a sacrifice for their country.

Mr. President, the same day a leading member of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate expressed his willingness to drop further investigation to ascertain and punish those intrusted with the power and the duty to construct aircraft who have purloined three-fourths of a billion dollars raised to carry on this work, delayed the country in its war aims for a year, thereby sacrificing thousands of lives. Do you believe this country can or will stand idly and unconcernedly and see the billion-dollar grafter go scot free while such awful penalties are imposed upon our poor, weak, or overexhausted soldier boys?

We wasted many months in attempting to secure a liberty motor that should be superior to those used abroad. I think no one claims that we have even reached their standard of perfection and must look entirely to our allies for the swifter and higher class of fighting planes. We lost many months in attempting to invent a recoil that would make our guns superior to those used by our allies, and to that extent we delayed progress, only to find in the end that we have failed and must go back to the French model. Considering the emergency we were facing it was incumbent on us to proceed immediately to produce the ordnance, the war motors, and other war weapons which had been tested and which were in use and satisfactorily filling the demands of the armies in Europe. That we should attempt to produce something superior is most commendable, but our efforts in that direction and our experiments could have proceeded without delaying the production of those war necessities which had already been tested and found most effective. Mr. President, there is no excuse, there can be no legitimate excuse, for this delay.

We wasted nearly six months of the most precarious time of the war before we did anything to augment the construction of ships. If that delay has not proved fatal to our cause, it is due to the endurance and terrible sacrifices of our allies. That the results of our efforts have been almost negligible up to the present time compared with our purpose must be admitted; that they have fallen far below our capabilities is even more regrettable.

The first and greatest question which confronted us when we entered this war was the question of ship construction. We virtually assured our allies that our part of the program of 1917 should be 6,000,000 gross tons of ships. We actually furnished about 1,000,000, or about one-sixth of what we were expected to furnish. To support our Army of 1,000,000 men in 1918 we should have 6,000,000 additional gross tonnage. To meet the U-boat devastation our share should have been 5,500,000 more, or 11,500,000 tons in all. The present outlook is for not exceeding 3,000,000 wholly new gross tonnage, probably much less. We, of course, have taken Dutch ships of about 600,000 gross tons. But those ships were already in trans-Atlantic trade. We have not thereby added to the tonnage afloat. The roseate utterances of our Shipping Board as to what they have accomplished may sound cheerful to those who calculate only by comparisons or percentages, while failing to grasp the vast needs of our country. If we need to construct in one year 1,000 ships, we get little comfort out of the assertion that, having had only one ship to begin with, we have built two others, thereby increasing our shipping 200 per cent in a single year. Despite the fine percentage showing, the ugly fact still stares us in the face that we have only constructed 2 ships when the situation demanded 1,000 ships.

Mr. President, there is no use of our saying that we have even begun to meet the expectations of either our allies or ourselves. Lloyd-George, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Asquith, and other British statesmen have been compelled to admit on the floor of Parliament their great disappointment in our tardiness, and, though they have refrained from any criticism and suppressed their chagrin that their reliance upon our assurance had misled them, to their great detriment in many ways, the conviction that we have so far failed to perform our part in this conflict is deep seated in Britain, France, and Italy.

What has been the reason, the underlying cause, of this failure to accomplish results? It is not because we are a small Nation. We have a population of 105,000,000 of naturally industrious people. It is not because we lack resources. In grain fields, in coal, iron, and copper mines, and in timber we have at least five times the wealth of all our enemies combined. It is not because we have not the mills and factories for converting our raw materials into the finished products. If all our existing mills and all our existing factories had been operated during the year at their full capacity, except possibly munition plants, which had to be greatly enlarged, and if the labor employed had been a hundred per cent efficient, we undoubtedly could have produced many times what we actually produced in 1917. It is not because of a lack of capability on the part of our people. Our industrial progress belies that charge. It is not because we lack executive ability. Our great industrial, transportation, and manufacturing establishments had been organized during times of peace on a broader and far more efficient scale than is found anywhere else in the world. It is not because we have not had the money to convert our great resources into effective war weapons. During the first year of the war, from April 6, 1917, to April 6, 1918, we have received—

From the sale of liberty bonds, war savings and thrift stamps and from certificates of indebtedness (less certificates redeemed)	$9,207,628,521.09
Estimated revenue for the year ending June 30, 1918, in excess-profits tax, corporation income tax, individual income tax, miscellaneous internal revenue	3,400,000,000.00
Customs receipts estimated for same period	185,000,000.00
Receipts from all other sources estimated	306,360,000.00
Total cash subject to war drafts	13,098,989,461.09
We appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918	18,879,177,014.96

The amount we can possibly expend even with our criminal waste will probably be under twelve billions. Not a single war program has been delayed one moment for lack of funds.

What, then, has been or is the trouble? Where rests the responsibility? Why is it that we, the greatest of all the nations, have so far failed to perform a man's part in this war?

Mr. President, there are many causes which, all combined, can be assigned for our gross delay. Some are to a certain extent excusable. Others are partially or wholly inexcusable. Foremost among the former causes was our unpreparedness. Of course, that has been a very important element of delay in getting into this war. But it is not nearly as great as many of the critics would have us believe. Criticism has been indulged in against those who, it is said, have not favored proper preparedness in the past. These criticisms are very far afield in most instances. If 10 years ago or 5 years ago you would have asked any of these critics, "Do you think we will ever have occasion to send an army over to Europe to battle against any great power there," the critic addressed would have immediately answered, "Certainly not. Our war with any great power will be a war on the sea. Our preparation should be for a great Navy, a Navy at least equal to that of Great Britain and greater than that of any other great power. We need more dreadnaughts." Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. President, the dreadnaughts in this war have been the least valuable and effective of all the fighting craft. And I am not certain that they have not been more of a liability than an asset. The only ships that have proven their worth, that have accomplished results, have been the swift cruisers with their long-range guns, the submarines, the torpedo destroyers, and the submarine chasers. And so, Mr. President, if the country had followed the then ideas of the preparedness propaganda we still would not have been prepared for this particular land war in Europe. We should have had on hand a lot of out-of-date mammoth dreadnaughts and would have been no nearer the war preparation necessary to meet the new conditions of this war than we were on August 3, 1914. What we lacked most was the foresight and determination to get up and be doing when the flying sparks of that great world war threatened to produce a conflagration that might force us on the firing line. Then was the time to take an account of our war accessories and lay our plans for speedy organization in case we might be suddenly called into action. Then was the time to contemplate and prepare to meet the new instrumentalities of war. Then was the time to prepare for airplanes, to develop new gases to meet the poisons that have been used by our enemies.

The whole science of war has been changed since August 3, 1914. Most of the preparation which we might have indulged in prior to that date would have been antiquated. Where we have fallen down is in what we have failed to do since August 3, 1914, when war was imminent, and to a far greater extent what we have failed to do since April 6, 1917, when war was upon us.

The next important reason for our failure to meet our war expectations has been an almost total lack of foresight on the great fundamental requirements. We seem to have gotten so bewildered in a maze of little things that we have lost sight of the great requirements. The failure in our shipping program is the most aggravating example of this failure to grasp a big situation. When we entered the war April 6, 1917, ruthless and relentless submarine warfare had been in operation for two months. Its deadly toll for those two months was more than 1,000,000 gross tons, or about 1,600,000 dead-weight tons, and clearly presaged its devastating possibilities.

The conduct of the war up to that date had demonstrated that the German war machine was the most effective in the world; that every step taken by that power had been taken only after the most careful consideration that trained military minds could give; that the German war authorities had fully weighed the advantages of the submarine against the disadvantages of adding the United States to the list of enemies. We knew that the central powers would never have allowed the United States to become one of its enemies unless after the greatest possible investigation and consideration they had arrived at the conclusion that the submarine could probably so diminish the world's tonnage that Great Britain would be badly crippled and there would not be sufficient ships to transport and maintain a real and effective army of American soldiers. We were fully apprised of what the losses in ships and tonnage would be by the time we could have an army ready to be transported. We knew, or at least ought to have known, just what additional tonnage we should need to supply those soldiers. We knew that we ought to have 1,500,000 men in France before January 1, 1918. We could measure with almost mathematical accuracy just what we would lack in ships by the time this army was ready. And yet, Mr. President, it was impossible to awaken the Shipping Board or the country to the dire situation that would surely overtake us unless we immediately began the construction of ships on a scale greater than the world had ever dreamed of.

Observing that this part of our war program was being neglected, on the 17th of April, 1917, I sought to force its attention on the Shipping Board by presenting the situation on the floor of the Senate, with all the data that I could then obtain.

Mr. President, had we begun ship construction immediately after April 6, 1917, we could have had 1,500,000 men in France by the 1st of January, 1918. Had we had that many on the firing line, the great drive which began March 21 would not have been made, or if made would have been repulsed. We can not, therefore, divest ourselves of responsibility for the loss of many hundreds of thousands of lives in that drive, and the possible loss of a whole army before the drive is over.

We are now doing our best to secure ships to carry our forces to the front. We have been compelled by the exigencies of the situation to commandeer the ships of neutrals in our ports. Great Britain, with insufficient ships to carry food to her own people, is lending us ships, and we still can not get our men over rapidly enough to meet the most urgent demand for them.

Of course, no one can condemn the President for this failure. He can not personally build the ships. He appointed a board for that specific purpose, and Congress has already placed at its disposal $1,750,000,000. During the first six months of the war nothing was done by the Shipping Board. During the last six months it has laid plans and begun the work of construction on a somewhat extensive scale. But, Mr. President, I want to say with all the earnestness in my power that the scale is not one half as great as it should be. It is not one-half as great as it should be to take care of just 1,000,000 men, and we will need not less than 5,000,000 men on that battle front before a real victory can be achieved. We could add 5,000,000 tons in concrete ships in 1918; but, notwithstanding the fact that the President has approved and recommended it, I am certain that there is a cunningly devised scheme—a conspiracy, if I may call it such—to shelve concrete shipping. I shall have more to say about this and the source of the opposition on some other occasion.

Still another and most important cause has been the unparalleled extravagance along every line of endeavor. The spirit of avarice seems to have taken possession of people as never before. Within a few days after war was declared the price of everything began to soar skyward. Extortionate charges were made for material furnished and still more extortionate demands made for labor used in any undertaking whose product was essential for our war needs. Slacking became the rule rather than the exception all along the line. Department bid against department and bureau against bureau for labor and clerks. Wages became immediately so high that the laborer could live better than ever before on three or four days of service in the week, and he often availed himself of that opportunity. The worse than extravagant wages paid to unskilled foreign laborers actually reduced efficiency and output in many important industries as low as 50 per cent. It required neither education nor experience to secure high salaries by clerks in all of our departments. Those departments thereupon became filled with inefficient clerks, and their inability to perform their tasks made necessary other clerks of equal inexperience until the vast number hindered and delayed each other. Thousands of civilians who had never had the slightest military training and who were well within the draft age were made military or naval officers, given high ranks, commutation, and comparatively high salaries while they were performing duties of no higher grade than would be performed by an ordinary file clerk, while no commutation was provided for the families of officers battling in France. Up to the present time this has gone on without diminution. We have been literally burning up the money which the taxpayers have cheerfully paid to create and support a fighting army. I am not exaggerating when I say that the money expended so far should have produced from eight to ten times what it has produced in real war effectiveness. It is probably well that the average taxpayer does not fully understand the proportion of the money paid by him that has been recklessly expended.

To give a single illustration: A gentleman told me the other day that his Federal taxes this year would be something over $2,500; that in order to be able to support his family and pay the other expenses of living he had been compelled to dispense with his chauffeur and to drive and take care of his own auto. He said he would be more than glad to do this if this money had gone out to really support the boys at the front. But he instanced the case of a young doctor who, while still holding his office in the city, had been commissioned by the Government, furnished with an auto and two chauffeurs, at $75 per month each. Before being made an officer this doctor had driven his own little car and is well able to do it now. So that $1,800 of his $2,500, which should have paid the wages of five soldiers on the fighting lines, went to pay these two unnecessary chauffeurs in this city.

This is but one out of thousands upon thousands of instances which could be given of like extravagances. If we were to keep on with our present rate of spending the money raised to carry on this war, we would be bankrupt before we could put 5,000,000 men in the field and support them.

Before we get through with this war we shall be compelled to learn the lesson of prudence and economy. They say to us, "Buy liberty bonds and win the war." But, Mr. President, while we can not win the war without buying liberty bonds, neither can we win it by making bonfires of the money received from liberty bonds. They say to us, "Save wheat and win the war." But the war can not be won by fasting alone. The value of what we would save in one year by wheatless days is burned up in one day of that Saturnalia of extravagance. The Government has a right to say to every citizen, "Be patriotic and buy a liberty bond." The citizen, Mr. President, has a right to say to the Government, "Here is your money; spend it honestly and effectively." The people have performed their duty. The Government has failed to perform its duty toward the taxpaying and the bond-buying public.

Another thing that has delayed our war progress to an enormous extent has been the bluster and braggadocio of the public press. Every line of this instrumentality of public information has breathed a spirit of assurance unwarranted by the real facts in the case. We have thereby been misled and lulled to sleep. We have grossly exaggerated everything in our favor and grossly underestimated everything against us. If blowing could have won battles the enemy would have long since been blown off the face of the earth by the American press. We declared war on the 6th of April. We proclaimed what terms of peace we would impose on the 7th. We made a new map of Europe on the 8th, and then settled down to the delightful pastime of cartooning a frightened Kaiser, while army after army and ally after ally were being totally annihilated by the advancing hordes of the conquering "Hun." Great God, will we awaken from this false dream, this drunken delirium of invincibleness, before it is too late?

Mr. President, I have complained, and vigorously complained, of this worse than misleading attitude of the press, and in combating that influence I have been termed a pessimist, not only by the press but undoubtedly by some of my associates. But, Mr. President, my pessimism has always been of the constructive kind and it has been necessary to overcome obstructive optimism. I have attempted to awaken the people from the hypnotic state of complacency which had been created by a boasting journalism. When the press declared in lurid headlines that the allies outnumbered the enemy on the western line two to one, and could drop five shells to the enemy's one, I tried to demonstrate the falsity and absurdity of such a claim and to show that the enemy not only had a much larger force on the northern end of the western line, but also such advantage in position that they could throw a crushing force from one part of the battle line to another in a very much shorter time than it would be possible for the allies to shift their forces to meet the thrust. It was asserted and proclaimed over and over again that the German Army never could break through the western line. But though accomplished with the greatest slaughter, they did break through the defense and pressed onward for 30 miles, and then for the first time the public were given the actual truth, made known from official sources, that the British defenders were battling against a force never fewer in number than two to one, and often one division of our allies battling against an enemy four times their numerical strength.

And so, Mr. President, I still plead that the unvarnished truth may be presented to the American people, that they be no longer deceived by the constantly repeated assertion that Gen. Foch has a mighty reserve force in the rear awaiting an opportune moment to strike a blow that will destroy this conquering enemy. That assertion is false. He has no such reserve. The only mighty reserve force is the American Army on this side of the ocean, and the only hope of our allies is that they may be able to withstand the German assault until providence, forgiving our sinful delays, shall lend them a sufficient American force to check that assault.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator rightfully makes the criticism of the public press and others, but does he not think that some of that criticism ought to apply to Members of Congress? I ought not to use any names, but I have the press report of an address made by a Member of Congress in which he says that we now have constructed a heavy gun which will make a 42-centimeter German gun look like a popgun. I quote the expression from his address, not using my own language. Another statement was that there is a surface bomb invented that will destroy a submarine when it appears on the surface, a depth bomb invented that will destroy it when submerged, and that within three months the submarine will be swept from the Atlantic Ocean and all adjoining waters. He says further that we have ample force in France, and that the war will be over by autumn. That is from a Member of Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in April, 1917, when I tried to present the necessity for taking hold of the shipping situation a Senator upon the floor of the Senate scoffed at the idea of any danger of the submarine and stated that within a few weeks the submarine menace would be a dream of the past, or something of that character. Since that time the submarine has been taking a monthly toll of not less than 500,000 tons of shipping each month.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Supplementing the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], I will say to the Senator that some months ago, the date I can not fix accurately in my mind, a member of the Shipping Board, who is still a member of that board, stated in an address in one of the great cities of the country that by January 1 we would have 6,000,000 tons of shipping completed. Perhaps it escaped the attention of the Senator, but such an absurd statement was made by a member of the Shipping Board.

Mr. McCUMBER. I read it, Mr. President, and was surprised, as was the Senator from New Hampshire. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he was dealing with dead-weight tonnage and was including not only all the ships that we had commandeered and that we had purchased at the beginning of the war, the shipbuilding contracts, and so forth, but all that we might possibly get from anywhere in the world, and then for the rest he must have drawn upon his imagination.

Mr. President, another great setback in our progress has been lack of coordination.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator leaves the subject, I noticed in the press that we are given to understand that it will only take 2½ tons of shipping for each soldier that we may have in France. I have heard the Senator discuss the question a good many times and I have never heard him mention so low a tonnage. Has the Senator any information in relation to that point?

Mr. McCUMBER. During the Boer War, when there were no submarines and no enemies to attack ships, the British Government's report shows that it took over 6 gross tons per man. Therefore, if you would have a million under equally favorable conditions it would take 6,000,000 gross tons, or 9,000,000 dead-weight tons.

Mr. GALLINGER. Leaving out the question of submarines.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. Taking into consideration the roundabout course, the delays that must occur in loading and unloading, the slow movement of ships that are to be convoyed, and the losses, I am certain it will require not less than 6 tons per man. I have based that not only upon my own conclusions but upon the expert testimony of those who do know exactly what it will take.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I asked the question of the Senator was that the newspaper articles professed, upon their face at least, to come from the War Department itself, and I was wondering whether our War Department was figuring upon 2½ tons of shipping for each man, and the department felt that 2½ tons per man would afford sufficient shipping facilities.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Shipping Board placed it at about 3 tons, but it will take double that. You can be sure that it will take double that before we get through.

The new boards created with power to give priority orders in shipments of freight, instead of relieving the situation made it tenfold worse. Thousands upon thousands of carloads of coal lay week after week, sidetracked to give way to priority freight that might not be needed for months while people were freezing for want of coal.

Another great mistake which retarded our war work was the idea that this war had given us the opportunity to put into active operation theories of the idealist. We started in with the idea that the world had run along in an old casehardened way; that we had been tethered by obsolete customs and usages which had clogged our real progress, and the war had given us the great opportunity to put into effect so-called progressive ideas; and so we proposed to launch into a realm of newer, more socialistic and paternalistic methods. Men with staid and practical habits would, of course, have no place in this new order of endeavor, and therefore the theorist, the Chautauqua lecturer, the college professor, the fiction writer, the socialist, the single-taxer, the pacifist—those who could expound all the laws of economics but who would have landed in a court of bankruptcy in six months had they applied their theories to the hard realities of business—were selected to administer the vast powers voted to the Executive as war measures.

Mr. President, untried theories and practical facts always have conflicted and always will conflict. He whose ideas are gained entirely from book lore and he whose convictions have been driven into him by the sledge hammer of actual experience never have agreed and never will agree; and hence, when you divide authority between the two discord will follow; and where you sow discord you will inevitably reap disaster. Oh, yes; in the early part of the war these practical men were called in to advise. But they soon learned that, like children, they should be seen and not heard, and their advice was seldom sought and never, so far as I can learn, followed. I am not criticizing the President in his appointees. He undoubtedly used his very best judgment. I am simply giving the result of our first year's experience in transferring power to this incoherent school of new thought. The appointment of Mr. Schwab and other late appointments show that the President himself has become convinced that practical men of affairs must be put in charge if we are to secure results that will enable us to win this war.

Another mistake we have made during the first year of this war has been that we have taken in the labor unions, with their good elements and their bad elements, as a side partner instead of all the American people. I do not concede that this was necessary in order to keep labor loyal. There is just as great a percentage of loyalty in one class as in any other class of Americans. National patriotism is not dependent upon badges or cards of admission to any society or any union. The disastrous results of this partnership became apparent very soon. Raised so suddenly into such power, it was but natural that the bolsheviki element, the I. W. W. element, should take advantage of the opportunity to hold the Government by the throat. That element got beyond the control of those loyal men who were at the head of labor organizations of the country, with the result that in actual efficiency the man power employed in building, in construction, fell off from 35 to 50 per cent, and this notwithstanding the enormous wages that were being paid. I believe that we are overcoming this danger. I believe that the loyal men of the unions will gradually eliminate or control the unpatriotic and disloyal element—which, for the most part, Mr. President, are not American at all, and many of whom can not even speak the English language—and will, as has been done in Great Britain, show to the world that American labor is not only loyal to the core but that its loyalty will respond in a production that will in the end win this war.

There has been another mistake made, I believe, during the first year of this war. I do not think there has been that close relation and understanding there should have been between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government. The country has never had a Congress more loyal than that which is to-day backing this Nation in its war. I think I can also truthfully say that the country has never had a President more earnest in his desire to lead this country to a glorious victory than President Wilson. The combined wisdom and patriotism of both these great branches of the Government are necessary in this war. Their labors should be harmonious. I can not explain why it is, and yet I feel it, that these two branches are as far apart as though they represented two separate governments in a war alliance rather than the two harmonious arms of a single war power. I think they would each understand the other far better if there were more consultations between the executive and the legislative branches, not after a particular program has been laid out by the President, calling for particular legislation, but before it is laid out, in initiating the legislation. I am certain there is more wisdom in the whole Congress than in any single adviser of the President.

I do not wish to be understood as implying that the President has not been always ready to consult with and to receive the views of any individual Member of Congress. From my own personal experience I can declare the opposite. For I have never requested to see the Executive that the request has not been immediately granted, and courteous, full, and fair consideration given to every matter presented. I am speaking of Congress as an entity. I want to support the President in every possible way. I sympathize with his declarations. I believe in them with my whole heart. I would support every one of his 14 declarations of terms of peace.

I join heart and soul in his determination not to emerge from this conflict until the rights of every nation, great and small, are safeguarded by the written bond of every other nation, until the crushing load of armaments has been lifted from the people of the world, and that world made safe for democratic governments and institutions, and I know this is the sentiment of Congress. I sincerely hope that the second year of the war will bring Congress and the executive branch of the Government into a closer relation and a consequently better understanding.

Mr. President, as we pause within the sound of the most desperate battle of the ages, now being waged by our courageous allies, and look into the uncertain future, anxiously seeking how we may be able to render our long delayed assistance, these glaring failures of the first 12 months ought to stand as signboards pointing toward the only safe course we can pursue.

The first, the greatest, the most imminent demand is for an assisting army. That means ships—ships for the transportation of our armies, ships for their support, ships to feed our allies. Mr. Schwab, the present head of the Shipping Board, is reported to have stated that we would produce 10,000,000 tons of shipping in 1919. Of what avail will this shipping be to us, so far as this war is concerned, if we are unable to meet the demands of 1918?

Not only this, but he refers to 10,000,000 dead-weight tonnage, which is little more than 6,000,000 gross tonnage, and this in the face of the fact that the very board of which he is the head estimates the losses of ships in 1918 at 7,000,000 gross tons. The startling proposition contained in this statement is that a year later we will come within 1,000,000 tons of meeting the U-boat ravages for this year.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in that connection will the Senator from North Dakota yield a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator's opinion of an editorial in the Washington Post, of May 2—that is, yesterday—in which this statement is made:

> Within the next two months the United States will have at least 1,500,000 men in France, one-third to one-half of whom will be in the trenches.

Does the Senator believe that there are shipping facilities in the world to transport one-half that many men to France in two months?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not. I do not know just exactly to what extent Great Britain can surrender her shipping for our use, but I do know that Mr. Secretary Baker stated a few months ago that he could have 1,500,000 men in France in 1918 if he had the shipping to transport them; but he said he could not get the shipping. I do not believe it is possible to put that many men into France in 1918 unless our allies can furnish a tonnage which I believe it will be impossible for them to furnish.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that we now have under our flag registered for foreign commerce, which is mainly trans-Atlantic, 4,750,000 tons of shipping.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not mean that that is new construction?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not new construction.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, Mr. President, we had 8,000,000 tons in 1914 altogether. We had about 2,000,000 tons that could be used in the trans-Atlantic service, and then we had a vast number of ships in our coasting trade. Of course, those are already in existence, but in making an estimate of the shipping we have to compute the shipping of the world, which has been so rapidly destroyed.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from North Dakota will recall, I said that we had registered for foreign commerce and in the service 4,750,000 tons of shipping. That, of course, does not have any reference to the coastwise shipping, which is not registered shipping, but is enrolled shipping. The coastwise shipping is about equal to what we had before the war—something near that, though somewhat diminished, because some of the ships engaged in the coastwise trade have been registered and are now engaged in the foreign trade. We had in 1914 under our flag only 1,076,000 tons of registered shipping for foreign trade; but I am now speaking with reference to meeting the emergency. It is estimated, I believe, that we should require, for instance, about 4 tons to serve every man in the Army abroad. That would mean that we ought to have 6,000,000 tons of shipping available for use if we have 1,500,000 men in France.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator a question right there. In speaking of the number of tons of shipping, is the Senator speaking of dead-weight tonnage—that is the American term ordinarily—or of gross tonnage?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am speaking of registered tons.

Mr. McCUMBER. Here it means the dead-weight tonnage.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not alluded to the tonnage that is available to us of neutrals and allies. I am speaking of tonnage under our flag which is at present in the service. I think, beyond any doubt, we shall have shipping available to take care of 1,500,000 men in France.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think that is impossible; first, because the Senator is speaking, I think, of dead-weight tonnage in his estimate, and, secondly, because it is going to require very much greater tonnage than the Senator has given. I am certain of that. That, however, is not all. There has been no allowance in that estimate at all for losses, and the Shipping Board itself estimates that for 1918 the losses in the world's shipping will be about 7,000,000 gross tons, which would be about 10,500,000 dead-weight tons.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I am considering that we will have some of the benefit of neutral and allied shipping, and that we will not be limited entirely to our own tonnage.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but no other nations of all our allies are now building ships, except Great Britain. We are going, I think, to assist ourselves to some extent by an agreement with Japan under which Pacific trade may be turned over to Japan, thereby relieving some Australian ships for our use. There is no question but that at the present time we are doing everything possible to get all the shipping that we can, but I do not think we can get enough to take care of a million men, even without considering at all the losses in shipping.

Mr. President, if we fail to put less than 5,000,000 men on the fighting line before the end of another year we will again have grossly failed to measure up to our moral duty. I wish I could make that truth sink into the hearts of the American people and those responsible for the conduct of this war. If we fail to do that we will have charged to our discredit another year of colossal blunders. This 10,000,000 dead-weight tonnage will not be half of what we should start now to produce within the next year. A program which contemplates but 10,000,000 tonnage is trifling with the most serious question that ever confronted the people of this country. It is worse than trifling; it is suicidal. Our only hope of winning this war is in being able to keep our allies in the field another year. That means that it is incumbent upon us to supply them with food. If we can not get armies into the field, for God's sake let us at least get food and munitions to those who are fighting our battles. While we are thus building ships we should speed with all possible haste the construction of munitions and aeroplanes.

Concurrent with this program, and to make our efforts sure and effective, we should no longer delay some effective method of utilizing all the energies of all the people of the country in the field of production. We are at present operating on a scale not even 50 per cent efficient when we consider our capabilities. Provision should be immediately made to the end that not a single other strike shall occur in our essential industries during the remainder of this war. We should see to it that there should be no just cause for strikes, and then we should further see to it that every day's service performed in the production of war necessities shall be a full and honest day's work; that so long as we have a single soldier in France fighting for this country there shall not be a single slacker on this side of the ocean. Back of our patriotic fighting force there should be a patriotic producing force, a force with the same ardor, the same determination, the same patriotism that thrills the hearts of our little Army. That we should call upon one class of men to perform heroic tasks, to suffer excruitating horrors beyond words of expression, and even to die the most agonizing of deaths, and at the same time allow other men to loaf in the streets or retard production that could save the lives of hundreds of thousands of our soldiers and the soldiers of our fighting allies, is worse than a mere national blunder, worse than a mere national injustice. It is a national crime without palliation or excuse. We should proceed immediately to organize the entire manhood and womanhood of this country into a mighty and invincible army of producers.

So, Mr. President, the great, the impending duty that confronts us at the beginning of this second year is the duty to really get into this war, to get into it on a scale commensurate with our wealth, our population, and our resources, to get into it with ships, to get into it with guns, to get into it with aeroplanes, to get into it 5,000,000 strong, to get into it on a scale and with a force that will make victory not only absolutely certain but so complete, so overwhelming that no nation shall ever have the power to commit another such atrocious crime against the people of the world—a victory that shall once and for all drive from the face of the earth those twin monstrosities which have caused more suffering and more horrors than all other calamities combined since time began, autocracy and militarism. These, Mr. President, are the duties confronting us at the beginning of the second year of the war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the conference report now before the Senate for action contains, among other things, an amendment to the espionage law by which a new section, known as section 4, is added to Title XII of that act. This amendment reads as follows:

> When the United States is at war, the Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or concern is using the mails in violation of any of the provisions of this act, instruct the postmaster at any post office at which mail is received addressed to such person or concern to return to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed all letters or other matter so addressed.

And then it provides that the letter or other matter shall be returned to the writer, under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster General may adopt.

Mr. President, let us consider for just a moment what the Post Office Department is, how it has grown up, and what are its activities.

It is probably the largest concern of its kind in the world. It deals with all our people, almost without exception. Its activities enter into the life of every citizen, every home, every fraternal, religious, or political organization or institution. It is used in the carrying on of practically every business in the United States. It has grown up, and we have grown up with it, until it has become a part of the woof and the warp of our lives, and to deprive any person or concern of the use of the facilities of the Post Office Department is practically to ostracize such person or concern, to drive them out of business if they are in business; in fact, to make it impossible for any man or concern engaged in business to continue his or its business. So that an interference with a citizen's use of it is a serious proposition, and it reaches every individual and every citizen of the country in all his activities of life, whatever they may be.

Let me say also, Mr. President, that in discussing this proposition I have no reference to any particular individual, no reference to any person or to any particular Postmaster General; and as Postmaster Generals hold their position at the will of the President, I want to say also that I have no reference to any President. Presidents come and go; Postmaster Generals come and go. I am opposed to the principle of this provision. I would be opposed to giving this power to a saint. There is no man living in whom this power could be intrusted, however wise or good or great he may be, without, in my judgment, interfering with the very fundamental principles of human liberty and human freedom on which our great Commonwealth is founded.

Now, let us consider the language. Let us see just what it does.

> The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him—

Mr. President, there is no trial provided in this law, no court, no jury, no hearing, not even a charge or notice. If this power is exercised the first the individual may know that it is used against his activities or his business is when he goes to the post office to get his mail and is notified by the postmaster that no mail can be delivered to him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I have been out of the Chamber, and have not had the opportunity of hearing the preceding remarks of the Senator from Nebraska; but as I understand his criticism of this section, I submit, with all due deference to him, that he is not interpreting it quite fairly.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Utah correct me if I am misinterpreting it. I want to be informed. I am only hunting for the truth.

Mr. KING. As I understand the provision of this law, it is similar to that which exists now in a number of statutes; and the same reasons which exist to justify the Postmaster General in excluding from the mails certain publications under statutes already in existence find expression in the act which the Senator is criticizing.

As I understand this proposed law, and as I understand other acts found upon the statute books, they simply mean that where it has been adjudged in the mind of the Postmaster General, upon evidence which has been brought to his attention, that individuals or concerns have infracted the law, he is justified in excluding from the mails the literature or publications which in the past they have been sending through the mails.

For instance, take the fraud orders, with which the Senator doubtless is familiar, and the lottery statute. In those cases the Postmaster General makes an investigation. It is charged that a certain concern is engaged in a deceptive and fraudulent business, as a result of which innocent people are being robbed. If the evidence by him is deemed sufficient, he issues an order denying the use of the mails to that concern. Not only does he deny the use of the mails to that which they emit and put into the mails for transmission, but he goes farther, and orders that letters which are addressed to the concern shall not be delivered to it, but shall be returned to the senders.

That is the law with respect to a number of concerns or individuals or businesses. What objection can the Senator have to a similar law when it comes to dealing in a time of war with men, with corporations, with concerns perpetrating crimes, guilty of disloyalty, and seeking the destruction of our Government? If in times of peace it was deemed wise and prudent legislation to prohibit the use of the mails to concerns of a shady character and to prevent individuals from being defrauded of their money, certainly it would seem to me that in a time of war, when we know that there are spies in our midst, pacifists who are disloyal, cowardly, intriguing, seeking the destruction of our form of government, the Senator ought to concede that the same power should be given to the Postmaster General to deal with men of that character as has been given to him in time of peace to deal with mere questions affecting property rights.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this bill deals entirely with property rights. This is not a criminal statute. It it were confined to men who were adjudged guilty of a crime, the objection to a great extent would disappear; but this does not provide that a man must be adjudged guilty of a crime before this law can be applied against him. In fact, I think I shall be able to show that in its very operation it never will be applied to such people. It says that where the Postmaster General, upon evidence satisfactory to him, believes that persons have used the mail in violation of the espionage act, then he can prohibit them from getting any mail.

I am not speaking of a newspaper, that can be read by everybody. That is not what this statute applies to. It does not apply to outgoing mail. The man against whom it is used can send letters and papers, but he can not receive any. I want to say to the Senator that I am just as anxious as he is to punish the disloyal and the spy. In my judgment there is only one punishment that ought to be inflicted upon the spy, and that is death; but I would not inflict that punishment if the law said that he could be adjudged a spy by a secret tribunal, without a charge, without a hearing, without notice, without a chance to defend or even explain. That is what this proposed law does. The instance of fraud orders given by the Senator has no application to the objectionable provision in this conference report. In the case of the fraud order a notice is given and a hearing is had before the order is issued. There is no secret about it. Everything is done in the open. If this provision of this conference report becomes a law, no such safeguards are guaranteed. If it provided for a notice and hearing, in which the person accused had a right to defend himself, I would not be opposing it.

It is different from applying it to a great lottery, that is a public affair and that everybody knows about. The danger of this is not so much in the number of men who will be denied the use of the mails. There will be comparatively few, and it will only be used occasionally against them; but the great danger comes to the very large number of people who will be coerced indirectly because the power exists and is in the hands of one man to put them out of business without giving any reason, without giving any trial, without any notice, and without any charge. There is no way to get at it. It rests in the secret bosom of the Postmaster General. He may say, "I am satisfied, from evidence which I have," which he does not explain, which he does not need to tell anybody about. It does not need to be in writing. There needs to be no charge. "I am satisfied." That is all he has to say, and then he notifies the postmaster that the man or the concern against whom he is going to exercise this power can not receive any more mail.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I shall be glad to yield for a question; but I do not intend to take up much time, and I hope the Senator will not make an extended argument. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator for a question or a suggestion that the Senator may wish to make.

Mr. KING. It might extend into more than a suggestion, so I shall not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the harm that is coming from this is not so much in what is done as it is in the power that exists and what might be done. If you applied it only to the man who had been adjudged guilty of a violation of the espionage act you would only add to the punishment that is already provided for in the law. The espionage act covers a multitude of crimes, and punishment is provided by the law in every case where the individual is found guilty, and those punishments are severe, running into imprisonment from quite a number of years to life, with heavy fines to be paid. If you only denied the use of the mails to those men who were found guilty of a crime under the espionage law I would not have so much objection to it, although I do not think we ought to provide by law that the poor unfortunate in jail shall not be permitted to get letters.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. But those men are punished under the law after being found guilty. This provision would not be any particular harm to them. They would not care so very much; many of them would not care at all if they could not get mail. Many of them would receive no mail anyway. So it is not to those convicted persons that we want to apply this law or with respect to those that the danger comes. It comes from the fact that secretly, without notice, without any trial or any charge, from the breast of a Postmaster General, comes an order depriving some individual from getting letters or papers or anything else, parcel-post packages or anything, through the mails. I think everybody who considers the proposed law must agree with me that if we were only going to apply it to those who were found guilty there would not be any demand for this law, because such persons are already punished. They are tried before a court and before a jury, and if the Postmaster General has evidence that any individual or any concern has violated the espionage law he ought to turn that evidence over to the Attorney General and let the Attorney General bring the proper prosecution to see that the guilty parties are promptly punished.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me put a concrete case. Does the Senator think this would be improper under existing law? Suppose A is suspected of carrying on a business, fraudulent in character, that extends beyond the borders of a State. It is discovered that he is obtaining large sums of money from all parts of the United States, transmitted to him through the mails. The Postmaster General makes an investigation, and from all of the information which he can obtain he reaches the conclusion that the business of the individual is fraudulent in character and one which comes within the denouncements of the existing statute. He thereupon promulgates an order denying the use of the mails to the individual, prohibiting him from transmitting through the mails the literature which he has been sending out and which has resulted in his obtaining large sums of money from the people; and at the same time, in order to prevent him from being enriched by his fraudulent scheme, he orders the postmaster at the town where A resides not to deliver to him any of these letters, which come to him in floods as a result of his fraudulent advertising and his fraudulent scheme, but to return the letters to the senders. Does not the Senator think that is right and proper?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have no objection to that. I am not finding fault with that. I am not finding fault because the Postmaster General has stopped the lottery business or any other thing of the kind. You can not run a lottery without the public finding it out. There must be publicity or the lottery will not operate. I have no objection to closing up a concern of that kind or prohibiting the use of the mails by a concern of that kind.

But, Mr. President, in those cases hearings are held, a trial is had by the Postmaster General. The man has notice and an opportunity to defend himself. There is no such thing in this proposed provision. If the Postmaster General wants to exercise it according to its very terms, he does not need to have any evidence, he does not have to have a hearing. Nobody has made a charge. The Postmaster General simply says "I am satisfied," and then puts the man out of business, and there is no appeal from his order.

Mr. President, what a wonderful power this would be in the hands of an unscrupulous man in a political campaign! With that power resting over a man in business, with that power in the hands of one man resting over the head of every business man or every concern, how much of a slush fund could be raised? That kind of power in such a case would be such that it would make a liberty-loan campaign look like 30 cents in comparison. It would give to that man an indirect power based on his ability to put any man he wanted out of business, to compel him to seal his lips and to open his pocketbook. It would give him a mortgage on his conscience and a key to his safe.

It seems to me that the power is almost unlimited. I want to go as far as any man to punish crime. I want to go as far, and I will go as far as anyone to give power wherever it is necessary to carry on this war.

We are in the war and we must carry it to a successful issue, whatever the cost may be. There is no stopping place except at a victorious end. It must be carried on and the autocracy headed by the Kaiser is driven from power, until overthrown—until after such a victory a peace is established that is as permanent as human ingenuity can make it, so as to be a guidepost on the road of history, a warning to any future monarch or despot that he will not—that he can not—succeed in any military scheme or plan to govern the world.

I am not objecting to giving to the Postmaster General authority if it will help to win the war. Mr. President, I am willing to be his slave, I am willing to shine his shoes and to clean out his stables, I am willing with uncovered head to bend the knee before his throne and to bare the back to his cruel lash if it is necessary to bring victory to our arms across the sea. But here you propose to give him a power that has no more to do with the winning of the war than the flowers that bloom in the springtime. It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is a blow at the very fundamentals of our institutions.

Mr. President, this is a Senate amendment. The simple rejection of the conference report will not effect the objects, but if the conference report is defeated I am going to make a motion to instruct our conferees in the conference which will then follow, to recede from that part of the amendment which contains the section I have read.

The conference report also strikes out a provision of the bill as passed by the Senate to which I wish briefly to call attention. When the Senate passed the bill, it contained this language, known as amendment No. 6:

Provided, however That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motives, and for justifiable ends.

The conference report strikes that out. It seems to me that is another reason why the conference report should be rejected and the Senate should insist that that language remain in the law. It follows a provision in the law defining many crimes, crimes made by language spoken and language written.

I confess I was astounded when the conferees came to the Senate and gave us an agreement, by which they had agreed that this language should be strucken out. It seems to me it ought to go almost without question that when a crime is charged consisting of language written or spoken, and that is what this applies to, if the defendant can show that what he said was true and he said it or wrote it with good motives and for justifiable ends, that ought to be a complete defense. When men can not speak the truth with good motives and for justifiable ends, then our boasted freedom will, I fear, soon disappear and our great Republic will be in serious danger of degenerating into an autocracy.

I was astounded at the letter of the Attorney General printed in the RECORD the other day, in which he denounced this language as interfering with convictions. Mr. President, I can not myself conceive of a crime charged where, if the man in his defense proves that what he said was true and that he said it with good motives and for justifiable ends, he ought not to be acquitted. Are we not going to permit a man charged with using language that statute makes a crime to say, "I told the truth when I said it, and I did it with good motives and I was justified in using the language"? When he has that defense established to the jury, he ought to be free, and to say that he shall not be permitted to establish those facts is to deny him the liberty and the right I have always supposed our country stood for and faithfully upheld.

If the language in regard to the Post Office Department that I have read remains in and this language is taken out, then it will not be long, in my judgment, until we will need another Declaration of Independence. It will bring usurpation in the end. I want to read just a sentence or two from what George Washington, the Father of our Country, said in regard to usurpation. Even if usurpation accomplishes good in any particular instance, its precedent will be evil, and it will be used as a precedent for many evil things thereafter. Listen to what he says. He was speaking of the change of governments and advocating that the Constitution should be only changed in the manner provided by law.

But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Mr. President, I appeal to Senators that this law, going back again to the power given to the Postmaster General, can accomplish no good. It is to apply a strenuous remedy against our fellow citizens without trial, without notice, and without a hearing. The man running a corner grocery store in a little village can not continue in business if he is denied the right to receive mail while his competitor can have that blessing and that privilege. It means a discrimination. It is no defense to say that the Postmaster General will only use it when necessary and be careful about it. The very existence of the power is the great evil and will bring coercion, even though it may be without the knowledge of the man who possesses the power. That often happens.

We are giving it now to one man, and, let me repeat, I have no reference to any individual. We are placing now, if we adopt this conference report, in the hands of one man a power greater than that possessed by any court in the land, a power that has been the reason why men have risen and rebelled against autocracies and monarchies in the past, and while we are engaged in making the world safe for democracy we ought to remember that America is a part of the world, and it will be of little consequence if we establish democracy in Europe and at the same time establish autocracy here. "What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" No good can come from the law. The courts may punish, prosecuting attorneys and juries can convict. I want to do everything I can to assist them in the proper prosecution and conviction of guilty parties; but here we are confiding in one man a greater power over all the people of the United States than has ever been possessed by any court in Christendom from the Supreme Court down to a justice of the peace. And we are providing that this one man can exercise this power in secret, without a trial, without notice to the defendant, without a charge being made, and render a judgment without evidence, without a record—a judgment that is final and from which there is no appeal.

I repeat, Mr. President, it is a serious matter. It seems to me we owe it to the very fundamental principles of human liberty upon which our Government was founded to see that no such provision is put in the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Henderson	Norris	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Hollis	Overman	Smoot
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Swanson
Cummins	Kenyon	Pittman	Thomas

France	Kirby	Pomerene	Tillman
Gallinger	Knox	Ransdell	Trammell
Gerry	Lenroot	Saulsbury	Underwood
Gore	McKellar	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gronna	McNary	Sheppard	Watson
Guion	Martin	Sherman	Weeks

Hardwick	New	Smith, Ga.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] on official business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GORE], is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum of the Senate present.

PRICE OF WHEAT.

Mr. GORE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on amendment No. 44 to House bill 9054, being the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 44 to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and requesting a further conference with the Senate thereon.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment numbered 44 and agree to the further conference asked by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not quite sure that I understand the effect of the motion. If I may ask the Senator, does it mean that we shall insist on the minimum price of $2.50 per bushel for wheat?

Mr. GORE. The House, I will say to the Senator, disagreed to amendment numbered 44, being the wheat-fixing proposition, and asked for a further conference upon that subject. My motion is that the Senate shall further insist upon the amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator that it is not necessary to move to insist but simply to agree to the further conference.

Mr. GORE. It is unnecessary I will say, and I withdraw that part of the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion is agreed to, as modified, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say while I am on my feet that I intended to call a meeting of the conferees to-morrow morning, as I am going to leave the city on Sunday and will be absent for some days. I find the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House and the ranking member of that committee are both absent, and this will for the present require a postponement of the meeting of the conferees, but will not interfere with the progress of the conference thereafter.

Mr. POMERENE. As the motion has been put and agreed to, asking for a further conference and naming the conferees, I do not know that I shall take the time of the Senate now to discuss the subject; but, for one Senator, I am unalterably opposed to this increase. I think it would be a public calamity to get an increase of 30 cents per bushel for wheat at this particular time. It means an addition of between $200,000,000 and $250,000,000 to the original cost of the wheat out of which comes the bread of the country. A little later I shall have something to say on the subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Senator will not discuss it, because I myself asked the Senator from Oklahoma to take from his motion that the Senate insist on its amendment, so that we would merely accede to the request for a conference, without coupling that with the motion.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to a further conference, but I shall ask to be heard later on.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I realize that this is not an appropriate time to discuss the merits of the amendment in relation to advancing the price of wheat; but referring to what the Senator from Ohio has just said, I would like to say that the proposed increase would add about 1 cent to each loaf of bread. It is the theory of the proponents of this amendment that it is better for the people to pay 1 cent additional for the price of bread and be able to get bread than be willing to pay twice the present price and be unable to get it at all.

I will say, furthermore, the farmers are receiving to-day a little more than $9 for the wheat which constitutes a barrel of flour—I believe $9.90. I am informed, I assume upon responsible authority, that the freight rate on flour from the United States to Europe to-day is $20 a barrel. Shipping concerns receive twice as much for transporting a barrel of flour from the United States to Europe as the man who digs it out of the ground receives for the wheat which constitutes the barrel of flour.

Not only that, I realize the Senator has a good many laboring men in his State. He explained here one day that he would not be willing to fix the wages of laborers in Ohio. I entirely agree with him about that. The average laboring man has five members in his family, and the proposed increase on wheat would add $3 a barrel on flour. That would be $15 a year additional for the bread purchased by the laboring man in Ohio and Oklahoma and elsewhere. It would save the laboring man, say, in Oklahoma City $15 a year in buying bread for his family, but the farmer who produced the wheat would lose this $15. Who has the best title to this $15, the farmer who produces the wheat or the laboring man who purchases it at a price arbitrarily reduced by the Government? Justice can return but one answer.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. It is a question as to who has the best title to that $15, the farmer who produces the wheat, who earns it, or the laboring man who receives it as a bonus, as a mere benefaction, at the hands of Congress by arbitrarily interfering with the price of wheat.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I did not intend to provoke a discussion. I know there is always a very wise observation made to the effect that it is better to have wheat at a high price than no wheat at any price. Such a condition does not exist. On the other hand, it may be observed that a large quantity of wheat does no man any good if he does not have the price to get it. It is true, as the Senator from Oklahoma suggests, there are many laboring men in my State. There are likewise more farmers in my State than there are in the State of Oklahoma.

I am not going to take the time to discuss this question, but as the farmers in my own State have been referred to, I am going to take the time of the Senate long enough to read a letter which comes from a real farmer. Under date of March 23, 1918, which was while this question was being discussed here on the floor of the Senate, this is what he said:

PORT CLINTON, OHIO, March 23, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Just a minute to tell you how thoroughly I approve of your opposition to advancing the price of wheat. I raise wheat—840 bushels last year—and it almost hurt my conscience to take last year's Government price.

A man who is not satisfied with $2.20 will not long be satisfied with $2.50, and the Government certainly ought not be party to encouraging such avarice.

I feel that we farmers are even now a privileged class, and in this national crisis any farmer who fails to produce all the food he possibly can, regardless of price, should not be brought into line by an advance in price—that is too much like hiring a man to do his duty.

Preempt unused and uncultivated land for the State and there will speedily be less haggling over price.

Yours, respectfully, ——— ———.

I do not care to discuss the matter further, though I shall do so later, when the conference report comes back to the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I would like to have printed in the RECORD—I do not have it now on my desk—a letter from a citizen of the State of Ohio advocating the other side of this proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, we have a few men of that kind. I had a letter from one farmer in my State—I am sorry to say that he lives in the State—who said that last fall he had sowed 24 acres of wheat, and he complained very bitterly about the high price of coal and the low price of wheat; and said that if the Government did not increase the price of wheat he would clip his wheat in the spring so that it might not mature. There are a few men of that kind in Ohio.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suppose, if they are on the Senator's side, all of these men are highly patriotic citizens; but, if they disagree with him, they are bad citizens.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President, I would not want to put the Senator from Missouri in that class, because he and I differ on a great many subjects, but I have always regarded him as a very highly patriotic man and I am always ready to testify to that fact.

Mr. REED. I do not happen to be a farmer in the Senator's State, so I did not include myself in that class; but the Senator from Ohio proves his case by reading a letter from a farmer, and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] states that he wants to read a letter on the other side of the case from another farmer. Thereupon the Senator from Ohio declares that he supposes there are farmers in the State of Ohio of that class; that he himself had a letter from one of that class; that he is a ashamed that fellow is a citizen of his State, because he proposed to destroy his crop; and it seems to follow that the farmer who agrees with the Senator from Ohio and who compliments him is a highly patriotic individual, whereas those who differ from him are in a class which he characterizes as disloyal and unworthy citizens. The Senator from Ohio can not so include me; I am not a farmer in the Senator's State, and am not a constituent of his; but I know of many farmers in the State of Missouri who are of the opinion that under present conditions there ought to be no arbitrary reduction of the price of their wheat crop when everything they buy is uncontrolled. I have felt that these men were entitled to that opinion and that their place as citizens of the Republic ought not to be challenged because they entertain that opinion.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I agree that the Senator from Ohio has a perfect right to argue that $2 or $2.20 a bushel or any other price for wheat is a sufficient price; but I do not think a farmer who does not think that is a just price for wheat ought to be catalogued as a bad citizen.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I did not say that the man who favored $2.50 per bushel was a disloyal or an unpatriotic citizen. That may have been an inference which could be drawn from the language of the letter I read. The writer does not call such men disloyal. He speaks of this advance in price as encouraging avarice. But I do not care to follow the discussion further, but I will at a later time discuss the matter entirely on its merits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has asked that a letter to which he has alluded may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GORE. I have not the letter at present, but I shall present it later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have just a sentence which I wish to have read into the RECORD at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

In Senator "JIM" WADSWORTH'S section of New York—he is a farmer, you know, and has a farm home to prove it—they are plowing up wheat that may make 15 bushels to an acre in order to sow grain upon which there is no regulated price. The West is doing the same thing.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am informed that in the West a great deal of wheat that promises to yield less than 8 bushels an acre is being turned under. Even if it would yield a profit at a fixed price of $2.20, it is not enough. The fact that it does not promise as large a profit as rye, corn, and barley is the controlling factor, and the farmers will naturally, and very properly, sow their land to the crop that promises the larger return. With rye bringing $3 and more per bushel and wheat bringing only $2.20 per bushel, and the further fact that the land will produce more rye to the acre than it will of wheat, is a pretty fair indication that that will control a great many farmers and cause the sowing of the land to rye instead of to wheat.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is not such a statement and the conclusion to be deduced therefrom an argument in favor of fixing the price of rye and barley and corn?

Mr. GORE. If equal injustice rather than equal justice be our standard, I answer yes. Of course, if there is any justification for fixing the price of wheat, I suppose there would be equal justification for fixing the price of rye, with this exception, that if we do a man an injustice and an injury in one particular it does not constitute a rational justification to double or treble the injury and the injustice.

I am just in receipt of a letter from the president of the Farmers' Union of my State advising me that the turning under of wheat is proceeding on a much larger scale than he had anticipated when he was lately in Washington.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Following the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], whether or not the condition referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] would not justify the fixing of the price on rye or corn, I want to ask him if fixing the price on corn and rye would not also justify the fixing of the price on farm machinery; the fixing of the price on groceries; the fixing of the price on cotton; the fixing of the price on clothing; the fixing of the price on drugs and oils and on everything that the farmer buys? If it is proposed that we shall fix the price on what the farmer produces, why should we not fix the price of the things which he must purchase?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. The reason that I returned a qualified answer to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was because of the fact that I do not believe in the price-fixing policy at all. I think it is impossible of execution upon any principle of justice. It is not a new experiment under the sun. I find instances of it reach'ng back as far as 2,250 years before Christ. It is one dreary tale of disappointment, and in many instances of disaster. Some say that the Government can not fix a price on an article. The Government can fix a price on an article, but it can not do so without working incalculable and unanticipated injustice in many instances.

I have also a recent article based upon a report of the Department of Labor, which I will request be printed in the RECORD, to the effect that price fixing has been a failure in Germany, where there is autocratic power, where, if arbitrary and despotic methods could be made to prevail, I assume they would be made to prevail. Our own Department of Labor has reported that their efforts have been crowned with failure—the unfailing crown of all efforts to repeal the laws of economics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Evening Star, Apr. 22, 1918.]

PRICE FIXING A FAILURE IN GERMANY IS REPORT—LABOR STATISTICS BUREAU SAYS UPPER CLASSES ENJOY WEALTH, WHILE MASSES ARE IN POVERTY.

Price fixing in Germany has been a failure and profiteering exists everywhere, says the April bulletin of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The upper classes are rolling in wealth, while the masses are in abject poverty.

Not daring to tax the people directly, the bulletin says, money is raised for the war by floating loans. These loans, although taken to some extent by the wealthy classes, are really paid for by the people, who have to pay exorbitant prices. With imports cut off, the land does not produce enough properly to sustain life.

Shortly after the war started maximum prices were fixed on commodities, but these, says the bulletin, were evaded by dealers and producers. Regulation of the amounts of the necessities sold to one customer was attempted, but resulted in much illicit trading at high prices, with the rich getting the much needed commodities.

German Government figures show the cost of living to have increased 117 per cent, but the bulletin says these figures do not show the real facts. Buying has to be illicitly done to get the goods, and enormous prices have to be paid.

Mr. GORE. I say, again, that the reason that I returned the qualified answer that I did to the Senator from Utah was that I do not believe that the price ought to be fixed on wheat, rye, barley, corn, cotton, or on any other article which is produced by the farmers of this country. The farmers in the United States are unorganized; they can not combine to fix the price of their product. Every man who produces a commercial article is entitled to whatever price the law of supply and demand will award; and so long as he receives no greater price he can not be indicted as a profiteer. It is those who are in a situation to manipulate the law of supply and demand, to arrest and to thwart its operation, who can be subjected to the charge that they are profiteers. It is the man who is able by situation, combination, or otherwise to extort a larger price for his product than the law of supply and demand will award, who deserves the epithet of profiteer. The farmers do not come within that category, and they do not deserve that epithet.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] has the floor. Does the Senator from Illinois yield further?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the farmers of my State, while they think that the action of the Government in fixing prices so far as farm products are concerned is unfair and unjust, feel more deeply this situation; they see the Government fixing the prices of manufactured products, and fixing them in such a way as to insure to the manufacturers a fair profit, while they are not assured any profit at all.

Just for example, I will say that it is reported to me that the Government has fixed the price at which the milk condenseries in my State shall sell their product, and the milk condenseries are assured a profit of, I think, from 7 to 10 per cent; but the farmer who furnishes this condensery milk is selling his milk at a loss, and the price of milk is getting less all the time. It is things like that that drive the iron into the hearts of the farmers.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GORE. I am advised that one condensery in New York desired to pay a larger price for milk than the price fixed, but was forbidden to do so.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. SHERMAN resumed the speech begun by him on yesterday. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is always very kind in yielding, and I want to ask if he will yield to me to submit to the Senate a proposed unanimous-consent agreement. Of course, that would require the calling of the roll.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right; I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I submit a request for unanimous consent, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). The Secretary will state the proposed agreement.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow, May 4, 1918, the Senate will proceed without further debate to vote on the conference report on House bill 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference," and so forth, approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill if that presupposes a recess until 11 in the morning?

Mr. OVERMAN. It does, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest that the roll be called under the rule. The rule says that the roll shall be called on agreement for the final vote on a bill or resolution; but I think we ought to treat this as a bill, and I ask that the roll be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Martin	Smoot
Bankhead	Hardwick	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Henderson	New	Sutherland
Colt	Hollis	Norris	Swanson
Curtis	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Thomas
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Thompson
Fall	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Tillman
Fletcher	Kenyon	Poindexter	Trammell
France	King	Pomerene	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gallinger	Knox	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gerry	Lenroot	Sheppard	Walsh
Gore	Lodge	Sherman	Warren
Gronna	McKellar	Simmons	Watson
Guion	McNary	Smith, S. C.	Williams

Mr. GUION. I wish to make the announcement that my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], is unavoidably detained.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is unavoidably absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from North Carolina makes a request for unanimous consent, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow, May 4, 1918, the Senate will proceed without further debate to vote on the conference report on House bill 8753.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, under existing laws the query propounded by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] can be answered. Under Title XI of the espionage act, approved June 15, 1917, search warrants may be taken out. The search-warrant acts are very much extended under this title, and liberalized, so that papers and documents can be taken, which before might not have been possible. Subsection 2 of Title XI provides that when the property was used as a means of committing a felony it is subject to be taken by search warrant.

Second-class postal matter is property when it is sent by Mr. Haywood to me, for instance, in Washington from Chicago. I am the addressee. It is provided under this amendment that that shall be returned to Mr. Haywood. That is a proper case for regulation. But Mr. Haywood is thereby isolated from all postal facilities; he is cut off completely from all such communication of every kind.

That can be ascertained on second-class postal matter in one of two ways. Either an employee of the post office, an inspector, can go and seize Mr. Haywood's literature sent out from 1001 West Madison Street in Chicago or a search warrant can be issued by a United States commissioner. It is an ex parte matter. Any post-office inspector can make the necessary oath and can describe the kind of property to be taken. That will definitely ascertain the character of Mr. Haywood's propaganda. He is sending out a vast quantity of I. W. W. literature. I think I have 10 pounds of it in my office. Because I happen to be a voter in his jurisdiction he has sent me a great quantity of it. Some of it clearly ought not to go through the United States mails. I think it ought to be stopped.

Mr. NELSON. I imagine he sent it to you for the purpose of converting you.

Mr. SHERMAN. No doubt it is done for two purposes. One is for the moral effect on my opinions, and the other is to obtain subscriptions to defend divers of his associates who are now on trial in the United States district court in Chicago. He will not succeed, or he has not up to this time, in either one of his purposes; but he evidently is sending out literature in great quantities. That can be definitely ascertained. Everybody who receives that matter knows what the character of the literature is. Even the formality of a search warrant is not necessary to obtain evidence on which to seize it or to isolate Mr. Haywood.

Mr. Haywood is well know to be an I. W. W., and that he has collected about him a vast number of the lawless elements. At one time he was quite prominent in the Western Federation of Miners. He was responsible for a great deal of violence out about the Rocky Mountain country. Afterwards he went into the I. W. W. movement, and he is sending out literature of a great many kinds that is designed for no other purpose than for sedition and lawlessness in the United States. He is the visible head of the organized forces of physical violence. His associates who are now on trial are on trial charged with attempting the same things that are set out in the documents which I referred to. These matters can be seized under existing law. There is no difficulty about ascertaining their character.

The mail in Title XII, in section 1, is already capable of being used.

> Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter or thing, of any kind, in violation of any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and—

This matter that has come to my table in my office in Washington is nonmailable under section 1 of Title XII of the espionage act. It is second-class matter. It is newspaper; it is mailable as newspaper matter, circulars, pamphlets, and the like. So Mr. Haywood can be reached under the existing law. There is no difficulty in stopping Mr. Haywood from scattering his seditious literature. The only question is the detail of some post-office inspector to this duty. It requires no such provision as that contained in this conference committee report to stop Mr. Haywood. I think Mr. Haywood ought to be dealt with, and his matter ought to be excluded from the mails, and he himself ought to be isolated and totally cut off from all such postal facilities. The matter that he is sending out directly tends to the commission of a felony.

Under the espionage act of June 15, 1917, the offenses are felonious if they amount to anything, or it would be a felony under other provisions of the conference committee report of the bill as considered in the report, because some of these documents are directly calculated to interfere with the war operations. Some of them are contemptuous in character on the form of government of the United States, and they are felonies of themselves. I do not see that this provision in the conference report is necessary for the purpose of stopping seditious literature of this kind from being circulated through the mails.

There is one other provision I wish to call attention to, and I do not want to go into this subject entirely to-night. It is only the matter discussed by the Senator from Idaho and others that I wish more particularly to refer to in a few moments.

The Senator from Idaho referred to the violations that are under existing postal laws entirely specific, such as documents used or mail used for the purpose of committing frauds under the usual fraud order. That can be reached. That law has a good purpose in every particular. Then there is in addition to that matter that is promotive of acts that are forbidden by law, such as sales of lottery tickets and immoral practices of various kinds that are to be promoted thereby.

Friday, May 3, 1918.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, postal laws as they now are, I suggested last evening, if invoked and applied, would keep from the mails the seditious matter now coming to the desks of Members of Congress and to many of the citizens of this country. The purpose of such literature is evident. It passes beyond the limit of safety. No citizen of the country ought to undertake to scatter such printed matter, much less to be encouraged in it by the use of the postal facilities of the country.

I do not think, however, the remedy requires such drastic legislation as the kind contemplated in the section on the motion of the Senator from Montana and directly concerned in the conference committee report. It isolates any person against whom it is leveled, completely cuts him off from postal facility, not only in regard to the literature in question but all other postal matters.

[At this point Mr. MCNARY raised the question of a quorum, and the roll was called.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if this bill were enacted in its present form, it could be applied so as to wholly destroy a man's privilege of receiving mail of any kind; any mail addressed to him could be returned to the sender, not only documents of a seditious character but all other postal matter of every kind. Matter mailed on legitimate business, letters containing remittances or relative to any of the ordinary private or business transactions of life and not referring to any seditious documents or utterances of any kind, could all be excluded from the mails. The bill, if enacted into law, would so completely establish a postal quarantine as effectually to preclude him from transacting any of the ordinary business of private life; he could not pay the premium on his insurance policy unless he sent the currency or a draft by express; he could not communicate with his bank if he were absent from home; he could not obtain a remittance in any part of the United States; he would be wholly barred from conducting any of the ordinary transactions that would be necessary for his welfare, although not in any manner connected with the seditious matter that is sought to be excluded.

That is not a part of the punishment ordinarily inflicted on a citizen when he is tried, found guilty by a jury, and sentence by the court is imposed. I can understand in such an instance why he should not only be deprived of his liberty or fined, as the case might be, but should be denied the privilege of resuming his business until the expiration of his sentence; but this bill goes further and, without the verdict of a jury duly impaneled, without sentence imposed by any court, upon the mere dictum of an appointive officer, not even an elective officer, but one who is at the head of a department, his privilege of using the mails is arbitrarily—and it is the abuse of power against which we ought always attempt to guard in such measures as this—taken away from him, thus effectually isolating him from even lawful transactions that could be carried on through the Post Office Department.

For myself, before I can yield to that, I must understand that the country is in such a condition because of war that it is indispensable.

I can understand how in the case of invasion or rebellion it might be found necessary to suspend the civil law. Martial rule can take the place of the civil authorities, but only in the case of an actual clash of arms, in which event things can be done unknown to the civil law. The courts are then closed; there is no way of issuing or serving process; no way of collecting debts or imposing sentences by the civil or criminal courts; so that by necessity the civil law being ended and all the activities of the tribunals that expound the law and the authorities that enforce the law being suspended, it becomes necessary for some rule to take its place; martial rule is substituted.

In such circumstances, Mr. President, the authorities can take property without compensation; they can destroy property. It is a well-known principle of warfare that private property can be taken when an invasion or a battle is impending. When property is needed to fortify an army or to throw up works for the public defense, the military can seize the property, can burn it, can in any manner destroy it, and without paying a dollar for it either then or thereafter. Ordinarily, however, where a military engagement is not impending and there is no immediate pressing necessity for the use of the property, it is taken and paid for under acts of Congress or by civil process. It need not be paid for in advance, but it can be taken.

Emergencies, as we all understand, require extraordinary measures. It is not claimed, however, that such legislation as this could be justified on other than war-power grounds. We are constantly exercising war powers in this Capitol; measures have been enacted under war powers granted to Congress that we could not justify, and would not seek to justify, in ordinary times of peace. These war powers are contained in the powers granted to Congress, and they are found in the right to raise and support armies.

In this morning's press reports, Mr. President, there is found an abstract of a claim for additional powers made before the House Committee on Military Affairs yesterday by the Secretary of War. It was there proposed that general powers be vested in the Executive to call to arms any number of men in his discretion. Ordinarily I believe that an army ought to be raised and its limits fixed by congressional action. That power ought not to be delegated to the President. The power to raise and support armies is one of the powers especially vested in Congress. Congress fixes the number and the method of their selection, whether by volunteering or conscription; it provides by revenue bills for the raising of revenue, and by appropriation bills for the money that shall be expended for the support of the Army after it shall have been raised. I only refer to this to show the extreme length to which the abdication of power or its delegation by Congress is sought. We have gone now to the extreme limit. I voted for most of these measures, but I have not voted for some of them in the latter days here, and this is one of the measures I can not bring myself to support.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Did not the Senator understand the statement of the Secretary of War merely to mean that, within the limits authorized by Congress, the administration might be permitted to make the selections or call for the number of soldiers as provision could be made for their transportation and for their equipment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to believe that that was the sole purpose of the application made to the committee.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I know some little about the situation, and my understanding is that the purpose of the Secretary of War was, after Congress shall fix the number of soldiers that shall be raised, that it shall be left to the administration, to the War Department, to call for that number as ships may be provided and as we shall be permitted to equip them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the senior Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Illinois that that power is already contained in the existing law under which Congress only provides the ultimate number of soldiers that can be called into the service. I think the Senator was correct in the statement he made that the law now proposed, if I remember correctly, gives the President the authority to call any number of soldiers into the service.

Mr. SHERMAN. Within the age limits of 21 and 31.

Mr. SMOOT. Within the age limits; that is as I understand it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless some additional legislation is required, I can see no reason why the Secretary of War should have made the statement to the House committee that he did. It was made with the idea, as I understand, of delegating further powers.

The war powers are well understood; they extend not only to the raising of armies, but to all the supplies that are incidental to the support of armies. They can go even further; they can be applied to protect the Army even in peace areas, in all of the camps, cantonments, garrisons, or coast defenses, forts—in fact, at every place where there is a force of the United States stationed; they can be applied to all naval stations and naval craft, to everything that is connected directly or indirectly with the Navy.

I repeat, the war powers are well understood; there is no controversy here, I apprehend, between those who oppose the conference report and those who favor it in regard to the execution of war powers or in the delegation of war powers to the Executive. I believe, however, there is a well-grounded controversy in regard to the surrender by Congress of war powers that it ought properly to keep.

They are the war powers exercised by Congress that are of a discretionary character, but dependent upon our republican form of government to justify and measure the extent of their exercise. How much money shall be levied? How much shall be collected in revenue bills? How much shall be appropriated by the supply bills for the Army? When shall we extend the draft age beyond 31 years, or when shall we drop it below 21 years? Shall we extend the draft age to 50 or 60 years? Those are matters of legislative discretion. In the exercise of the power to raise and support armies both the levying of taxes and the drafting of men are discretionary matters with Congress. No appropriations that Congress may make for raising and supporting armies can extend, however, for more than two years. That takes it up to the general election. It is with a view of constant consultation with the source of political power in this country that this restraint is placed upon Congress. It ought not to be delegated to another. The House of Representatives, the source of revenue bills, expires every two years, which is in keeping with the salutary principle that we shall not go beyond this period in the exercise of the great powers of taxation upon which armies ultimately depend for their maintenance. This is only saying that the American people exercise their right of free government by recurring elections. In exercising that power we have passed what is commonly known as the conscription act. Within the limits of 21 and 31 years men subject to military duty have been registered. The extent to which they shall be called into service is a matter of congressional discretion. That power can, it is true, be delegated to the Executive and, under certain conditions, ought to be delegated to the Executive; but at present, with no greater speed, with no greater accounting for powers already delegated than we can find before the Senate, I do not think we are justified in delegating further powers to the Executive at this time, nor are we justified in further blanket legislation appropriating money, in view of some expenditures which have not yet properly been accounted for.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the matter before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report on the espionage bill is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the discussion, I was afraid it had been displaced by some other business. I am measuring the probable exercise of power asked by the use of that already granted and its enlargement proposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, under the provisions of the pending bill the further delegation of power is to the Postmaster General. It is an Executive power, because it at last is exercised by an appointee of the Executive. It will only be in addition to powers that have already been granted. There is an espionage act that has been in force for some time, to which this proposed law will be an amendment. If the espionage act were enforced, I think it would prevent a great many of the complaints which are made of various imprudent actions, to say the least, of citizens and aliens.

Mr. President, there is in the press reports this statement from the officers of the Department of Justice in Chicago:

> From now on anyone who "does anything willfully" with the obvious purpose of interfering with the proper functions of the Government in the prosecution of the war can be arrested and, what is more, can be convicted. "We can fill the jails," said one operative. "It is just what we have been waiting for. It gives us the power we have lacked."

In Chicago to-day William D. Haywood has an office at 1001 West Madison Street, as I remember, and he has been there for some time operating for the I. W. W. He is sending out great quantities of literature, and, as already stated, that literature no one questions is highly seditious in character. It is not only intended to give aid and comfort to the I. W. W., but it is directly intended to hinder the Government in the prosecution of its war purposes and in the exercise of its war power.

In addition to that, a gentleman who has recently been to Washington, and I think appeared before the committee not many days ago—yesterday or day before yesterday—Mr. Townley, has uttered and has spread broadcast in the Northwest more seditious sentiments than the I. W. W. operating out of Chicago. Mr. Haywood is subject to arrest. He can be checked and punished, if the district attorney of Chicago would invoke existing laws. He claims that further legislation is necessary. So do the State authorities. They say that no convictions can be had. That must be, then, because there is an entire absence of evidence, or of such evidence as would convince a jury that a conviction is justified.

Mr. Townley is responsible for the language which I am about to read. Instead of arresting him on such language, instead of stopping him, even after the espionage law was passed—it has been in force since last fall—he has been running at large, uttering his sentiments at pleasure. He is in Washington. He has abused his liberty and his citizenship. He is under indictment for arrest now but not under any act of Congress or as a result of any prosecution by a Federal officer. He is now being prosecuted under the State laws of Minnesota. Mr. Townley used this language on the 8th day of July, 1917. It is worse than anything used by the I. W. W. He has never apologized for it or retracted it:

> We have been dragged into war by the American autocracy, dragged into a war we did not want, and we are told it is a war to liberate the people from the control of autocracy. We are about to send millions of our young men over to Europe to fight the German autocracy—

> while the big-bellied, red-necked American plutocrats, ten times worse than the German autocrats, coin the blood of our young men into profits for themselves, we are about to send our soldiers over to fight the German autocracy, who charge their people $8.50 per barrel for flour; we are sending them over to fight for the American autocracy, who charge the American people $17 per barrel for flour. You are about to have these young fellows drafted into the Army, and they will be sent over to Europe to fight. They will have their legs shot off—

And then he enumerates various of the hardships of military service, which I will insert at the conclusion of my remarks, without reading, but repeating that—

> American plutocrats continue to obtain their extortionate profits of $4,000,000,000 per year while loudly shouting that this is a war for liberty and democracy.

This same offender, Mr. President, was taken by the censor of publicity, Mr. Creel, to various Federal officials, in order that he might interview them, and assure them that he was a good American citizen now. He may be granted absolution for his sins by the public authorities; but the man who, on the 8th of July, 1917, at Buffalo Lake, in Sargent County, N. Dak., delivered himself of these sentiments, at heart was not a good citizen, whatever promises he may make now, however plausible may be his denunciation of others, however much he may accuse others of falsehoods. Mr. Townley is on record not only in this extract from his speech but in many others as a seditious character himself. As I stated a few days ago, he was five times on the platform with Frank Little in the State of Montana. He was there for seditious purposes. He was caught in the company of the I. W. W.'s in that State. They were engaged in disturbances of the public peace. What they did is well known in that State. Mr. Townley's connection with their seditious and murderous plans is not so well known.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Is this the same Townley who is the president of this new league, the Nonpartisan League?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. And the man who is attempting to organize the farmers in the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Do those who are the members of this organization know of his criminal utterances, his disloyal sentiments, and approve of him and still retain him as the leader and president of their organization?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; he is the same one, I will say to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. It would seem to indicate that the members of this Nonpartisan League are disloyalists at heart, and are putting forth as their representative a man who ought to be in the penitentiary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator is correct; and I think many of the members of the Nonpartisan League, upon a discovery of Mr. Townley's conduct and his affiliations in very recent times, are withdrawing themselves from that organization.

Mr. President, the extract which I have read is signed by 17 persons. I suppose every Member of the Senate has a copy of it. It bears the marks of being one of numerous carbon copies made. The men who signed this are farmers, merchants, druggists, and physicians at different points in North Dakota.

It has become quite popular to shock audiences by statements of a radical character, and this applies to the present war; it applies to certain business men in the United States; it applies to some of the authorities. It reflects upon every Member of Congress who voted to declare war, to raise and support armies; it reflects upon the President; it reflects upon all his Cabinet, especially upon the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. It is in an existing controversy, a war with a public enemy. Remarks of that kind and their repetition, their introduction into the mails of the country, directly tend to interfere with the progress of the war. They tend, in the language to which I have no objection applied in that particular instance, to cast contumely upon or bring the United States Government into disrepute.

I dislike to be specific in mentioning names, but a week or two ago it became necessary, according to my lights, to do so, and accordingly I did. I do not pursue this course in the Senate voluntarily, but because there is no other way to reach the evils which I regard as calling for public criticism.

If Mr. Townley should be arrested under this bill, if it should be enacted, how would he defend himself? For instance, I am in receipt of a letter on the arrest of Theodore B. Pape, a lawyer in good standing in Quincy, Ill. I think he is of German parentage. He is of the majority party. He was arrested under existing law. He would not buy any liberty bonds. He said he hoped or believed that this war ought to end in a draw between this country and Germany. For that he was arrested and is now under bond. He defends himself by saying that in 1916 he supported in his political efforts a certain ticket because the party it represented had kept us out of war, and that he believed we ought to preserve a strict neutrality; that he himself, in refusing to buy liberty bonds and in asking that the war end in a draw, is only carrying out what he voted to carry out in November, 1916. I think he is wrong. Conditions have changed since then, but it is characteristic of a good many of our German friends that they change their attitude slowly. Mr. Pape can not adjust himself to the newly organized forces of democracy. He is a victim to his inability to change rapidly, to say the least of it. He does not change his opinions with that degree of facility and with that rapidity that his chief did, in whose word he placed reliance and whose ticket he supported. That is his claim. I think he is wrong about it. He must adjust himself to the declaration of war made in Congress and to the execution of war powers pursuant to that declaration.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. My attention has been diverted from the remarks of the Senator, so that I am not sure that I followed all he was saying; but I understood him to read a statement purporting to set forth the language of Mr. Townley, uttered at some meeting in one of the Dakotas.

Mr. SHERMAN. In North Dakota.

Mr. REED. Mr. Townley appeared before the Military Affairs Committee on, I think, the day before yesterday, and under oath denied the truth of a number of newspaper statements which were read to him, and I think that among those statements was the one the Senator read or one very similar to it in terms. Mr. Townley claimed that the press had deliberately misrepresented him. I hold no brief for Mr. Townley; but I know that the Senator from Illinois, if he had been advised of the fact that I have just stated, would have stated that fact in connection with what he has said.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. He is entitled to the benefit of the denial, and to be heard at proper times and places. I assume that the Military Affairs Committee in due time will report the evidence taken in its hearings, so that it may be accessible to the general public.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Notwithstanding he may have so appeared before the committee and have so testified, if he was with Frank Little in Butte and appeared upon the public stands with him and supported the activities of the I. W. W. in Butte or elsewhere, then he deserves all of the condemnation, and more, that was bestowed upon him by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I agree with the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. I think the record of the Military Affairs Committee will show that I pretty severely cross-examined the gentleman, and no reasonable man will go further than I would go in condemning any man who utters the sentiments that have been attributed to Mr. Townley; but, of course, no fair man would convict him for uttering those sentiments if, in fact, he did not utter them, and I thought it was only fair to say what I did to the Senator from Illinois. As to whether he is a member of the I. W. W. or not I do not know. As to whether he is a good man or not I do not know; but I would not convict him for uttering these expressions because he had done something else, and neither would the Senator from Utah. I simply thought I ought to say what I did to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the hearings before the committee can ascertain the weight of the evidence finally. The 17 men whose names are attached to this statement, however, say that all of them heard this speech made. Among them is A. N. Cariblom, who at one time was the auditor of the State of North Dakota. He certainly would not have his name attached to a statement of this kind without being duly advised of the truth of it. These 17 men, however, can be brought before the committee, and it can be ascertained whether this statement is true or false; and in justice to Mr. Townley, who is entitled to justice along with the rest of us, the matter ought to be pursued to a conclusion, so that it may be ascertained where the weight of evidence is, and that the truth may be known concerning Mr. Townley. I have no desire to do him an injustice.

I have called attention to these things that he has said that have been well authenticated so far as I can judge without interviewing witnesses myself. Newspaper men from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Stillwater, and various other points in Minnesota, have written me that they have attended his meetings, and they have vouched for the accuracy of seditious remarks made by him similar to the ones I have read. So when the hearing is finally determined in all probability there will be a considerable volume of testimony on Mr. Townley's alleged seditious statements.

I referred to the defense, which I think is entirely unjustified, set up by the gentleman referred to at Quincy, Ill. In addition to that I read from an address made October 16, 1916, at Jersey City, N. J., by the Secretary of War. The Secretary says:

> Some people say they can not understand the President's Mexican policy, and I want to tell you why. They have forgotten our own history and the Declaration of Independence, and the President has not forgotten either. Why are we impatient at the Mexicans? We say they do not respect the lives and property of our people. Perhaps they don't. We say they do not pay their honest debts. They don't. We say they are a ragamuffin lot. We say their money is not any good. That is true. It is only worth two or three cents on the dollar. We say they do not respect church property. That is also true.
> The amazing thing is that people never respect these things in a revolution. We had a revolution, and from the beginning to the end of that the conditions in this country were so like Mexico that it is perfectly astounding to read.
> Washington's soldiers, in the march to Valley Forge, stole everything they could lay their hands on. They stole the silver vessels from the churches and melted them up to buy drink; they drove ministers of the gospel and preachers of churches out of their churches and out of the country. The money of the Confederation was so worthless that when they tried to make merchants take it the latter hid their provisions in their cellars.

On the 23d of December, 1777, Washington reported to Congress that 2,898 men were unfit for duty because they were barefoot or otherwise naked. Only 8,200 men were present for duty. It is estimated that 3,000 men perished on these hills during the six months of the encampment, while in the 26 principal engagements of the Revolution the number of killed and wounded did not greatly exceed a total of 9,000. Three thousand perished on the hills alone. These are the men of Valley Forge, in the winter of 1777 and 1778, of whom the present Secretary of War says that "they stole the silver vessels from the churches and melted them up to buy drink; they drove ministers of the gospel and preachers of churches out of their churches and out of the country."

Let me read this provision of law, which is just about the same as the provisions in all the State laws on slander and libel. Most of the State laws on criminal libel have practically the same provision:

> A libel is a malicious defamation, expressed either by printing or by signs or pictures or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or publish the natural defects of one who is alive, and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or financial injury.

Under the ordinary definition of a criminal libel any descendant in blood of a soldier or officer of Valley Forge would have a right under such a statute, if the language was repeated in the State where that is the law, or in any other State having a similar law, to bring a prosecution for criminal libel against the Secretary of War for that utterance. How can we blame the Townleys, how can we blame the Haywoods, how can we blame the Victor Bergers, how can we blame the I. W. W.'s in the hop fields of the coast, in the wheat fields of the Northwest, in the cornfields of the Mississippi Valley, in the autumn husking season, when they deliver themselves of their diatribes against the law and order of communities or when they speak of the soldiers living when the Secretary of War speaks of the soldiers dead in such language? Such language as Townley's, which he is alleged to have uttered of the war, and of Secretary Baker ought not to be used either of the living or dead.

Mr. President, there is a very great latitude, and properly so, in campaigns. This utterance was made in the campaign of 1916 in the State of New Jersey. I apprehend that it produced no immediate results favorable to the speaker. Such things usually bring their own punishment, and nobody makes any complaint about it. I only allude to these matters to show that those who now are very great sticklers for the amendment of the law so that the truth can not be told, even with good motives and for justifiable ends, propose to apply to everybody in this unhappy state of public affairs a rule which they themselves have never observed.

I think every one of the 48 States in the Union has in its bill of rights a provision similar to the one which I shall now read:

> Every person may freely speak, write, and publish on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty; and in all trials for libel, both civil and criminal, the truth, when published with good motives and for justifiable ends, shall be a sufficient defense.

These are criminal libels that are referred to in the pending bill. Whenever there is a prosecution it will be by criminal process, on indictment by a grand jury, because the punishment may extend to confinement in the penitentiary. It is a crime which, when a defendant is convicted, is denominated an infamous offense. Mr. President, it is well known that the first 10 amendments to the Constitution were adopted very soon after the formation of the present Federal Government. They were adopted in pursuance of a common understanding with the ratifying States. Some States of the original 13 were reluctant to ratify the Constitution. They were jealous of their local State powers; so there was an understanding that this series of amendments would be made in the event they ratified the Constitution.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FALL. Before the Senator leaves the point upon which he has just been addressing the Senate, I will state that I have listened with a good deal of interest to the extracts which he has read into the RECORD from the remarks of the Secretary of War, and I should like to ask the Senator a question. He is now discussing the conference report upon H. R. 8753, which act itself provides a penalty of $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, for willfully uttering, printing, writing, or publishing, among other things—> any language intended to bring the * * * military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

If this act were now a law and the Secretary of War would repeat the words he, I understand, uttered, would he, in the opinion of the Senator, be liable to punishment under the terms of the act for uttering words calculated to bring the Army of the United States into contempt and scorn and contumely or disrepute?

Mr. SHERMAN. He would be entitled to a jury trial.

Mr. FALL. And the bill provides for a jury trial, of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. He is liable to indictment. Such language directly tends to bring the Government of the United States into disrepute. I do not think he will be prosecuted.

Mr. FALL. I will say to the Senator it is a fact that, in my judgment, he could be prosecuted, and that is one of my reasons for supporting this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think he would be prosecuted, because I do not regard the present Attorney General of the United States as a vigorous prosecutor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly read once again the utterances of the present Secretary of War which the Senator quoted?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. I regret that such an utterance was ever made. I want to preface the rereading of it by saying that in the Continental Army, upon reading the confidential reports, it appears that like all other armies there were a few improper characters found in the service. They were court-martialed, they were sent to the guardhouse for larceny, for drunkenness, for various offenses, but that these lapses of an occasional kind, an exceptional character, were such as to justify describing the men at Valley Forge in such language there is no historic proof. If that were in a school history, how would it be regarded in any part of the Union? Who would want to read it? Who would wish it taught to his children? I remember in the steel vault at Albany, N. Y., some of the memoranda and writings of George Washington, one in particular, which contains his opinion of his generals. It was preserved in that form so that in the event of his death, because he took risks, he was under fire, those who succeeded him might have the benefit of his knowledge of his generals. In that is the statement about "Mad" Anthony Wayne. All of you who have read it will remember, without my going into details, his opinion of Gen. Wayne as a brave officer, and without quoting some parts of it, however, one who always needed some one to exercise over him discretionary and supervisory power. He went through analyzing the characteristics of others of his generals. Those were matters that ought not to be published in any school history or any general history of the United States. I would not even quote here so as to incorporate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the substance of some things he said about his own generals. But that is the exception to the general rule of the men whom he gathered about him to fight the Revolutionary War. To make that a pretense for a general charge against all the officers of the Revolutionary War would be a gross libel upon their memory. It would be in addition to that, Mr. President, a lapse from the duty of any good citizen of this country. With this preface I read this language:

> Washington's soldiers in the march to Valley Forge stole everything they could lay their hands on. They stole the silver vessels from the churches and melted them up to buy drink; they drove ministers of the gospel and preachers of churches out of their churches and out of the country. The money of the Confederation was so worthless that when they tried to make merchants take it the latter hid their provisions in their cellars.

What they needed, then, was a food administrator, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have seen it repeatedly stated that the present Secretary of War is or was a pacifist, but I did not know before that he had gone the length the Senator quotes him as having gone in denunciation of the Army fighting under Gen. Washington.

Mr. SHERMAN. He loses no opportunity to oppose war, even in a revolutionary cause which resulted in the founding of the Government under which we are now living here. He undertook to justify the Villa banditti of Mexico by the outrageous statements read that a Mexican bandit and murderous robber was no worse than Washington's soldiers at Valley Forge.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] spoke of prosecutions. There will be no prosecutions whatever the merits of the controversy might be. The Attorney General does not prosecute under existing law with that pertinacity and vigor that ought to mark a great prosecutor representing the punitive branch of the Federal Government. He either does not well understand the criminal laws of this country or he exercises a degree of color blindness when he approaches offenders.

I shall not insert in the RECORD these matters, but the assistant district attorney in Tennessee was recently removed from office. I suppose it will stir up a great controversy, but I do not care to pursue it. I am only stating the fact as it has occurred. He was removed, whether rightfully or wrongfully I shall not stop to inquire. He had been active in collecting evidence and presenting charges against the publisher of a newspaper known as the Nashville Banner. Because of his activity in presenting charges against the owner and publisher of this newspaper as an alien enemy, as he regarded him, he was, as he says, removed from office. No prosecution has ever been had of the editor of this newspaper. No prosecution will be had. The evidence would tend to show that he is an alien, that his utterances previous to the declaration of war were friendly to the nations now a public enemy. Because of this investigation by the assistant district attorney I think the proof before me shows he was removed upon the demand of the newspaper man referred to. I only allude to this, not for any purpose at this time of doing more than serving a purpose in pointing the moral and adorning the tale of prosecutions in the United States. If it should be proper at some future occasion when the issue is raised, it probably will be examined in due form and hearings had, if the Senate should regard it as worthy of that investigation.

These amendments, the first 10 to which I alluded a while ago, were in pursuance of a common understanding by the ratifying States that similar amendments would be presented and ratified in due time. Amendment No. 1 says:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Those are a very formal sort of rights. We read them over and think very little of them. They are like the air we breathe in this country. No one ever questions them until they are denied to us. We would never understand fully the benefit we derive from those apparently simple provisions, like the air that comes to everybody who needs it, every living person. We never appreciate it until it is withdrawn and then we suddenly learn that it is the breath of life. So these apparently simple provisions which go with us as a matter of course we seldom understand until the rights guaranteed fail or are withdrawn, and then we understand that they are the very breath of civil liberty and of free government.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Recurring to the removal of the Tennessee district attorney, the public press at that time, a few days ago, announced as I read the article that the district attorney had been removed because it was thought he had not been sufficiently vigorous in prosecutions under the espionage act and other acts connected with the war. I want to inquire of the Senator from Illinois if he read the statement in the papers, and if the Senator is in a position to tell us which of the two stories is correct.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would not undertake to state. I think that is a proper matter for the Judiciary Committee of the Senate to investigate.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire, then, why the Senator saw fit on the floor of the Senate to give the other version of the matter and not to advert to the fact that the public press of the country announced that he was removed because he had not been sufficiently vigorous?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that was the charge. When the Senator asks why I did not refer to it, I apprehend that Mr. E. B. Stahlman, the newspaper man referred to, will, if a hearing is had, present the charges against the assistant district attorney of Tennessee, Mr. Campen.

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to pursue it further, but I was curious to inquire why the Senator overlooked the public press statement of the matter and gave what appeared to be the reason assigned by the man who had been removed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was quite sure that before the controversy was ended in the Senate Mr. Stahlman or others would be heard from and the Senator's curiosity gratified. I thank the Senator for bringing up that view of it. The press reports that were made soon after said that Marvin Campen, as I remember, was removed because he was not sufficiently vigorous in prosecution. Mr. Campen, from documents I have in my possession, says that he was removed because he presented reasons why Mr. Stahlman himself was an alien and a naturalized resident of the United States and was not in sympathy with the prosecution of the war either before or since the declaration of war. For that he says that he was threatened by Mr. Stahlman that he would be removed, and his removal followed thereafter in due course. That is his statement, but whether it would be sustained by the evidence at the hearing is a matter that, if it should come before a committee, can be attended to as other disputed questions of fact are.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, another question. Does not the Senator think that the statement by him on the floor of the Senate of the reason assigned by the officer who was removed is calculated to leave upon the public mind the impression that the Department of Justice is not as vigorous as it ought to be in ferreting out those who are guilty of disloyal utterances?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator think that he ought, upon the evidence he has given, aid in instilling in the minds of the public that impression?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. I think I am justified in saying all that I have said and much more.

In addition, if the Senator will permit, I do not want to exhibit any ex parte unfairness, but I communicated with the Attorney General myself on some matters that I thought required attention. I will refer to them in a moment. Whether any statement I may make here would carry any weight in Tennessee or not, I do not know.

I have made a number of statements here probably contrary to the traditions of the Senate, contrary ordinarily to my own custom of late years. I use the names of persons. There is no way that I know to get results unless I speak the names of the human agencies. Now, whether it produces any results, I do not know. I only know that a number of infuriated, excited gentlemen got together in my home town last Sunday on the south side of the courthouse—several thousand of them, it is claimed—and passed resolutions to the effect that I was entitled to no credence. Evidently I produce no very satisfactory impression upon that multitude. It might have been satisfactory from their viewpoint, but from my viewpoint, in producing convictions, it has exactly the opposite effect from what the Senator from Montana had hoped.

I have been denounced by very many of them in years past, and I am probably not supersensitive to criticism from that source. My epidermis has received a toughening process from other like resolutions from these gentlemen and their associates. I have had no very exuberant hope that I would convince them even when I made the statement about them, but it was about these same gentlemen and it is in that connection that I communicated with the Attorney General, and from which in part I received the impression to which I gave utterance a while ago, that he is not just as vigorous in prosecution of offenders, especially where remedial justice would be served by apprehending some who contemplate, or say they contemplate, the commission of crime in certain localities.

There are in the soft-coal belt I referred to about 100,000 soft-coal miners. Nearly all of them, the greater part at least, are unionized. These mines produce the fuel for a very great industrial community. I think the bituminous coal tonnage produced in that area exceeds that of any soft-coal area in the United States. The greater part of the power generated in Chicago, in Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, Canton, Ill., up and down the Mississippi Valley for manufacturing purposes is derived from this coal belt, and as well some of the manufactories in East St. Louis and a great deal of the manufacturing in St. Louis across the river in Missouri are furnished from this coal belt. A strike is disastrous.

The man who is the chairman or president of the Illinois Federation of Labor is active, I repeat in spite of his vociferous denials on various occasions, in encouraging strikes. Referring to various strikes that have taken place in the past, in which cold-blooded murders have occurred of not less than 40 men, coal mines have been dynamited and destroyed, and a very large amount of property destroyed. I have documents in my possession with his name signed to them calling upon these men to remember the same methods they used in putting other of their employers out of business in years past. I have reports from a credible agency of more than 25 witnesses of actual conditions in that area of men and women, of hack drivers, plumbers, coal miners, firemen of railways, firemen in the municipal department, firemen of various factories in that area where they say they are only waiting for a favorable opportunity to renew the sympathetic strike.

These statements were made before this document I have in my possession was signed by the president of the Federation of Labor. The matter is one that can easily kindle an explosion. I have seen on three occasions strikes in this area. They are of a peculiarly vindicative and bloody character. They are destructive, and on three occasions martial rule was declared by the governor, and as high as 5,000 troops drew a cordon around the affected area to restore order.

With matters in this surcharged condition, with the public atmosphere in that condition, this statement was made encouraging these men to promote and practice another strike with all the attendant disorders.

There are in this area and dependent upon this fuel a great many factories. They have war contracts. From military vehicles in Rock Island, the arsenals and the island of Rock Island, and the Mississippi River carload after carload of coal goes from this area into that plant for the generation of power. From the vehicles in and about Moline and Chicago, motor trucks are sent to France, gun carriages made, the artillery that is in course of preparation to be used upon our allies' front is made from power generated by this coal. I consider in the exercise of a war power alone that a strike taking away fuel from this needed industry, a strike stopping this production of the war munitions, is of itself a direct interference with the preparation or with the support of the Army and Navy of the United States.

I think under existing law the authorities familiar with those who interfere with our Army in that way, whether they be members of labor unions, whether they be dishonest contractors, or whether they be seditious men upon the platform in this country, can all be dealt with, and they all ought to be dealt with. I called upon the Attorney General and presented him these reports, stating the conditions, and asked him to take action through his authority. The reply which I have in my files is that the department does not think anything can be done. Following on this failure, which I communicated to those interested in contracts and in keeping the peace in this area, they appealed to the governor. The lieutenant governor of the State appeared here when this act was pending before it went to conference. He came from the Attorney General's office and said that something had to be done, that they could not preserve the public peace, and asked me to lend myself to the passage of this original measure. I gave the answer to him that I gave on the floor here some days ago. I told him to go home, as far as I was concerned, and tell the officers of the State, beginning with the governor, to exercise their lawful powers and preserve the peace by the State authorities. I said further, if I was in the governor's office there would be peace there or I would know the reason why; that I would exhaust every able-bodied man in summoning a posse that there was in that State. I said, "You do not need more laws; what you need is enforcement of the ones you now have."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator kindly tell us under what law he thinks that prosecution could have been conducted by the Federal authorities?

Mr. SHERMAN. Interference with the armies.

Mr. WALSH. Can you give a reference to the statute?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. I can find it for you. It is a war power as well as under recent acts of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator can put it in at any time. It could not have been the espionage act, because he was opposed to it when it was before the Senate, and he is opposed to it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will do so. The war power punishing interfering with the Army is already in the espionage act. It is already in sections 1342 and 1343 of the statutes, in which the Army and Navy are protected. I was not opposed to that, because it was passed before I was ever in Congress. It deals with the interference directly with supplies going to or the movements of the Army. I think it could be dealt with by court-martial even under existing law under section 1343 of the Revised Statutes. The threatened action to which I directed the attention of the Attorney General could have been reached under section 4 of the food and fuel administration act, which has been effective since August 10, 1917. That section says:

> It is hereby made unlawful for any person * * * to conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person (a) to limit the facilities for * * * producing * * * any necessaries; (b) to restrict the supply of any necessaries.

Coal is a necessary element of fuel. To limit its production is a direct violation of the law. Still the Attorney General could find no law to punish those who promoted strikes and stopped coal production.

These 10 amendments that were made immediately following the creation of the present form of government contain several of the guaranteed civil rights of a citizen of the United States. Suppose it were proposed here that we repeal the right by an act of Congress, or abrogate it, rather, of the people peaceably to assemble. It is war times, it is said, and we ought not to have the right to assemble; it might lead to seditious multitudes. Suppose we petition the Congress to nullify or abrogate the right of petition, constantly exercised as one of the routine orders of business in this body. Is there any occasion for it at this time? If there is no occasion to abrogate the right peaceably to assemble and the right to petition for a redress of grievances, there is no right therefore to interfere with the freedom of speech or of the press. They are in the same amendment. They are a part of the same guaranty. They are an essential element of the civil liberty of the American citizen, and if one is to be taken away then all of them can as well be taken away. I can understand upon certain conditions, if the civil law were suspended and we were living under martial rule, that all constitutional guaranties would end until the resumption of civil government.

The law of the camp would be the law of the land when the Constitution ceased its protection.

There is only one occasion, Mr. President, when a right can be suspended by Congress, when, in the absence of martial law, a civil or a common-law right can be taken away. We can suspend the law of habeas corpus. I have always inclined to the view that that writ of common right or any other common-law right ought not to be suspended except by an act of Congress, and not by an Executive order. So long as civil authority is paramount in territory subject to the jurisdiction of the Constitution there can be no suspension by the Executive. These rights guaranteed by the Constitution must remain. They can be suspended, not by an act of Congress, but only by an invasion or a rebellion of that character which suspends civil authority in the territory concerned. Then all these civil guaranties that preserve the liberty of the citizen are at an end.

I have gone through a good many losing fights in smaller jurisdictions, and I am prepared to see this voted through in the way the conference committee has reported it. I am not possessed of any abounding enthusiasm or faith in what the Senate will do so far as rejecting the report is concerned. I am only making these observations in pursuance of what I consider a duty, to state the views of myself and my colleagues who are of a like opinion. Mr. President, it seems to me if we suspend these rights or attempt to do so by an act of Congress we ought to inquire what the limitations on our power are. We have no right by law to establish religion. A State may do so by its constitutional law or by a statute if it wishes. It might create a State church; that is its local affair; but Congress can not do so. That is a limitation. Immediately following a prohibition of the exercise of the power respecting the establishment of religion follows a prohibition on Congress of restricting the freedom of speech or of the press. That being a limitation upon Congress, it necessarily leaves any restriction upon the liberty of speech or of the press in the hands of the States. The only way we can justify any such power here, Mr. President, is under the exercise of the war powers of Congress. In the exercise of the war powers I believe we can prohibit the use of language that casts reflections upon the form of government, the Constitution, the Army, the Navy, the uniform, and the flag. I wish to inquire a moment, under the language of this bill as embodied in this conference report, what it is when it comes to a matter of evidence—and that is the way all these matters finally come in the enforcement of penal statutes—what as a matter of evidence would be regarded as anything uttered or printed that is contemptuous or abusive about the form of the Government of the United States, the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces?

Abusive language relative to the form of government is likely to be construed to be an attack upon republican government or upon free popular government. Conceding that is what it means, then a mere criticism of the Government in its details of operation would not of itself be an offense. The bill continues, further, that the Constitution must not be reflected upon in contemptuous or abusive language nor the military or naval forces.

When we come to the military forces, Mr. President, what would be contemptuous or abusive language about the military forces? Who decides it? When it comes to a postal matter, the Postmaster General decides it, and from him there is no appeal in a practical sense. A week or a month or several months must elapse before a final hearing could be had setting aside any unjust orders he made, and in that time bankruptcy and ruin would be inflicted upon a newspaper publisher or the publisher of a magazine or a periodical. Would I be allowed, Mr. President, to say what I have said on the floor of the Senate about the Secretary of War? All these laws must in some way be enforced. I am as ardent in my desire to see this war conducted successfully as is the Secretary of War himself. The criticisms I make are because, as I think, they are not conducting the war in the most efficient way; the criticisms are meant to be and are constructive criticisms. What would be contemptuous or abusive language about the Secretary of War? How far could I go? What could I say? What suggestions could I make? What errors could I recite? What constructive criticism would be allowed before I would be charged, if I were merely outside of the Senate Chamber, with using contemptuous and abusive language about the military forces of the United States? Must I be held to speak of those forces in the aggregate, as a unit, as an entirety, or if I speak of a division or of a brigade or of a regiment or of a company or of an officer or of the officers in the aggregate, or if I speak of the Secretary of War critically alone, am I then using, according to the interpretation of those charged with the execution of the law, contemptuous and abusive language?

No one would question what would be contemptuous and abusive language about the uniform. For it we have a reverence and a respect, as we have for the colors themselves; but if we criticize the method in which the war is being conducted, sometimes by fallible human agents, would it not be said that necessarily the inference is to reflect by construction abusively or contemptuously upon the Army, the Navy, or the uniform or the flag? That is a question of construction. Constructive criminal libel would be a doctrine similar to constructive treason in the arbitrary rule of the early Kings of England. I would greatly like the Senator in charge of the bill, the very capable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], to say, if he takes occasion to comment upon the bill, whether a criticism of a military officer or of the Secretary or Assistant Secretary of War or of any military authority—a criticism that is true, based upon a desire to improve the service—would be regarded as contemptuous and abusive in the language of this bill? I am interested in that. I make the inquiry; and I hope to be enlightened by the Senator from North Carolina before this discussion closes.

Again, there is this further provision in the bill to the effect that no one shall use language that will incite or provoke or encourage resistance to the United States. How shall that be construed? If a Senator—one outside not being a member of the Committee on Military Affairs—should say on the platform what has been said here on airplane construction as to the expenditure of money and the surprising lack of adequate results, would not that be regarded as something that would incite resistance to the United States? That information taken to Germany, to say nothing of our own citizens; that information carried to the public enemy, would in all probability incite stronger resistance by the inability shown to produce results with an astonishingly large sum of money. That is the truth, told with the motive of preventing the repetition of such expenditures and the loss of priceless time; is not that a good motive, and is not any good citizen justified, if that be true, in saying so, and calling upon the authorities who have power in this matter either delegated by Congress or inherent by constitutional grants in the Executive to end that condition of affairs? If that were done with good motives, for justifiable ends, and were true, with this stricken out it would render the critic liable to fine and imprisonment, or possibly both.

That brings me, Mr. President, to the statement that these are all governmental matters; they are subjects that concern the administration of government by people who have certain inalienable rights protected by constitutional guaranties. There is no such thing as a hereditary Executive in this country, nor is there a House of Lords. All of the Members of the other branch of this Congress go through the process of the ballot box every two years. It corresponds with the members of the House of Commons. The Senate is now elected by the direct vote of the same voters who in the 435 districts in the United States elect the Members of the other House. With matters in that condition, our Executive is elected every four years. It is a Government that, therefore, essentially is public in character, and one that is popular in its exercise, because it appeals to the public opinion of the voter in order to effect any changes that are supposed to be necessary for the public welfare. Therefore these questions become political in character. I am not using the term "political" in its narrow sense; I am using it in its governmental sense. These questions are submitted to those having the right of franchise in the States. They directly appeal, therefore, to the voter to exercise his judgment. To that end all manner of information is proper. The voter is in turn asked to exercise the right of petition here for the redress of grievances. All have a right to refer to the voter and to give him whatever information they think is true in order that he may arrive at a correct conclusion.

The reason why I can not agree with the Senators who support this measure, as my good friend, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], does, is because we are going back 225 years. In the reign of James II, beginning in 1685 and running up to 1688, these questions all came up. The right of petition, the right peaceably to assemble, the right of free speech and of free press were then struggling in their embryo state. There was before that time, Mr. President, the political offense known as scandalum magnatum. In Germany and certain other autocratic countries it is the same as lese majeste. A subject can not talk about the sovereign; he can not tell the truth about him; the King or a public officer is not a subject of public discussion; his power and authority are derived directly or indirectly from the Deity; he is the vicegerent of God on earth, and no profane tongue may question what he does or indulge in any language scurrilous or otherwise about him; he is hedged about with all the divinity and sacredness that belong to the divine right of kings.

James II belonged to an ancient race of kings in England. No one up to that time could talk about the Crown, and anyone who did so was liable to be prosecuted for criminal libel. About 1685, Mr. President, something happened that is of profound concern to us. I speak of it because it is connected with this bill and with these apparently simple rights that until recently have never been questioned.

If we were attacked, if there was an invasion of our soil, if there was rebellion or civil war, and armies fought here, if there was anything to warrant setting aside the guaranties of civil liberty, I would be as quick to give my individual vote as anybody else in the Senate to that end; but civil government is still in full operation; not a right has been suspended, unless it has been by the lawless and arbitrary conduct of individuals who are themselves creating breaches of the peace. The courts are open; punishments can be inflicted; grand juries return bills; petty juries are impaneled; and the administration of justice, as in the case of Mooney in California, goes on uninterrupted.

About 1685 and 1686 King James II undertook to exercise the power of suspending the laws of England. He suspended an act of Parliament and required all of the clergy of the established church to read from their pulpits his declaration of indulgence. Seven bishops in the district of London signed a petition—it was a mere petition, as petitions are presented here in the Senate—and sought to present it to the King, asking him to release them and the subordinate clergy from the publication in their pulpits of what they regarded as a violation of an act of Parliament and contrary not only to the statutes of the realm but to the British Constitution. They presented the petition and were indicted for criminal libel for even seeking to question the infallibility of the Crown. They were prosecuted by the attorney general. The seven bishops were defended by John Somers, who in that generation was the greatest of British constitutional lawyers, with several associates of lesser fame. They were tried by a jury and by five judges appointed by the King. Their instructions are found in the old black letter book of that time. King James had his army at Hounslow Heath to intimidate the court, to intimidate the lawyers for the defense, to intimidate the jury, and to enforce with the strong arm of royal influence the infliction of the penalty of criminal libel upon the seven bishops of the Church of England.

It was in that celebrated case, Mr. President, that one Arnold, a brewer, was drawn on the jury, and it was he who made the statement that he was in sore straits; that if he found against the bishops, he would brew no more for the people of England, and if he found for the bishops, he would brew no more for the King. The jury remained out for many weary hours. It was then, as appears in the old law book, that one of the jurors said what we have heard around the nisi prius courts ever since; every young lawyer hears it for the first time and laughs about the stubbornness of the jury. An old baron, an old English farmer from one of the shires outside of London, was sitting on this jury, and when asked how long he would stay there before he would sign a verdict of guilty, he said that before he would do that he would remain until he died and the ants carried him out of the keyhole of the door of the jury room. That is the first time in history I ever found that record of the obstinacy of a jury recorded.

It was argued by the lawyers for the defense that this was a matter of right; that the presentation of a petition denying the power of the King to suspend an act of the Parliament was a right under the constitution of England and under the law of that realm; that they had a right to protest to their sovereign against the breach of those laws; and that the Crown himself, like the humblest subject, was bound by the laws of that empire. The bishops were found not guilty.

This case became a precedent down through the generations.

Many years afterwards George III was on the throne. That was the day when Pitt and Fox and Burke and Nelson fought the battles, organized the Parliament, and led in the forensic arena when England was in her great struggle with the newly revolutionized country of France and later against the power of Napoleon in his dream of universal empire.

At that time, Mr. President, there came to the bar of England one of the greatest of her advocates, not great in the sense of John Somers, of an earlier generation, but great in his powers of presenting a case to the jury and in the examination of witnesses. Thomas Erskine made his reputation and the greater part of his active life was spent in explaining and enforcing the rights of English subjects under the law of criminal libel. Every one of his great cases is related to this bill. The first case that he tried was the King against Baillie, a charge having been made by the defendant, Baillie, against Lord Sandwich, the first lord of the admiralty, criticizing his conduct of hospitals in the naval service of England.

All Europe was then in war. France was a madhouse of revolution and a bloody shambles. She resembled Russia under the rule of Lenine and Trotzky. Afterwards stability was restored and Napoleon waged war against England; but in all those days of tumult, Mr. President, England never suspended the civil laws of the country. She found time not only to face a world in arms, but to develop the great principles that lie at the foundation of the freedom of speech and of the press. Baillie was acquitted.

In the charges against Lord George Gordon the same issues came up. The doctrine of constructive treason was the point in issue, but it was connected with a political offense.

Again the publisher Stockdale was indicted for criminal libel. He published a pamphlet connected with the trial of Warren Hastings. He was defended by Erskine. The question always in these cases, Mr. President, was what should the jury decide. It was said that all the jury could decide—and the courts so instructed for a time in many of the circuits in England in their assizes—all the jury had to do in a crown case where criminal libel was charged was to pass on the fact of publication itself and merely find whether the defendant published the article complained of. The court undertook to say what the character of the publication was, what the motives of the defendant were, and whether the publication was made with malice. That was a matter of law for the courts to decide. Finally, after litigation had run its course, Charles James Fox in Parliament brought in a bill that ended in a law providing that the whole matter should be left to a jury; that the jury should decide on the fact of publication, of the character of the publication, and of the malice or absence of malice of the defendant. It was at that period, Mr. President, that it was decided that the subjects of England had a right to discuss the public acts of the sovereign, his ministers, the House of Lords, and the House of Commons, together with all the crown officers of the empire.

The doctrine of political criminal libel, scandalum magnatum, or lese majesty, was killed by an act of Parliament and by the decisions of English courts. It was decided that in public affairs connected with the Government of England, not only in the elections of members of the House of Commons but in every question that was related to the public welfare, the Englishman had a right to criticize and discuss freely, holding himself responsible if he maliciously spoke or published of his Crown or its officers something that was not true. The truth, told with good motives and justifiable ends, was a complete defense.

Now, bear in mind how and when this was done. It was during the Napoleonic wars. It was at a time when England was struggling for her national life. She still found time not to declare martial law, not to destroy a free press, but to enact in Parliament laws defending the press, and laws that finally, by the decisions as well as by legislation, gave to free speech and free press all the guaranties that have belonged to an Englishman from that time to the present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator contend that Fox's act, to which he has just referred, passed, as I recall, in the year 1799, made provision that a libel could be justified upon the ground that it was true, and made for justifiable ends? My recollection is that the act of Fox made no such provision; that the act which permits a plea of justification of the character just referred to was not enacted until the year 1843, and was known as Lord Campbell's act, and is found in Fifth and Sixth Victoria Statutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is correct. That was supplemental to what was already the law applied by courts. When Charles James Fox's libel act of 1793, the year of Thirty-second George III, was passed, it was provided that the fact of the publication, the character of the publication, and the malice or the absence of malice of the defendant, should be all left to the jury. Now, on the question as to whether the defendant was or was not malicious in his statement, he could introduce, as a matter of trial evidence, the truth of the charge he made in order to absolve himself or rebut the presumption of malice.

If he failed or could not produce that proof, then, the charge being false, the malice was almost conclusively presumed as a matter of evidence, and he was found guilty. But later on, as the Senator says, in one of the chapters or sections of Lord Campbell's act, it was provided that the truth, when published with good motives and for justifiable ends, should be a complete defense. I think the Senator is right as to the reign being the early years of Queen Victoria.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, one other question, with the indulgence of the Senator. Does not the Senator think, however, that even under Lord Campbell's act justification that the publication was true and for justifiable ends could be interposed only in a criminal libel, but did not extend to seditious libels, and that even now, in England and Canada or in English possessions, you may not plead by way of justification in a seditious libel that the publication is true and that it was made with justifiable ends?

Mr. SHERMAN. That involves the doctrine of constructive treason. Seditious libel is only to be punishable by the sovereign on the ground that it is a species of treason or tends to provoke public disorder. It may be less reprehensible than that punishable by confinement in the tower or by death, but, nevertheless, it is a species of treason; that the sedition that is incited by the language complained of tends either to breaches of the peace or to create civil commotion, and thereby overthrow the law or the government of the realm. Now, in that I think that the defendant can still defend himself against the charge by showing that he had no seditious motives. He can still show he published the matter complained of for the public good. Constructive treason was ended in the principles developed in the trial of Lord George Gordon, who was not a very resolute member of the nobility, was somewhat given to consorting with seditious persons, and was finally apprehended in connection with anti-Catholic riots, and on a charge of that kind was prosecuted and was defended by Erskine.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I recall the case very well. Evidence was admitted of the declarations made by the mob in the streets——

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. And the question was as to whether it was res gestæ or whether it was admissible at all. But the point I was attempting to inquire about was whether or not a plea of justification may be interposed even now in England in mere criminal libels, in contradistinction to seditious libels—and by the word "seditious" I mean any libel that would tend to disturb the public peace or would tend to bring into contempt the Government, and to that extent weaken the confidence of the people in the Government, in its integrity, and in the justice and integrity of the officials of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think such a plea may be interposed as a matter of evidence. I think evidence of that character is admissible on the trial.

Mr. KING. I am inclined to think, if the Senator will pardon me, that even now in England you may not interpose that sort of a plea in cases of seditious libel; and, if I may be permitted in conclusion, an action brought under this bill, if one should be brought, would be equivalent to an action for seditious libel.

Mr. SHERMAN. What may be the rule under late act of Parliament, since the war of 1914 has been declared, I will not undertake to say. I have not examined it. But prior to that time, I think, under the laws of seditious libel, a defendant was permitted, in order to absolve himself from the charge of malice, as a part of the defense, to show that he commented upon the question for the public good. I think you will find, on an examination of the trials, that that is always admitted to rebut the presumption of malice, when otherwise, if uncontroverted or unexplained, it might be conclusively presumed that the defendant was guilty. It is not like a civil case. The malice constitutes the willful intent, and without the willful intent there can be no criminality, even in a seditious libel. We recognize that in the wording of this bill. It refers to things willfully spoken, to acts that are intended. The curtailment of production, for instance, must be intended to hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war.

Both in civil prosecutions for libel and in criminal prosecutions, whether for seditious libel or merely for just ordinary criminal libel, because it tended to provoke a breach of the peace, and thereby fell under the ban of the law, the old rule was, prior to 1793, that the greater the truth the greater the libel; and that was the peculiarly atrocious character of the ancient black-letter law of criminal libel.

If the Senate will bear with me, I will refer briefly to the case of State of South Carolina v. Dow. This was the notorious evangelist, Lorenzo Dow. He was the predecessor of Billy Sunday. Mr. Dow published a book containing an account of his evangelistic work, and he took occasion in that book to speak of one Mr. Hammet, with whom he seemed to be at theological difference, as having died drunk. Dow was indicted under the statute of South Carolina. He was tried; and the judge, in charging the jury on what the law was on the subject, administered the law, as I think, improperly. He administered it as it was in England before 1793, that the greater the truth the greater the libel committed, and that you could not set up the truth of the charge you make. The reason for it was that in a private libel of that kind, not one connected with any public official or the Government, saying these things, even if true, about a man who was dead, tended to provoke his living relatives to a breach of the peace by assaulting the person making the charge, and so they laid down this doctrine that the greater the truth the greater the libel. The court, in instructing the jury, told them that this was the law, and so they found Dow guilty, and he paid a small fine and spent a few hours in jail, simply to vindicate the law.

I think the law had been changed, assuming that they administered the common law in South Carolina at that time. However, the penalty was paid by the evangelist. Here is what he had to say about that law, conceding that to have been the law then. This is Lorenzo Dow's explanation of the reason of the law, and it is pretty nearly the reason we have for this bill to-day:

> It has been argued that this doctrine of libels—
> The greater the truth the greater the libel—
> is necessary to protect the character of reformed ladies; but were they to speak through me perhaps they would ask, "Is it not rather to protect the character of unreformed gentlemen."

The old preacher of that time got much nearer the truth as to the reason of the law than he thought. It is because the truth is not to be told, not out of any tender consideration for the public welfare but to protect the character of unreformed men having contracts or possibly holding public office. My opinion is that this provision of the bill is put in for the purpose of preventing the examination of such matters as the airplane difficulty, and it will be invoked more in terrorem, and used in that way.

Mr. President, under the old rule the greater the truth the greater the libel. If this is not intended to be applied again as it was 125 years ago, then the amendment offered originally by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] ought to remain in the bill. Under this rule of the ancient times if this provision No. 6 on page 3 should be stricken out by the adoption of the conference report, it will be taken as a declaration of legislative intent. Having stricken that out, it is an indication to the court that we did not intend the truth to be told under any conditions, whether with good motives and for justifiable ends or for malicious purposes. That would be used by the court in interpreting what this act means if we undertake to pass a provision of that kind; but with this stricken out it will be taken as a declaration of legislative intent that the Senate and the House did not intend to have the truth told under any conditions. With that state of the record, to be used by the court in interpreting the act, we are under a double danger. We ought to send this report back to the conference committee to reinsert this provision.

It is said that there is a parliamentary condition in which it can not be done. If there is any parliamentary condition that ever faced any conference committee, in the five years I have been here, that they could not get out of, I do not recall it. I have seen them legislate originally, write in measures that nobody ever heard of in this Chamber, and come back, and by a single roll call they were adopted. They possess supreme, uncontrollable powers of legislation, sovereign in character, from which there is no appeal; and legislation is generated by them in a star chamber, to which the public or the Members of the House and the Senate who are not members of that committee have no access and never know anything about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, in this case there is nothing in the way of the conferees agreeing to restore that amendment to the bill. It is a Senate amendment, and all that has to be done is for the House conferees to agree to it, and it goes back into the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not in the least, Mr. President. If this is not intended to be stricken out for defensive purposes hereafter, why not let it stay in? If it can work no injury to anybody, let it stay in. I say quite candidly that if this amendment stays in finally, by the action of the conference committee, I propose to vote for the bill.

I will now quote one professor to another. I read from John Stuart Mill. He says:

Liberty, as a principle, has no application to any state of things anterior to the time when mankind have become capable of being improved by free and equal discussion.

If we wish to return to the dark ages and go back to the star chamber and the dungeon of James II and earlier ages, let us enact this bill without the amendment of the Senator from Maryland. We are still reasonable men, we presume, and capable of improvement by free and equal discussion.

Again, this author says that the reason for open discussion is because everyone has felt—that the only way in which a human being can make some approach to knowing the whole of a subject is by hearing what can be said about it by persons of every variety of opinion and studying all modes in which it can be looked at by every character of mind.

Again, this author quotes from the Koran. I should like to have this engrossed, framed, and hung up in the Executive office and in the office of every Cabinet member in Washington. It is from the religion of what we call a heathen race—from the Koran, not from the Bible. I read:

A ruler who appoints any man to an office, when there is in his dominions another man better qualified for it, sins against God and against the State.

If I were to say that, with this amendment stricken out, on a platform, outside of the Senate Chamber, I presume I would be arrested by a marshal and indicted by a United States grand jury for sedition.

I repeat, Mr. President, if this amendment is stricken out, before a campaign can be conducted on public questions, every speaker will have to take a bundle of blank petitions for writs of habeas corpus and a surety bond with him, and hire a lawyer, and be ready to petition for a writ in order to keep his dates.

This administration does not take kindly to criticism, although it be of a constructive character and designed to remedy the defect made in the prosecution of the war. I am as much interested in my smaller way as the Executive is in a successful issue to this struggle. No one who has made a criticism on this side of the Chamber has done so for mere captious reasons. It has been for the purpose of avoiding the mistakes for the future. The past is beyond remedy; the loss of time, the waste of money, the inefficient men who have been trusted with public office, the effort to perform the operation of a transfusion of blood so as to keep alive the third political party—to enable the Bull Moose to draw the blood of patronage in its veins—are wasted. All transfusion of vitality by that process has been a signal failure. Still, it has led to the appointment of unfit men, to failure after failure on the Shipping Board, to the appointment of men to examine packers who have done nothing but shout from platforms, who have no record of constructive industrialism behind them, who have succeeded in no profession, who built no great enterprises, who have done nothing in the world except to frame criticism of men who have from the time the public ever heard of them. They to-day are examining the great industries with a view to putting them upon a war basis. It is an effort to manage and direct by the collective inexperience and ignorance of the country.

Note what Thomas Jefferson wrote; and I shall close with two quotations, one from a teacher and the other from a statesman.

John Milton said:

Give me liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience above all other liberties.

Thomas Jefferson said:

Error of opinion may be tolerated where common sense is left free to combat it.

Errors of opinion on public questions can be left free where common sense—and I presume that the average American citizen has that—is left free likewise to combat the error. If there is a perpetuation of free government for the generations yet to come, it consists in a free discussion of public questions without the fear of the dungeon or the hangman's halter. This measure, to me, reflects the shadow of the Inquisition, of the old Tower of London, of the headsman and the halter, of the proscription for conscience sake, of persecution for criticism of the crowned despots of old. To my mind, I think more of my right to say what in my conscience I feel than I do of my personal liberty, and inconceivably more than I do of the paltry, petty honor of holding any public office.

I append here the whole of the extract from Mr. Townley's speech, according to those sending it, who say they heard it:

[Excerpts from A. C. Townley's speech at Buffalo Lake, Sargent County, N. Dak., July 8, 1917.]

"We have been dragged into war by the American autocracy, dragged into a war we did not want, and we are told it is a war to liberate the people from the control of autocracy. We are about to send millions of our young men over to Europe to fight the German autocracy, while the big-bellied, red-necked American plutocrats, ten times worse than the German autocrats, coin the blood of our young men into profits for themselves. We are about to send our soldiers over to fight the German autocracy, who charge their people $8.50 per barrel for flour. We are sending them over to fight for the American autocracy, who charge the American people $17 per barrel for flour. You are about to have these young fellows drafted into the Army, and they will be sent over to Europe to fight. They will have their legs shot off, their arms shot off, their chests ripped open, their eyes torn out, and as they lay there in no man's land at night human reptiles will crawl over them, go through their pockets, and steal their little trinkets and souvenirs. Their carcasses will become carrion for the vultures, the worms, and the reptiles of the earth, while the human reptiles—the big-bellied, red-necked American plutocrats—continue to obtain their extortionate profits of $4,000,000,000 per year, while loudly shouting that this is a war for liberty and democracy."

ADDRESS BY SENATOR GORE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, on April 27 the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] delivered a patriotic address at the Acadamy of Music in Brooklyn, my home, under the auspices of the Liberty Loan Committee of the City of New York. At that meeting over $2,500,000 was subscribed to the liberty loan. I ask unanimous consent that the speech of Senator GORE be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS ON THE LIBERTY LOAN DELIVERED BY HON. THOMAS P. GORE, OF OKLAHOMA, AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN, N. Y., ON THE EVENING OF APRIL 27, 1918.

"The Battle of Leipzig was called the Battle of the Nations. The present war may fitly be called the war of the nations. The United States is now a party to this great international suit in the supreme court of battle. In this momentous contest we can not afford to fail. To fail would be the supreme catastrophe of history. To fail would be to arrest the progress and to mar the destiny of the human race. To fail, let me repeat, would be to blot out the star of hope, to blot out the bow of promise from the firmament of the future. From the dictionary of civilization we must therefore blot out the word 'fail.' In this day of danger and of destiny we must have in America no double allegiance, no divided loyalty, no fifty-fifty fidelity. In this crisis the American people must typify 100,000,000 souls with but a single thought; 100,000,000 hearts that beat as one. In all America there should breathe not a single American who never to himself hath said this is my own, my native land. In all America there should breathe not a single American who is unwilling to strive, who is unwilling to sacrifice to bring victory to the Stars and Stripes and enduring peace to a war-stricken world. America has a right to expect, has a right to insist, that every American shall do his duty. 'Duty,' the finest word in all human speech, does not merely mean that every citizen should do his bit, but that every citizen should do his best. His best is the least that any citizen, is the least that any soldier, can afford to render his country in this terrifice contest. Our soldier boys are doing not only their bit, they are doing their best. They are paying the blood price. 'Theirs not to make reply. Theirs not to reason why. Theirs but to do and die.' All of you can not go to the front. You can not fight in the trenches. You can not go over the top, but you can render a service, a service as indispensable to success as are the foundations of this building to the superstructure that rests upon them. The boys can not shoot the bombs over there unless you buy the bonds over here. If I had the power I would divide all our citizens into two classes. In the one class I would place all those who could not aid, who could not serve at all. In the other I would place all those who could render any service, however great, however small. I would then seek to make it possible for each and every one to render the best service of which he is capable. I would seek to have every one bring forth the fruit of service after his kind. I would seek to have every one perform the part or parts for which he was best equipped. There is no economy in delay. The shortest way out is straight ahead. We should fight our way through to the blessings of peace.

"In saying this I speak as one who did not favor the declaration of war. But whether we favored or opposed the declaration of war we are now equally committed to the prosecution of the war. We must all stand by our country with equal and unfaltering devotion. In the spirit of the Revolutionary fathers, we must sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish together.

"Not only should every individual do his best, not only should every individual perform the part for which he is best equipped, but each and every one of the countries waging war against Germany should do its best, should perform the part or parts for which it is best equipped. Such division of labor means real unity and efficiency. It is the law of war that the enemy of my enemy is my friend. This is at least one of the ties which binds the United States to the entente allies. There is a community of interest among the nations making war against the Imperial German Government. Based upon this community of interest and measured by it there should be cooperation among them. Without formal or entangling alliance, there can be the closest cooperation and teamwork of the most effective character. This unity of purpose and division of labor devolve upon the United States a large share in financing the war. Since the war must be fought to the end, it must be financed to the end. More than 2,300 years ago one of the wisest of the Greeks, Thucydides, said that 'success in war is dependent not so much on arms as upon possession of money.' The great Napoleon said, in effect, that 'the god of battle and of victory is always on the side which has the heaviest artillery.' As this is an age of combination we might combine the two principles. We might back up the heaviest artillery with the amplest treasury. This is, after all, in some measure a war of economic resources; a struggle between exchequers; a contest between commissaries; a battle of bread as well as bayonets. It is in some measure a combat between the public and private treasuries of the contending nations. I say in some measure, because the mere possession of economic resources is not enough. Economic forces and resources must be organized and made effective. Napoleon also said 'that the superior force beats the inferior force.' This is the beginning and the end of military science. We must have the superior force at the point of contact when the hour of decision, when the hour of destiny strikes. We must concentrate our forces and our resources at the point of contact when and where the battle wages fiercest. This is the price of peace.

"The superiority of the economic resources is on the side of the allies. The United States are well qualified to perform the part allotted to them in financing the war. The United States have been favored of Heaven. They were given more than ten talents and have made good use of them. While the youngest of the great nations, it is still the most opulent. Less than one and one-third centuries old, our national wealth aggregates today more than two hundred and forty billions; "the half has never yet been told"—at least to the tax assessor. While we have already authorized bonds to the amount of twelve billions, this is no occasion for alarm when compared with our assets. I do not mean to suggest that a public debt is a public blessing, but if an individual possessed of $240,000 was in debt for only $12,000, this would not be regarded as a serious encumbrance upon his estate. If he were an Oklahoman he would be regarded as ultraconservative. We have already authorized loans to the allies of the amount of seven billions. Several billions of this have already been advanced. This money has been well and wisely expended. It has provided the allies with the sinews of war. It has given strength to the arms of those who are making common cause with us. Moreover, this money will be returned. It will be returned, both principal and interest, although I am not entirely certain that I should ever be willing to accept one single cent from prostrate, bleeding France—from devoted France, that rocked the cradle of human liberty here in the wilds of the western world.

Give us a name to move the heart
With the strength that noble deeds impart;
A name that speaks of the blood outpoured
To save mankind from the sway of the sword.
A name that calls on the world to share
The burden of sacrificial strife,
Where the cause at stake is the world's free life,
And the rule of the people everywhere.
A name like a star! A name of light!
I give you France.

"I repeat that the money advanced to the allies is money wisely expended. It is economy of American life and treasure. It is economy of blood and tears. Remember that when you buy a bond, the proceeds of which go to the allies, you may be saving the life of an American boy and drying the tears from the eyes of those who might otherwise become widows and orphans.

"The future is veiled with mystery. Behind this veil broods ever the mighty "perhaps." There are many facts and factors connected with the future which are, of course, uncertain, but there are certain points which are as certain as time and the tides. That the Government will raise the money to carry on the war is certain. About this there can be neither doubt nor controversy. It is equally certain that it will get the money from those who have the money. It will get the money either by exercising the power to tax or by exercising the power to borrow. In the present war, as in all preceding wars, the Government has relied both upon taxation and upon public credit. It will continue to do so. From the standpoint of the Government, from the standpoint of organized society, from the standpoint of the taxpayer who is not also a bondholder, there are certain advantages in favor of a large reliance upon taxation, but from the standpoint of the individual, who must furnish the money to conduct the war, either in the form of taxes or loans, there are decided advantages in favor of the policy of relying upon public credit. When the individual parts with his money in payment of taxes it is gone and forever. He bids it a final if not an affectionate farewell. He may say with truth, "It will never come back to me." On the other hand, when he purchases a bond he will receive not only the principal but the interest in return. There are several questions which naturally and properly present themselves to an investor when he considers the outlay of his money in any kind of investment. First, he looks to the solidity, the certainty, the value of the security. There is no better security than the bond of the United States. It is as much better than the bond of an individual or corporation as the wealth of the whole people is greater than the wealth of any individual or corporate concern. He must, of course, take into consideration the ratio between indebtedness and assets. A bond of the United States is based upon every dollar's worth of property and every dollar's worth of capital within the jurisdiction of the United States. It is first lien upon all the wealth of all the people. The bond of the United States is based upon all the talents, energies, industry, thrift, and productive capacity of one hundred millions of people. It is the first lien upon the fruits of all the people.

"The second point is the rate of the return. This is, of course, largely a matter of ratios. It is a relative matter as between different returns. Four and one-fourth per cent is a small return as compared with 8 per cent and a large return as compared with 2 per cent, the rate upon the old outstanding bonds of the United States. It has been estimated that the average annual return upon all the capital in the United States is about 3 per cent in ordinary times. Of course, a great deal of capital brings a much larger return than 3 per cent. A great deal brings no more than 3 per cent. A great deal brings less than 3 per cent; and marvelous to say, some brings less than nothing. Modesty forbids an entry into details. Four and one-fourth per cent is, therefore, above the average. It is a wise old maxim that "You should not expect yourself to be a favorable exception to a general rule, but should count yourself within the rule." Upon this basis, 4¼ per cent is better than the rate which prevails in time of peace, even if we had a right to base our action upon the rate of return alone. The next point is that Government bonds are quick assets. They can be converted into cash between the rising and setting sun. They have a recognized, quoted market value. They are always salable on the stock exchange. They can be realized upon without delay. You do not have to wait upon the coming of the harvest. You do not have to wait 'til the rent comes around. You do not have to wait 'til your ships come sailing home.

"In the next place, Government bonds are gilt-edge collateral. Any bank, any trust company, any credit institution will lend money upon them. They are always available for that purpose. It might be said that they are almost too available as a temptation to borrowing. The purchase of bonds, if paid for out of current earnings, may stimulate a disposition to save, to economize, may cultivate thrift, which would be a valuable accession to our catalogue of national virtues.

"These points are based upon practical and pecuniary considerations. We have a right to take them into account, but there are other arguments based upon just as practical grounds and appealing to loftier sentiments. I repeat, as the war must be fought to the end, it must be financed to the end. The man with the pocketbook must stand back of the boy with the bayonet. To buy a bond means to back up the boy with the bayonet. The payment of taxes is a performance of public duty. It is the discharge of public service, and yet the service of him who pays taxes, important as it is, is but as the dust in the balances as compared with the service of him who is battling for his country upon the field of danger and of death. The purchase of bonds is the performance of a patriotic duty. It is the discharge of public service, and yet the service of him who purchases a bond, important as it is, is but as the breath-blown bubble when contrasted with the service of him who is imperiling his life at the point of the bayonet, at the mouth of the cannon. Many of our brave young boys will never come back again. Many of them will lie down to sleep beneath the lillies of France. Many of them will answer the last summons of duty with no sentinel save the silent stars, with no mourner save the weeping night. These brave boys are giving the ultimate proof of their devotion. They are offering the ultimate sacrifice upon the shrine of their Nation's honor. Shall we abandon them upon the field of battle? Shall we desert them in the face of the foe? If we are to do our duty as they are doing their duty, we must finance the war as they are fighting the war. It is something more than paraphrase of an ancient proverb to say, "He also serves who only buys a bond." The man who buys a bond renders a service to his country, renders a service to the soldiers at the front, renders a service to himself, and to those who are dependent upon him, if he were so calculating as to think that he is casting bread upon the waters. It is quite as important to buy a bond as it is to pay taxes. Both are essential to the prosecution of the war. The failure of a liberty loan would be little less disastrous than the loss of a battle.

"I know there are two sets of feelings or sentiments to which an appeal can be made. There is an appeal to the passions, an appeal to hate, an effort to arouse resentment and animosity. This is Germany's fact. We have marveled at her campaign of hate, at the hymn of hate which she has taught her children to sing. Perhaps we can not realize the President's declaration that we would wage war without rancor. Perhaps that is too much to expect of human nature. Parents whose sons are going into the jaws of death can hardly choose but hate with a hate that is more than hate. This is spontaneous. There are feelings in the human heart which react against injustice and brutality as the sensitory nerves react to frost and fire. Our conduct should prove our superiority; should vindicate our own character and motives; should exemplify humanity rather than hate; should emphasize by contrast the inhumanity and hate of the enemy. I appeal to your sense of duty, the finest attribute in your nature, the divinest part of God's image in man; I appeal to your love of country, to your love of humanity; I appeal to your interest in the future, to your devoted desire to transmit to posterity, undiminished, the priceless blessing of liberty which you have inherited from your fathers; I appeal to your interest in the past, to your pride in those traditions and glories which have come down to us from other times, to your attachment to those principles which were wrung from reluctant tyranny by the embattled barons at Runnymede, principles which were baptized by the best blood of our fathers upon the insanguined fields of Brandywine, Kings Mountain, and Saratoga; I appeal to those principles of human liberty which are embodied in our free institutions and which are symbolized by the Stars and Stripes. This flag of the free has never called in vain for champions or defenders. In its defense the undying dead have sought for death as the bridegroom seeks his bride. Freedom's flag will never call in vain for champions or defenders so long as valor is esteemed a virtue, so long as heroism is honored among the sons of men.

The unity of reunited America and its singleness of heart, of purpose, and of patriotism are fitly celebrated in the following impressive poem:

A TOAST.

Here's to the Blue of the wind-swept North,
When we meet on the fields of France,
May the spirit of Grant be with you all
As the sons of the North advance.

And here's to the Gray of the sun-kissed South,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of Lee be with you all
As the sons of the South advance.

And here's to the Blue and Gray as one,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of God be with us all
As the sons of the Flag advance.

"We may fitly contrast these principles and these institutions with the false ideals which have led and misled the Imperial German Government. Germany has defied force. Germany has apotheosized the sword; she has exalted might above right; she has placed her trust in reeking tube and iron shod; she has paid greater heed to the earthquake and to the thunderbolt than to the still small voice; she has enthroned, has crowned and sceptered and hailed as Lord Paramount of the moral universe mere material force. Can it be that this golden image hath not feet of clay? The first article of the treaty of peace should begin with these words: 'Know all men by these presents, that right not might is omnipotent.' The greatest service which this terrific struggle could render human society would be to write after the word 'war' in the dictionary of enlightened humanity the one word 'obsolete.' This war should make it manifest to all the children of men that the 'earth and everything that is in it is the patrimony of those who exalt right above might and not the prey of those who rely upon the mailed fist and embattled efficiency.' This war should make it manifest that Christian civilization is builded upon the rock of eternal justice, and that the gates of Germany, and that the gates of hell, shall not prevail against it."

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter from Waller W. Graves, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Missouri, recently written to Gov. Gardner, of Missouri, in which he declines the appointment of Senator tendered him by the governor as a successor to Senator STONE, and in which letter he gives the reasons for his declination.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter written by Chief Justice W. W. Graves, of the Supreme Court of Missouri. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Judge Graves said in his letter declining the Senatorship:

"I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your very kind note of the 26th instant, offering to me the Senatorship from Missouri as successor to the late lamented Senator WILLIAM J. STONE. Words can not express my gratitude to you for this unexpected but distinguished honor thus conferred upon me. May my future life demonstrate to you that the honor was not misplaced. To hold a seat in the upper House of the greatest legislative body of the world is a distinction which comes to but few, and to say that your offer did not kindle anew the fires of ambition would be to utter an untruth. But these are trying times for this Republic, and times when each man should serve where he thinks that he can serve best. I have tried to give your very kind offer the best consideration that I have in me and have taken counsel with my family and many friends. Personal ambitions on the one hand and inconveniences and discomforts on the other I have tried to leave out of the consideration. After this character of the consideration, I have concluded that I should not accept this high post of honor.

"As you know, my whole life has been wedded to the law. With me it has been a labor of love. I have never sought promotion, or held office, except along the line of my profession. My study of statecraft has been a casual one, and one prompted solely by the desire for general information, and not with the view of preferment in the field of politics. Under ordinary circumstances one has, without serious public loss, ample time to adjust himself to a new field of action. But not so now. With the world literally on fire, and the very liberty of all free peoples at stake, it is a time when the man should serve where he thinks, by his training, he can serve best. This is no hour for slackers, but I feel that I can more efficiently render public service with the judiciary than in the United States Senate, and I know it is more congenial to my tastes.

"I note in the public press your desire to have a man who will stand firmly at the back of President Wilson in this great struggle for the world's liberty. This I must heartily indorse, but I feel that there are many men in loyal Missouri from whom you can choose such a man, and that the one you may select will not only heartily support the President but will otherwise ably and signally represent our growing Commonwealth. So again thanking you for the distinguished honor you have conferred upon me, and regretting that my best judgment prompts a declination of the Senatorship at this time, I beg to remain,

"Very sincerely, yours,

"WALLER W. GRAVES."

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a brief discussion of the bill H. R. 11554, recently introduced by me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by a discussion of the bill H. R. 11554, recently introduced by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUFKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of the 122 soldiers in Massachusetts recently decorated for gallant service in France.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD touching the 122 Massachusetts soldiers recently decorated for heroic conduct. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the two-platoon system.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the two-platoon system. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. J. Res. 284) making an appropriation for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives.

AMENDMENT OF STATUTES RELATING TO NATURALIZATION—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 532).

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill H. R. 3132.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up the conference report, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest, as one Member who has been busy in hearings upon important bills? I hold in my hand the report and statement. It seems to me that if the gentleman would dispense with the reading of the statement, which is quite lengthy, and will take it up by unanimous consent from one provision to another and explain it, that those situated as I am situated would get a better knowledge of what has been done, rather than to listen to a hasty reading of the statement.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that neither the statement nor the report be read, but that we may proceed immediately to the consideration of the report.

Mr. WALSH. I object to that.

Mr. CANNON. One further remark, then, before it is read. The statement covers many closely printed pages, and if you read it all it will take 30 or 40 minutes. I think we could arrive at it just as well, and get a better knowledge of what it contains, if the gentleman from Alabama will go from one provision to another, subject to interruption and explanation, where it may be made.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman let me call attention to the fact that almost all of the statement is a reprint of the Senate bill, which is one amendment; so that the statement itself is not so very long, except that it involves the reading of the new amendment. Probably this is as good a way to get at it as any other.

Mr. CANNON. But you are going to have it all read?

Mr. FOSTER. The statement does not have to be read.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of the statement, and it is quite lengthy.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask that the report be read instead of the statement.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman's first request is a reasonable one. Here is an important Senate amendment that has never been read to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WALSH. Then, I object.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

Page 1, subdivision 7: Strike out, in lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, the following: "and who may be honorably discharged therefrom after an enlistment of not less than four years, or who may receive an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment," and insert the following: "and who, after service of not less than three years, may be honorably discharged therefrom, or who may receive an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment."

Page 2, line 22: Strike out the word "at" and insert in lieu thereof the words "engaged in the present," so as to read: "any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States during the time this country is engaged in the present war."

Page 3, line 11: After the words "United States" insert the following: ", and the place of such military service shall be construed as the place of residence required to be established."

On page 10, in the second proviso: After the words "Provided further," strike out "that the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, from time to time, by proclamation or otherwise, to except natives, citizens, subjects, or denizens of any country with which the United States is or may be at war, or any individual or class thereof, from the classification of alien enemies, and thereupon they shall have the privilege to apply for naturalization." In lieu of this insert: "That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, upon investigation and report by the Department of Justice fully establishing the loyalty of any alien enemy not included in the foregoing exemption, except such alien enemy from the classification of alien enemy, and thereupon he shall have the privilege of applying for naturalization."

Page 10, subdivision 12: Strike out the word "no," in the first line of the subdivision, and insert the word "any."

Page 11, in line 2: Insert, after the words, "United States is now at war" the word "who."

Page 11, in line 5: After the word "service" insert the following: "may resume his citizenship by taking the oath of allegiance to the United States prescribed by the naturalization law and regulations, and such oath may be taken before any court of the United States or of any State authorized by law to naturalize aliens or before any consul of the United States, and certified copies thereof shall be sent by such court or consul to the Department of State and the Bureau of Naturalization."

Page 16, section 3, paragraph 3: Strike out "Hereafter, subject to the provisions of subdivision 11 of this act, no citizen or subject of any country which by law permits its citizens or subjects to retain their citizenship or allegiance in such country after being naturalized in another country shall be eligible for naturalization in the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to the amendments of the Senate, namely:

The effect of each of the amendments agreed to by the conference is explained in the following statement:

Page 1, lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, seventh subdivision: This amendment expresses in more direct language the purpose of this provision, and the change from four years to three years is to effect uniformity of exemption in all of the services.

Page 2, line 22: This change limits the provision to the present war.

Page 3, line 11: This amendment is for the purpose of having the military service referred to construed as establishing residence for naturalization purposes.

Page 4, lines 4 and 5: This amendment eliminates surplus language, as does also the elimination in line 7.

In line 21 on page 4: This amendment clarifies the meaning.

The amendment on page 6 is to correct a typographical error.

The amendment on page 7, subdivision 9, is to place a limitation upon the scope of the work of the Bureau of Naturalization.

The amendments on page 8, in lines 3 and 4 of the tenth subdivision, change the date of effect from May 1, 1910, to July 1, 1914.

The amendments on page 9, line 14, of subdivision 11, are to insure notice to the Government in the special cases of the naturalization of alien enemies.

The amendment on page 10, in the second proviso, is for the purpose of having each individual exemption stand upon its merits, and by so doing to avoid the possibility of granting exemption to groups where it would be impossible to determine the loyalty of all. The further purpose of the exemption is to enable an alien enemy, after his loyalty has been fully established, to apply for naturalization, if the President in his discretion, upon report, deems it desirable to exempt any individual alien enemy from that classification.

Page 10, subdivision 12, line 1: This amendment, as well as the amendment on page 11, in line 2, is necessitated by reason of the provision contained in the amendment in line 5, on page 11, which requires the oath of allegiance to be taken by the Americans referred to. This method of resumption of American citizenship avoids the issuance of the certificate of repatriation which is required under the act which this subdivision is intended to repeal. Under the operation of that act the door has been opened to the issuance of fraudulent certificates of citizenship. Most of the certificates issued under the act of October 5, 1917, are simple typewritten statements. These certificates are given to these American citizens by the consuls in France, Canada, and England without any uniformity of wording. This subdivision, as perfected by the conferees, requires these Americans to abjure such allegiance as they have assumed and to declare under oath that they will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States of America against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and that they will bear true faith and allegiance to the same. This is a stronger oath of allegiance to the United States than the oath of allegiance which they took to enable them to perform military service in the armies of our allies. By requiring this oath of allegiance to be filed with the State Department and the Bureau of Naturalization, the record of their repatriation will be complete.

The following is the oath prescribed by the naturalization law and regulations for this purpose: "I hereby declare, on oath, that I absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty; that I will support and defend the Constitution and the laws of the United States of America against all enemies, foreign and domestic; and that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same."

The amendment on page 16, section 3, paragraph 3, was recognized as necessary to relieve loyal foreigners from an unwarranted hardship by denying them admission to citizenship on account of laws of their sovereign for which they were not responsible.

The effect of the second amendment is to adopt a title appropriate to the subject matter of the act.

The bill as agreed to by the conferees is as follows:

"That section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States,' approved June 29, 1906, be, and is hereby, amended by adding seven new subdivisions as follows:

"'Seventh. Any native-born Filipino of the age of 21 years and upward who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States and who has enlisted or may hereafter enlist in the United States Navy or Marine Corps or the Naval Auxiliary Service, and who, after service of not less than three years, may be honorably discharged therefrom, or who may receive an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment; or any alien, or any Porto Rican not a citizen of the United States, of the age of 21 years and upward, who has enlisted or entered or may hereafter enlist in or enter the armies of the United States, either the Regular or the Volunteer forces, or the National Army, the National Guard or Naval Militia of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or the State militia in Federal service, or in the United States Navy or Marine Corps, or in the United States Coast Guard, or who has served for three years on board of any vessel of the United States Government, or for three years on board of merchant or fishing vessels of the United States of more than 20 tons burden, and while still in the service on a reenlistment or reappointment, or within six months after an honorable discharge or separation therefrom, or while on furlough to the Army Reserve or Regular Army Reserve after honorable service, may, on presentation of the required declaration of intention petition for naturalization without proof of the required five years' residence within the United States if upon examination by the representative of the Bureau of Naturalization, in accordance with the requirements of this subdivision it is shown that such residence can not be established; any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States during the time this country is engaged in the present war may file his petition for naturalization without making the preliminary declaration of intention and without proof of the required five years' residence within the United States; any alien declarant who has served in the United States Army or Navy, or the Philippine Constabulary, and has been honorably discharged therefrom, and has been accepted for service in either the military or naval service of the United States on the condition that he becomes a citizen of the United States, may file his petition for naturalization upon proof of continuous residence within the United States for the three years immediately preceding his petition, by two witnesses, citizens of the United States, and in these cases only residence in the Philipine Islands and the Panama Canal Zone by aliens may be considered residence within the United States, and the place of such military service shall be construed as the place of residence required to be established for purposes of naturalization; and any alien, or any person owing permanent allegiance to the United States embraced within this subdivision, may file his petition for naturalization in the most convenient court without proof of residence within its jurisdiction, notwithstanding the limitation upon the jurisdiction of the courts specified in section 3 of the act of June 29, 1906, provided he appears with his two witnesses before the appropriate representative of the Bureau of Naturalization and passes the preliminary examination hereby required before filing his petition for naturalization in the office of the clerk of the court, and in each case the record of this examination shall be offered in evidence by the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization and made a part of the record at the original and any subsequent hearings; and, except as otherwise herein provided, the honorably discharged certificate of such alien, or person owing permanent allegiance to the United States, or the certificate of service showing good conduct, signed by a duly authorized officer, or by the masters of said vessels, shall be deemed prima facie evidence to satisfy all of the requirements of residence within the United States and within the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and good moral character required by law, when supported by the affidavits of two witnesses, citizens of the United States, identifying the applicant as the person named in the certificate or honorable discharge, and in those cases only where the alien is actually in the military or naval service of the United States, the certificate of arrival shall not be filed with the petition for naturalization in the manner prescribed; and any petition for naturalization filed under the provisions of this subdivision may be heard immediately, notwithstanding the law prohibits the hearings of a petition for naturalization during 30 days preceding any election, in the jurisdiction of the court. Any alien, who, at the time of the passage of this act, is in the military service of the United States, who may not be within the jurisdiction of any court authorized to naturalize aliens, may file his petition for naturalization without appearing in person in the office of the clerk of the court and shall not be required to take the prescribed oath of allegiance in open court. The petition shall be verified by the affidavit of at least two credible witnesses who are citizens of the United States, and who shall prove in their affidavit the portion of the residence that they have personally known the applicant to have resided within the United States. The time of military service may be established by the affidavits of at least two other citizens of the United States, which, together with the oath of allegiance, may be taken in accordance with the terms of section 1750 of the Revised Statutes of the United States after notice from and under regulations of the Bureau of Naturalization. Such affidavits and oath of allegiance shall be admitted in evidence in any original or appellate naturalization proceeding without proof of the genuineness of the seal or signature or of the official character of the officer before whom the affidavits and oath of allegiance were taken, and shall be filed by the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization at the hearing as provided by section 11 of the act of June 29, 1906. Members of the Naturalization Bureau and Service may be designated by the Secretary of Labor to administer oaths relating to the administration of the naturalization law; and the requirement of section 10 of notice to take depositions to the United States attorneys is repealed, and the duty they perform under section 15 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 596), may also be performed by the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization: Provided, That it shall not be lawful to make a declaration of intention before the clerk of any court on election day or during the period of 30 days preceding the day of holding any election in the jurisdiction of the court: Provided further, That service by aliens upon vessels other than of American registry, whether continuous or broken, shall not be considered as residence for naturalization purposes within the jurisdiction of the United States, and such aliens can not secure residence for naturalization purposes during service upon vessels of foreign registry.

"'During the time when the United States is at war no clerk of a United States court shall charge or collect a naturalization fee from an alien in the military service of the United States for filing his petition or issuing the certificate of naturalization upon admission to citizenship, and no clerk of any State court shall charge or collect any fee for this service unless the laws of the State require such charge to be made, in which case nothing more than the portion of the fee required to be paid to the State shall be charged or collected. A full accounting for all of these transactions shall be made to the Bureau of Naturalization in the manner provided by section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906.

"'Eighth. That every seaman, being an alien, shall, after his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, and after he shall have served three years upon such merchant or fishing vessels of the United States, be deemed a citizen of the United States for the purpose of serving on board any such merchant or fishing vessel of the United States, anything to the contrary in any act of Congress notwithstanding; but such seaman shall, for all purposes of protection as an American citizen, be deemed such after the filing of his declaration of intention to become such citizen: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be taken or construed to repeal or modify any portion of the act approved March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1164, ch. 153), being an act to promote the welfare of American seamen.

"'Ninth. That for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization of sending the names of the candidates for citizenship to the public schools and otherwise promoting instruction and training in citizenship responsibilities of applicants for naturalization, as provided in this subdivision, authority is hereby given for the reimbursement of the printing and binding appropriation of the Department of Labor upon the records of the Treasury Department from the naturalization fees deposited in the Treasury through the Bureau of Naturalization for the cost of publishing the citizenship textbook prepared and to be distributed by the Bureau of Naturalization to those candidates for citizenship only who are in attendance upon the public schools, such reimbursement to be made upon statements by the Commissioner of Naturalization of books actually delivered to such student candidates for citizenship, and a monthly naturalization bulletin, and in this duty to secure the aid of and cooperate with the official State and national organizations, including those concerned with vocational education and including personal services in the District of Columbia, and to aid the local Army exemption boards and cooperate with the War Department in locating declarants subject to the Army draft and expenses incidental thereto.

"'Tenth. That any person not an alien enemy, who resided uninterruptedly within the United States during the period of five years next preceding July 1, 1914, and was on that date otherwise qualified to become a citizen of the United States, except that he had not made the declaration of intention required by law and who during or prior to that time, because of misinformation regarding his citizenship status erroneously exercised the rights and performed the duties of a citizen of the United States in good faith, may file the petition for naturalization prescribed by law without making the preliminary declaration of intention required of other aliens, and upon satisfactory proof to the court that he has so acted may be admitted as a citizen of the United States upon complying in all respects with the other requirements of the naturalization law.

"'Eleventh. No alien who is a native, citizen, subject, or denizen of any country, State, or sovereignty with which the United States is at war shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States unless he made his declaration of intention not less than two nor more than seven years prior to the existence of the state of war, or was at that time entitled to become a citizen of the United States, without making a declaration of intention, or unless his petition for naturalization shall then be pending and is otherwise entitled to admission, notwithstanding he shall be an alien enemy at the time and in the manner prescribed by the laws passed upon that subject: Provided, That no alien embraced within this subdivision shall have his petition for naturalization called for a hearing, or heard, except after 90 days' notice given by the clerk of the court to the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization to be present, and the petition shall be given no final hearing except in open court and after such notice to the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization, whose objection shall cause the petition to be continued from time to time for so long as the Government may require: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be taken or construed to interfere with or prevent the apprehension and removal, agreeably to law, of any alien enemy at any time previous to the actual naturalization of such alien; and section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed: Provided further, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, upon investigation and report by the Department of Justice fully establishing the loyalty of any alien enemy not included in the foregoing exemption, except such alien enemy from the classification of alien enemy, and thereupon he shall have the privilege of applying for naturalization; and for the purposes of carrying into effect the provisions of this section, including personal services in the District of Columbia, the sum of $400,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available until June 30, 1919, including travel expenses for members of the Bureau of Naturalization and its field service only, and the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes shall not be applicable in any way to this appropriation.

"'Twelfth. That any person who, while a citizen of the United States and during the existing war in Europe, entered the military or naval service of any country at war with a country with which the United States is now at war, who shall be deemed to have lost his citizenship by reason of any oath or obligation taken by him for the purpose of entering such service, may resume his citizenship by taking the oath of allegiance to the United States prescribed by the naturalization law and regulations, and such oath may be taken before any court of the United States or of any State authorized by law to naturalize aliens or before any consul of the United States, and certified copies thereof shall be sent by such court or consul to the Department of State and the Bureau of Naturalization, and the act (public 55, 65th Cong., approved Oct. 5, 1917) is hereby repealed.

"'Thirteenth. That any person who is serving in the military or naval forces of the United States at the termination of the existing war, and any person who before the termination of the existing war may have been honorably discharged from the military or naval services of the United States on account of disability incurred in line of duty, shall, if he applies to the proper court for admission as a citizen of the United States, be relieved from the necessity of proving that immediately preceding the date of his application he has resided continuously within the United States the time required by law of other aliens, or within the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for the year immediately preceding the date of his petition for naturalization, but his petition for naturalization shall be supported by the affidavits of two credible witnesses, citizens of the United States, identifying the petitioner as the person named in the certificate of honorable discharge, which said certificate may be accepted as evidence of good moral character required by law, and he shall comply with the other requirements of the naturalization law.'

"SEC. 2. That the following provisions of law be, and they are hereby, repealed: Section 2166 and 2174 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America and so much of an act approved July 26, 1894, entitled 'An act making provisions for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes,' being chapter 165 of the laws of 1894 (28 Stat. L., p. 124), reading as follows: 'Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who has enlisted or may enlist in the United States Navy or Marine Corps and has served or may hereafter serve five consecutive years in the United States Navy or one enlistment in the United States Marine Corps and has been or may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such; and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to proof of good moral character, be satisfied by competent proof of such person's service in and honorable discharge from the United States Navy or Marine Corps'; and so much of an act approved June 30, 1914, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes,' being chapter 130 of the laws of 1914 (38 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 392), reading as follows: 'Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who may under existing law become a citizen of the United States, who has served or may hereafter serve for one enlistment of not less than four years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps, and who has received therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge, with recommendation for reenlistment, or who has completed four years in the Revenue-Cutter Service and received therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, or who has completed four years of honorable service in the naval auxiliary service, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such, and without proof of residence on shore, and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to proof of good moral character, be satisfied by competent proof from naval or revenue-cutter sources of such service: Provided, That an honorable discharge from the Navy, Marine Corps, Revenue-Cutter Service, or the Naval Auxiliary Service, or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, shall be accepted as proof of good moral character: Provided further, That any court which now has or may hereafter be given jurisdiction to naturalize aliens as citizens of the United States may immediately naturalize any alien applying under and furnishing the proof prescribed by the foregoing provisions'; and so much of section 3 of an act approved June 25, 1910 (34 Stats. L., pt. 1, p. 630), reading as follows: 'That paragraph 2 of section 4 of an act entitled 'An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States,' approved June 29, 1906, be amended by adding, after the proviso in paragraph 2 of section 4 of said act, the following: Provided further, That any person belonging to the class of persons authorized and qualified under existing law to become a citizen of the United States, who has resided constantly in the United States during a period of five years next preceding May 1, 1910, who, because of misinformation in regard to his citizenship or the requirements of the law governing the naturalization of citizens, has labored and acted under the impression that he was or could become a citizen of the United States and has in good faith exercised the rights or duties of a citizen or intended citizen of the United States because of such wrongful information and belief may, upon making a showing of such facts satisfactory to a court having jurisdiction to issue papers of naturalization to an alien, and the court in its judgment believes that such person has been for a period of more than five years entitled upon proper proceedings to be naturalized as a citizen of the United States, receive from the said court a final certificate of naturalization, and said court may issue such certificate without requiring proof of former declaration by or on part of such person of their intention to become a citizen of the United States, but such applicant for naturalization shall comply in all other respects with the law relative to the issuance of final papers of naturalization to aliens.'

"That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with or repugnant to the provision of this act are hereby repealed; but nothing in this act shall repeal or in any way enlarge section 2169 of the Revised Statutes, except as specified in the seventh subdivision of this act and under the limitation therein defined: Provided, That for the purposes of the prosecution of all crimes and offenses against the naturalization laws of the United States which may have been committed prior to this act the statutes and laws hereby repealed shall remain in full force and effect; Provided further, That as to all aliens who, prior to January 1, 1900, served in the Armies of the United States and were honorably discharged therefrom, section 2166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be and remain in full force and effect, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

"SEC. 3. That all certificates of naturalization granted by courts of competent jurisdiction prior to December 31, 1918, upon petitions for naturalization filed prior to January 31, 1918, upon declarations of intention filed prior to September 27, 1906, are hereby declared to be valid in so far as the declaration of intention is concerned, but shall not be by this act further validated or legalized.

"The word 'District' in sections 4, 10, and 27 of the act which this act amends is hereby amended to read 'the District of Columbia.'

"Amend the title so as to read: 'A bill to amend the naturalization laws and to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States and other laws relating to naturalization, and for other purposes.'"

JOHN L. BURNETT,
ADOLPH J. SABATH,
JOHN E. RAKER,
E. A. HAYES,
ALBERT JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question before he makes a statement?

Mr. BURNETT. I will not make the statement until I yield. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization, who acted as the clerk of the conference committee and who is familiar with the details of the matter—this is substantially a department bill—may be permitted to sit in the House during the consideration of these matters, as I perhaps shall want to refer to him for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization, who is supposed to know about this bill, be permitted to sit in the House during the consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that he served as the clerk of the conference committee?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that he desires to sit with the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization as the clerk of the conference committee and not as the Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; in either capacity; I do not care anything about that.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think he ought to make the request that he be permitted to sit as the Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization.

Mr. BURNETT. I withdraw that part of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I shall object unless the gentleman asks that this gentleman sit as the clerk of the conference committee.

Mr. BURNETT. I put it in that form.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman sit as the clerk of the conference committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, at the proper time I desire to move to recommit the conference report. Is it in order to make that motion at this time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. Yes. The gentleman from Massachusetts can not take the gentleman from Alabama off the floor until the expiration of the hour.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman, of course, will have his opportunity to make that motion.

Mr. BURNETT. At the close of the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the proper time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I notice in reading the conference report it refers to various subdivisions in the printed bill. Every one of those references is out of place or improperly made.

Mr. BURNETT. The reference is to the bill as messaged over from the Senate, and not the bill as passed by the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. But I have the bill as messaged over, signed by the Secretary of the Senate, and none of these references apply to the page and lines of the bill. All I rose to ask is that the gentleman in making his statement correctly state the references which are incorrectly stated in the report.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I shall call attention to the amendments in the bill as reported by the Senate, and which was the bill on which the conference acted.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me in the course of his hour for a few moments?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; during the discussion. It may be possible that before we get through we shall have to ask for a little extension over the hour, but I hope not. I desire to divide the time equally with the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], and to allow him to allot that time as he may desire.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama yields one-half of the hour to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a substitute for House bill 3132, which was passed by the House some two months ago. The House Immigration and Naturalization Committee has had before it an extended bill, introduced by Judge SABATH, covering a great many questions of naturalization and a recodification of some of the naturalization laws that already exist. That bill is substantially the same as the one that the Senate passed as a substitute for the Raker bill, H. R. 3132, with the amendments that have been agreed to in conference. The original Raker bill is section 11 in the bill reported by the conference committee. The first subdivision of the bill as it now is permits the naturalization of native Filipinos of the age of 21 years and upward who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States and have enlisted or may hereafter enlist in the United States Navy or Marine Corps or the naval auxiliary service. That was put in at the request of the Secretary of the Navy; and, also, there is an amendment to the bill as passed by the Senate, beginning on line 19 of the bill as passed by the Senate, striking out the language, "who may be honorably discharged therefrom after an enlistment of not less than four years or who may receive an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment."

In order to have uniformity in regard to the three years' service, that was stricken out, and an amendment adopted by the conferees, the substance of which amendment is merely to change the word "four" to the word "three" and the transposition of the sentence, and then adding "any alien or Porto Rican, not a citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years or upward, who has enlisted or entered or may hereafter enlist or enter in the Army of the United States," and so forth. In regard to the Porto Ricans, there was a general act passed when Porto Rico was admitted, which permitted Porto Ricans to become naturalized citizens, provided they were then residents or became residents within six months after the passage of that act. It was brought to the attention of the conferees that there were a good many in this country that have gone into either the naval or military service but who never resumed their residence in Porto Rico and who are residents here, and for that reason that is incorporated. It does not embrace a great many.

We have a number of laws in regard to the naturalization of aliens who have enlisted in the Army and Navy and in the Marine Corps, and who have served on merchant vessels. There are about four of those statutes. Our bill codifies and harmonizes all these statutes, and makes some amendments to them.

Several years ago the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] introduced a bill, which I think passed this House, for the purpose of bringing about uniformity in these several statutes. Mr. Speaker, under these laws they could only be naturalized after an honorable discharge of the alien. The conferees believe that any alien who thought enough of our country to enlist under its flag and is fighting in our Army ought not to have to wait for an honorable discharge to receive his naturalization papers, and in order to meet that kind of condition the conferees now fix it so that any alien soldier who makes his request for immediate naturalization may do so even before he secures the honorable discharge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How would that apply in the case of a Chinaman or a Japanese? The term "any alien" there is pretty broad. It applies to a Filipino in the service. Is it possible it would apply also to a Chinaman or a Jap?

Mr. BURNETT. This does not repeal the existing law which excludes Chinese and Japanese from citizenship.

The law reads:

That hereafter no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship, and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Further, it is to persons who have applied for citizenship. It is not under present laws as to those outside of this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it be possible to obtain a foothold in the Army and make that the medium of becoming a citizen under this section?

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that the purpose of this, of course, is to admit Porto Ricans and Filipinos who are in the Army to apply for commissions in order to have an official position in the various Filipino and Porto Rican contingents of the Army. That is the primary purpose of it.

Mr. BURNETT. It would not apply to those who are not capable of acquiring citizenship.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Before the gentleman leaves that point will he yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I observe the language reads in relation to the Filipinos:

Any native-born Filipino of the age of 21 years and upward who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States and who has enlisted—

And so forth.

Now, a Filipino must be 21 years of age and he must have made application for citizenship; also he must have enlisted. Now, aliens are only required to enlist. Why this disadvantage placed upon the Filipinos?

Mr. BURNETT. He must have declared his intention.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman did not quite get my question. In order for a Filipino to have citizenship he must have made an application and declared his intention of becoming a citizen and also he must have enlisted in the Army or the Navy, and so on. He has to do two things. He must have declared his intention of becoming a citizen or have enlisted, or maybe he must do the two at the same time, whereas any other alien is required only to enlist and serve and then he can become a citizen. Now, may not the court construe that language easily that it is necessary for the Filipino first to declare his intention of becoming a citizen and then enter upon the military service, and will not that work a hardship upon him vastly greater than upon the ordinary alien?

Mr. BURNETT. This is the language suggested by the Department of the Navy and clearly meets the situation, as I understand it, that it desires.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not know what the Navy Department has in mind, but I know what Congress has in mind—at least I think I do—and that is to deal fairly with all classes of these people and not to put the Filipino to any disadvantage. But, now, if the Filipino has to do two things to become a citizen that nobody else has to do, you can not possibly say that is treating him justly. Now, the Filipinos make splendid sailors, first-class men in the Navy in a great variety of ways, and instead of putting a hardship upon them we ought to make it easier for them than any other class of people, because in one sense they are under our flag, and it is an advantage to have them in our service.

Mr. BURNETT. Under the law they can not become naturalized except by some provision of this kind.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understand that; but why not have it read simply that if they enlist in the Army or Navy they can thereupon become citizens of the United States by proper proof. Why is it necessary that they shall have to declare their intention to become citizens——

Mr. BRITTEN. What is the objection to amending the bill in that respect, if any?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This is a conference report.

Mr. DYER. This is going further than anything that has been done heretofore, I will say——

Mr. BURNETT. Much further.

Mr. DYER. There are men to-day in the United States who have served their country in previous wars and they have not received any benefits from Congress in reference to naturalization.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They have been permitted to become citizens upon proof of military service.

Mr. DYER. They have got to go through the regular channels.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BURNETT. This applies to those enlisted in the United States Navy or Marine Corps or the naval or auxiliary service, and the Navy Department has held that no alien can join these forces; and hence he must have declared his intention before being admitted to the Navy at all. That is all—merely to show that he has declared.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to that section beginning on top of page 3 of the original bill, as follows—

Any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States during the time this country is engaged in the present war may file his petition for naturalization without making the preliminary declaration of intention and without proof of the required five years' residence within the United States—

And then recur to the question? I do not want to embarrass the gentleman, but he may have thought it out. I want to know if under that broad provision applying to "any aliens" it may not apply to Japanese and Chinese who may be engaged somewhere in the Navy or the Army? Surely there are some on the ships and at Army posts.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will refer to page 16, he will find:

Nothing in this act shall repeal or in any way enlarge section 2169 of the Revised Statutes, except as specified in the seventh subdivision of this act and under the limitation therein defined.

Now, that section excludes them from naturalization.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has caught up with the question I am raising.

Mr. BURNETT. That was all discussed in our committee and in the conference committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The language on page 3 of the original bill is so broad that I thought it proper to ask the question.

Mr. BURNETT. With that limitation I think it is all right.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask him a question. Is not there some way it can be changed without unduly delaying it? A Porto Rican does not have to declare his intention to become a citizen and thereafter have military service. It is a hardship placed on the Filipino, and I do not believe Congress wants to do that.

Mr. BURNETT. I will say to the gentleman that I am in sympathy with the suggestion he makes, but this is the first time that these Asiatics have ever been given the right of naturalization, and it may have been that even the Navy Department have thought we should not go far in that direction until we had tried the other. I think the question a proper one, and if the gentleman will introduce a resolution to that effect I am sure the committee will be very glad to give it consideration.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I make one further inquiry? This is related, but not exactly germane, to the point we have been discussing; but it is important, and I would like to have an expression from the gentleman if he will give it. My attention has just been called to the fact that we have never passed a law enabling the men who served in the Spanish-American War to become citizens of the United States by reason of that service. Now, I have had a large number of cases—and by a large number I do not mean a thousand, but I mean quite a number—of exactly this character, and they have written me because in journeying through the Philippine Islands I have met these men in their various positions around through the islands. Quite a large number of splendid young men who came from Sweden and Norway and other European countries to the United States declared their intentions to become citizens. The Spanish-American War came on and they went into the service, and I know two or three that were highly educated officers in the country from which they came. Now, they stayed in the Philippines, and when this war broke out they came back to the United States and wanted to offer their services, and they could not be utilized because they were not citizens, and the courts held they had to sit here in the United States for one year before they could become citizens.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How can the gentleman reconcile that with the fact that a man is actually drafted in the Army?

Mr. BURNETT. The bill says:

Any alien declarant who has served in the United States Army or Navy, or the Philippine Constabulary, and has been honorably discharged therefrom, and has been accepted for service in either the military or naval service of the United States on the condition that he becomes a citizen of the United States, may file his petition for naturalization upon proof of continuous residence within the United States for the three years immediately preceding his petition.

And be naturalized.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not like the clause:

Has been accepted for service in either the military or naval service of the United States.

Mr. DYER. Why, I will ask the chairman, should not the same provision be enacted into law for the rights of the men who served in the Spanish War and the Philippine War? There was such a law passed, of course, in the Civil War times, but no benefit has ever been given to these men at all.

Mr. BURNETT. I will state to the gentleman that under the act passed in July, 1862, I think those gentlemen were provided for, in section 2166 of the Revised Statutes, where it says:

Any alien of the age of 21 years or upwards who may have enlisted in the armies of the United States, in either the Regular or Volunteer Service, and has been or may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall be admitted to be a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such.

And I think that section amply takes care of those who served in the Spanish-American War.

Mr. DYER. That ought to be plain, I will say to the gentleman, but I have no knowledge that that provision has ever been adhered to or has been so declared by the Commissioner of Naturalization. It may be, and I trust it is.

Mr. BURNETT. As a matter of fact, I am informed by the gentleman who was the clerk of the conferees, that it has been done in a number of cases; that there have been a number of cases of those who enlisted in the Spanish-American War service that have been naturalized.

Mr. DYER. There are a number of naturalization officers of the country that do not know that that law is in existence or they have a wrong interpretation of it.

Mr. BURNETT. That is the interpretation of the Bureau of Naturalization, and it has been acted on by the courts by whom applications have been granted.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. MEEKER. Is it not the opinion of the chairman of the committee, speaking for the department, that that law does provide for these Philippine veterans and the men coming from the different countries? And as to the point raised by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], that they would be compelled to remain here for a year before they could get their naturalization papers, possibly some of the immigration officers have decided or declared that these men should remain here within the borders of the United States for a year.

Mr. BURNETT. The bureau has construed that that meant any year of their residence in the United States, whether it be the year immediately preceding or not.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I beg the gentleman's pardon. That is not the holding of the California courts and several other jurisdictions I know of. I am not aware generally of the holdings throughout the country, but the holdings of these courts is one year immediately preceding the date of making application for the final citizenship papers. And that is where the hitch comes.

Mr. WELTY. That is a State court, is it not?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No. That is a Federal court. I am aware that there has been some conflict in the decisions on that point.

Mr. BURNETT. The law does not say "immediately previous."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I was down at the department several times, and they said there was a conflict in the decisions, and they had not put it to a final test. They told me that there was to be legislation on the subject.

Mr. BURNETT. The question is as to those who may not want to enlist. The law says they must have resided here a year previous, and therefore the bureau has construed it to mean any year previous to his application.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think the gentleman is correct in his statement that the Bureau of Immigration so construes it. I have found a number of gentlemen there who have held rigidly to the other theory. I can only give my own experience. I have in mind two jurisdictions of the United States Federal court that have held absolutely that a man must have had a residence in this country for one year immediately preceding the date on which he makes his final application for citizenship.

Mr. BURNETT. That construction of the bureau has been fortified by the opinion of the Department of Justice that that was the correct construction.

Mr. MEEKER. Then, we understand that it is the opinion of the chairman of the committee that this particular thing should be so construed that if a Filipino, or anyone who has been discharged during the Spanish-American War or since, and has lived a year in the United States at any time, is therefore under the law entitled to citizenship?

Mr. BURNETT. Not the Filipino.

Mr. MEEKER. I mean those men who have served under the United States forces?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; those who are entitled to naturalization; but an Asiatic could not be. Any other alien who under the general naturalization laws was entitled to naturalization would be, under this general law, according to the construction that the bureau has given it and that the Department of Justice has given it. He would be entitled to naturalization.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. In a moment. On page 16 of the bill, as messaged over, it is provided—

That as to all aliens who, prior to January 1, 1900, served in the armies of the United States and were honorably discharged therefrom, section 2166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be and remain in full force and effect, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BURNETT. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think that possibly what the gentleman has just read applies to the question I was about to ask. I have received many letters from veterans of the Spanish War and veterans of the Civil War who are aliens, men who have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States, inquiring as to how they could be naturalized. As I understand the present law, and the law as it is to continue to be, from what the gentleman has said and from the clause that he has just read, if a veteran of the Spanish-American War, an alien, or a veteran of the Civil War, an alien, files his petition to be naturalized, produces his honorable discharge, and submits satisfactory evidence of a residence of one year in the United States prior to the filing of his application he will be entitled to naturalization. Is that true?

Mr. BURNETT. It would entitle him to a hearing by the courts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But suppose that the evidence is all true and that there is nothing to show that he is not a loyal person?

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In a moment. I have asked that question because of the letters that have come to me from veterans of the Civil War and from soldiers who were in the Spanish-American War.

Mr. MEEKER. Would you add to that question that the words "immediately prior" do not need to be in the application and are not in the law? That is the point made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. Some of the courts have ruled, he says, that this residence must be prior. Now, is it not a fact that he must be here a year immediately before he files his application?

Mr. BURNETT. That is not the law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If an alien should present a certificate showing his honorable discharge and indubitable proof of his residence in the United States in 1910 and 1912, would that suffice to secure him naturalization?

Mr. BURNETT. If he had been a resident for any one year, it would, without a doubt.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then it is not the requirement that he must have been a resident for one year immediately or next preceding the filing of the application.

Mr. BURNETT. That is not the law. It does not say a year next preceding, but a year previous. The Bureau of Immigration and the Department of Justice have decided that that means any year previous.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have answered that question in that way and then have received another inquiry directly afterwards. I see the gentleman from Alabama smiling, and I surmise that perhaps he also has had similar letters. Must the Union veteran or Spanish-American War veteran who submits his petition file his honorable discharge with the petition in order to be heard?

Mr. BURNETT. That is a matter of construction. It says the court, in addition to admitting such alien, must have proof as to good character according to law, and the applicant must also accompany his application with proof that he is a resident or has been a resident a year preceding his discharge.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the time that the gentleman from Alabama has surrendered to me, with the understanding that I may have an hour in my own right.

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry as to whether we will have to have an agreement to that effect or whether the gentleman can speak in his own right at the end of the hour?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman moves the previous question, the gentleman can occupy an hour in his own right.

Mr. BURNETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that is the substance of that first subdivision. In regard to service on the merchant marine, the bill specifically says it must be the American merchant marine. It has been construed by some of the courts that those who have been serving in the foreign merchant marine may have their residence on that construed as residence in the United States. Hence we put that in in order to guard it, so that only those who have served in the domestic merchant marine are entitled to the privileges of this bill—those who have served under the American flag.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That does not mean that they shall be citizens of the United States before they are entitled to service in the merchant marine?

Mr. BURNETT. No. It means that while they are serving in a foreign merchant marine that it will not be allowed to them as a part of their residence in this country.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You mean it will be given?

Mr. BURNETT. Those in the American merchant marine will be.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It says, on page 8, "after he shall have served three years upon such merchant or fishing vessels of the United States." It means a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. That is provided for. If he served in a foreign merchant marine or merchant ship, that would not be regarded as residence to entitle him to American citizenship.

There are several minor changes in verbiage, or the insertion of some necessary word, that I shall not consume any time in the discussion of.

Subdivision 9, on page 8 of the bill as passed by the Senate provides—

> That for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization of sending the names of the candidates for citizenship to the public schools, and otherwise promoting instruction and training in citizenship responsibilities of applicants for naturalization, authority is hereby given for the reimbursement of the printing and binding—of certain books and bulletins. This is a matter that has been carried on for several years by the Bureau of Naturalization for the purpose of trying to train those who desire to become applicants for citizenship, and it does not apply to anyone except those who contemplate applying or have applied for citizenship.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is this meant to validate the work that has been done without authority of law and without any check upon the bureau?

Mr. BURNETT. That has not been done.

Mr. SHERLEY. They have been doing it where they could find some way around an auditor. They have been coming to Congress and asking for funds and not getting them for a great deal of work, because they were not able to prove a good case for the expenditure that they wanted; and this would seem to be an attempt in this conference report to take care of that situation and to open the door to all the funds that can be used for this purpose.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the funds that are to be used are only those resulting from naturalization fees.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand, but that is no reason. Such funds amount to very large sums. Why should the bureau be given an absolute leeway to expend them in this form of work without any kind of check?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not think they would have that right unless the Committee on Appropriations should give it. This is a mere authorization for them to do that work; and if they do the work, or if they present estimates to the Committee on Appropriations, of course, I should think that committee would feel that this expenditure for this work and these textbooks should be appropriated for.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think the gentleman's statement is accurate as to the effect of the language. Not only that, but the conference committee saw fit to carry a direct appropriation of $400,000 for carrying out the provisions of this section of the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. For the carrying out of the purposes of the entire section.

Mr. SHERLEY. That includes this. They could expend all this $400,000 for this purpose. It is that sort of loose legislation that makes useless the work of the Committee on Appropriations in trying to check extravagances in these departments.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman, an appropriation of $400,000 is sought to be made by this bill. We did that in the immigration bill for the purpose of guarding the border, and a lot of other extra work that was entailed. Now, the purpose of this appropriation is that there may be a naturalization of these men in the camps and cantonments——

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, we have been having hearings on the sundry civil bill, and that bill will carry, as it does every year, appropriations for the naturalization service What you have done here is just to hand over $400,000 to these people, without any showing as to whether they need that, or twice that, or half that.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, in reply I desire to say that this is an immediate necessity. I received a letter the other day——

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not become available until the 1st of July, and the sundry civil bill would make it available just as early as this will.

Mr. BURNETT. I think under the terms of this bill it would be immediately available.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is for expenditures during the fiscal year 1919, which does not begin until July 1.

Mr. BURNETT. I think it is also available until the 30th of June of this year.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is possible. I may be mistaken about that, but that makes the situation even worse—the idea of giving them $400,000 to spend between now and the 1st of July——

Mr BURNETT. It does not mean that they are to expend all of it before then.

Mr. SHERLEY. You can not always safely predict. You generally find them spending anything they can get.

Mr. BURNETT. But not all of it is to be expended until July, 1919. It is to be available until then.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is for the next fiscal year also.

Mr. BURNETT. And for the remainder of this fiscal year, from now until then. Mr. Speaker, this is an immediate necessity.

I received a letter from a Federal judge a few days ago who says that quite a number of young men who are aliens and have been enlisted in our Army are coming to him every day for the purpose of securing naturalization. Now, we believe that ought to be guarded in some way, and therefore we provide that in making these applications notice shall be given to the representatives of the Bureau of Naturalization, and when this bill is passed they expect to have the means at hand to have men in all these cantonments, so that these men may make applications and the judges may at once grant their naturalization.

Mr. SHERLEY. What the gentleman has really done, instead of throwing safeguards around, has been to take away one safeguard and to transfer jurisdiction. This takes away the provision that required the district attorneys to be notified of applications and gives to this Naturalization Bureau what they have been fighting for for years—a chance to build up a tremendous organization in connection with this work.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the Naturalization Bureau is certainly in better condition to handle this matter than anybody else. It is given no judicial functions, but it is to be represented. For several years notice of naturalization was required to be given to the district attorneys. Instead of that this notice is now to be given to representatives of the Bureau of Naturalization. Formerly it was merely perfunctory, so far as the district attorneys were concerned, and if there were any contests inaugurated they were inaugurated by the representatives of the Bureau of Naturalization, and they were the ones who should contest it. Hence it was merely a dead letter in most cases, so far as giving notice to the district attorneys; but the notice given under this bill is to those who have the matter in hand, better fitted and qualified to pass on such matters and to make recommendations to the judges in order that the young alien soldiers may be made American citizens.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the reason that I am making the inquiry and statement is because the House is presented with what seems to me an unusual situation, and what ought to be a situation never to be repeated, and that is having a bill pass the House with one single paragraph and then have the Senate by amendment change in very many fundamental particulars the naturlization laws and have the House asked to simply vote up or vote down the conference report the conferees have considered. If the House to-day differs on any part of the report, it must either reject or take it as a whole. That is not fair to the House touching a matter of this kind.

Mr. BURNETT. In reply to the gentleman I will say that this is an unusual condition and an unusual time.

Mr. SHERLEY. That does not justify the breaking down of all safeguards. We will be 20 years in undoing these thoughtlessly considered matters.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I did not understand whether the gentleman from Kentucky was dealing with section 9, which provides for money to get out a textbook, or whether it was the latter part of section 11.

Mr. SHERLEY. In my last statement I was dealing with the whole conference report, the whole scope and character of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I remember when we passed the immigration bill, a few years ago, we in the House had nothing in it but the literacy test, and when it came back from the Senate they had struck out all after the enacting clause and made a bill of 30 or 40 pages.

Mr. SHERLEY. And it was brought on the floor of the House and submitted for discussion and subject to amendment. I would have no criticism if they did the same thing here, but instead of that they went into conference, and three gentlemen on the part of the House and three gentlemen on the part of the Senate have written the bill.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will allow me, there were five conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, that relieves the offense to the extent of two.

Mr. BURNETT. I want to say in mitigation, if not in justification, that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization for weeks considered the Sabath bill, and in order to expedite the matter the Senate had a bill that they passed, and they substituted that bill for the Raker bill, and it went to conference. This conference bill is substantially the Sabath bill, to which the House committee gave much thought.

Mr. SHERLEY. Translated that means that because the Committee on Naturalization was in favor of the Sabath bill they concluded that the Senate's action was proper and agreed to it in conference. But the House has never considered it.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman is mistaken in his implication. The conferees did not assume that they were the whole House. It was a matter that had been fully considered by the committee to which it was referred.

Mr. HAYES. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what course we should have pursued?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say frankly to the gentleman what I think ought to have been done. I think the amendment of the Senate should have been referred to the committee, and it should have been reported back without any amendment or with such amendments as the committee saw fit, taken up on the floor, and then it would have been subject to consideration in detail.

Mr. HAYES. It is subject to consideration now.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it is not.

Mr. HAYES. We can vote down the conference report and strike it out.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is theoretical but not practical. We all know that we have no option about the matter; we have either to vote down the report or take everything that you gentlemen have put into it.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the House did pass the most important provision in the conference report in the bill on March 4, and that bill which the House passed was sent to the Senate and is embodied in this bill, and is the most important provision in this conference report?

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. LONDON. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to subdivision eighth, page 8, and ask to what extent it modifies the seamen's act?

Mr. BURNETT. We specifically state, if the gentleman will read——

Mr. LONDON. I have read it, and it says that it does not modify it.

Mr. BURNETT. Out of abundant caution, for fear that it might be inferred that it was a modification or a repeal, we put in the statement that it should not modify or repeal that act.

Mr. LONDON. What is the purpose of the provision, what does it do in effect?

Mr. BURNETT. It reenacts a portion of section 2174, which had been repealed; that is, by a general repealing clause. That excepted a seaman, a foreigner, who had declared his intention to become a citizen in a competent court and who had served three years on board of a merchant vessel of the United States, and so forth. This reenacts that provision. This was intended as a partial codification of the laws in order to get them together and in order to get uniformity.

Mr. LONDON. But it does not change the existing law?

Mr. BURNETT. No.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state when he expects to begin his explanation of the amendment?

Mr. BURNETT. I have been trying to get at it for some time.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], in making the explanation to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to say that in paragraph 10, on page 16, line 21, the reference to section 2169 of the Revised Statutes would exclude the inclusion of Chinese and Japanese in the term "any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States" as used on page 3, line 20. The gentleman from Pennsylvania called the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that the expression "any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States" might include Chinese or Japanese as that term "any alien" is used on page 3, line 20. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] how is that safeguarded against? As I understood the gentleman from Alabama, he said it was safeguarded by the provision on page 16, beginning at line 18 and extending to line 23, which is as follows:

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; but nothing in this act shall repeal or in any way enlarge section 2169 of the Revised Statutes, except as specified in the seventh subdivision of this act and under the limitation therein defined.

Mr. BURNETT. Section 2169 is a declaration as to who shall be entitled to naturalization—that is, that white persons and aliens of African nativity and persons of African descent; and, in not repealing that, and specifically stating it does not repeal that, it constitutes a limitation upon the scope of this law so far as the naturalization of Chinese or Japanese is concerned.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman's interpretation of section 2169 is that it excludes from the naturalization laws Japanese and Chinese?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; that has been the construction of the courts.

Mr. NORTON. Section 2169 reads as follows:

The provisions of this title shall apply to aliens [being free white persons and to aliens] of African nativity and persons of African descent.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Is the effect of that to exclude those of the brown race?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. That is the interpretation that has been placed upon it?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; that is the interpretation given by the courts. The inclusion of the one is the exclusion of the other. It is a limitation on those entitled to naturalization.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have the courts so interpreted section 2169?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As applying to Asiatics as well as Africans, because it mentions only Africans?

Mr. BURNETT. It only states who may be naturalized, and in stating who may be naturalized, by virtue of that very fact, it excludes those not embraced within its terms, and therefore they can not be naturalized.

Mr. NORTON. The words "being free white persons" are included within brackets and then come the words "and to aliens of African navitivity and persons of African descent." That excludes the brown races?

Mr. BURNETT. That is the interpretation of the courts, and I think it is a very reasonable one.

Mr. NORTON. In reading the section that interpretation of it was not clear to me and that is the reason I made the inquiry.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; it is an important question, and I am glad the gentleman asked it. I desire now to speak briefly about section 11.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman leaves section 10, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. BURNETT. I shall speak of that. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to it. I had not spoken of that but I shall do so.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question before he takes it up? The section provides that any person not an alien enemy, who has resided within the United States for a certain length of time, and who has believed that he was a citizen, may be naturalized under certain conditions provided that he has not made the declaration of intention required by law. The Supreme Court held recently that unless a declarant followed up his declaration of intention with his petition for full naturalization, within seven years, he lost his right to become naturalized without starting all over again. What relief will this bill give to such a man who has made his declaration of intention? This section takes care of the man who has not made it?

Mr. BURNETT. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that that is considered further on, and if he will wait until we come to that——

Mr. SABATH. Section 3.

Mr. BURNETT. Section 3 provides for that, but I am glad that the gentleman has referred to section 10, because it is an important section.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman's construction of section 3 is that it will allow the man who has made a declaration of intention 10, 15, or 20 years ago now to follow that up with a petition for naturalization, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court to which I have referred?

Mr. BURNETT. No. We never thought of such a thing, and we would not do it. An Englishman asked me that question while the conferees were in session, and he asked if it covered his case. I asked him what his case was, and he said, "I have been here 15 years." I said, "When did you file your application for naturalization?" and he answered, "About a year ago," and he said he wanted to know whether that will cover his case. I said it would not if I could help it. I asked him why he did not take out his naturalization papers years ago, and he said that it was mere negligence, and I said, "No; it was because you loved your country better than ours." But section 3 is simply this: There were a number of declarations upon which the courts erroneously granted citizenship before the decision of January 7 declaring those declarations invalid by reason of the fact that more than seven years had expired. This provision is for the purpose of enabling those to come within the purview of the law, to vitalize and make legal the decisions of the courts naturalizing men on those petitions, and does not allow a man to come up now, after waiting seven years, and present his application and get his papers.

Mr. MAPES. But, then, does not the gentleman's bill give greater rights to a man who has not made his declaration of intention than it does to the man who has—because section 10 permits any man who has exercised the rights of citizenship under a false impression that he was a citizen, if he has not filed his declaration of intention, to become naturalized; but if he has filed his declaration of intention, then, under a decision of the Supreme Court he can not become naturalized, and the gentleman says it is not the intention to allow him to become naturalized.

Mr. BURNETT. That brings us to the consideration of section 10 and embraces the very question the gentleman has asked, and I will answer it.

Mr. MAPES. Will not the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. BURNETT. I will answer it; I am seeking to answer it now.

Mr. MAPES. My question is, Has not the man who has not made declaration of intention and who has exercised the rights of citizenship under a false impression that he has the right to do so, greater rights than the man who has made his declaration of intention?

Mr. BURNETT. No; not when he comes within the provisions of section 10, and I will show the gentleman why.

Mr. MAPES. He can not come within the provisions of section 10 because it has this language:

Except that he had not made the declaration of intention.

Mr. SABATH. That is because he was under the impression that he was a citizen of the United States. It is to relieve a few cases here and there where men have been elected to office or appointed to office or have voted and for years exercised the rights of citizenship. It is the present law, and it is only amended——

Mr. MAPES. But my point is that there are many cases where a man made declaration of intention 10 or 15 years ago and exercised the right to vote and other rights of citizenship. Now, under the decision of the Supreme Court, because he did not follow that up with a petition for naturalization in seven years, he loses his right to become a citizen without going over the same ground again.

Mr. SABATH. No; that is because the law provides that he must follow——

Mr. MAPES. In section 10 you give a right to a man who has not made declaration of intention to become a citizen, as I understand it, but you deny the right of the man who has declared his intention and has taken the first step to become a citizen.

Mr. SABATH. No; we only excuse from the full declaration of intention because, as I have stated, there are some cases here and there where men, under the impression that they were citizens, exercised the right of citizenship and have held important positions and all at once, due to some investigation, you ascertain that there is some question as to whether a man's father was naturalized. Notwithstanding the fact that a man resided here for 39 or 40 years, voted and exercised all the rights as an American citizen, all at once he is informed that he is not a citizen; and it is to relieve such cases as that that this provision is inserted, and, in fact, it has been the law ever since 1910, and it is only amended to safeguard.

Mr. HAYES. If the gentleman will permit. The provision of this bill is to relieve the case of a man whose father declared his intention, especially in States where the declarant has the right to vote, and does not complete the citizenship——

Mr. MAPES. The bill does not say so.

Mr. HAYES. The bill relieves him because he supposed that his father was fully naturalized and he himself has exercised the rights of citizenship for a very long time, usually. It is intended to relieve him. The man who has declared his intention more than seven years ago and has not completed his citizenship is guilty of negligence in not having completed it. It is his fault.

Mr. MAPES. In the one case the man takes the first step to become a citizen and is denied the right to become a citizen.

Mr. HAYES. But does not complete it.

Mr. MAPES. And in the other case he takes no step, but he is given the right to become a citizen.

Mr. HAYES. Because he supposed his father was naturalized, that is the reason.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman will pardon me, just one more question. Then, I am to understand this bill does not permit a man who made a declaration of intention several years ago and due to a misapprehension of his rights did not follow up that by getting his full papers to become a citizen. He must, even after the passage of this act, renew his declaration of intention and start de novo.

Mr. BURNETT. He starts de novo, as the gentleman says.

Mr. SABATH. That is the law.

Mr. MAPES. If that is a proper interpretation of the bill, I think the bill is defective in that respect.

Mr. BURNETT. In the very declaration of naturalization that man is put on notice that if he fails to complete the requirements of the law the declaration is invalid for all purposes seven years after the date thereof——

Mr. MAPES. But the law requiring that to be done was passed only a few years ago and does not apply to the man who filed his declaration of intention several years ago before that law was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I may proceed for 20 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to speak for 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I notice there is provided an appropriation of $400,000 to carry out the provisions of this section and that it is expressly provided that section 3677 of the Revised Statutes shall not be applicable in any way to this appropriation.

Now, that section, as I understand it, provides in effect that no department of the Government shall spend more than the sum appropriated in any particular fiscal year, nor shall they be permitted to make contracts in excess of the sum so appropriated. Now, is it the purpose of this particular section to throw the door open wide to the Bureau of Naturalization so that it may make contracts after the expiration of the fiscal year?

Mr. BURNETT. That is virtually a reiteration of section 29 of the naturalization law we previously passed:

That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, which appropriation shall be in full for the objects hereby expressed until June 30, 1907; and the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable in any way to this appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, of course, the enactment of the provision to which the gentleman has just referred does not necessarily make it wise to enact a similar provision with reference to this $400,000. It seems to me as I read this provision that it will permit the Bureau of Naturalization to make contracts for the expenditure of this sum after the next fiscal year, and thus extend it indefinitely, if not expended prior to that time.

Mr. BURNETT. There is nothing in the law that contemplates the making of contracts. There will have to be the employment of men, and if that was wise, as the gentleman says, when it was passed before it is much wiser now because of the immediate necessity of the work, and the work of a number of men, in order that immediate naturalization may be brought about. And it does not mean they are to expend it all. But here are men in cantonments all over the country that want to be naturalized, and they have to have the help of the Bureau of Naturalization in order to do it. That was for the purpose of meeting the immediate contingency that did not exist when the law was passed before that the gentleman speaks of the wisdom or unwisdom of. And I think now it is more imperative.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not mean to be understood as saying it was wise to adopt the provision in the statute to which the gentleman has referred. It seems to me it was quite the reverse. Here you are making an appropriation of $400,000 for the use of this bureau. You provide, it is true, that this shall be available only until June 30, 1919, but at the same time you undertake to repeal, in so far as this particular appropriation is concerned, the section to which I have referred, and by doing that you throw the doors wide open, so that this bureau may make contracts for the expenditure of this sum if it is not expended prior to the date fixed by the gentleman in this report.

Mr. BURNETT. No. The gentleman is mistaken. There is nothing in the section that provides that the making of contracts will go beyond that time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is nothing in the section that prevents the making of contracts, and you repeal the provision that prohibits the making of contracts.

Mr. BURNETT. Only as stated in the subdivision. That is only the extent of the repeal.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the point I am asking the gentleman about. Why is it necessary to repeal that section?

Mr. BURNETT. It goes over the time and it has to be a repeal, and it is only repealed to that extent. It is not an absolute general repeal of the statute at all. It must be construed in connection with the rest of the statute and for the purpose of carrying out the provision of that subdivision.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would like the gentleman to inform the House just why it is necessary to repeal the section referred to with respect to this particular appropriation?

Mr. BURNETT. It is not a general repeal.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand that very well. But it is a repeal in so far as this particular appropriation is concerned and will operate to permit the bureau to make contracts after the expiration of the fiscal year for the expenditure of the sum provided.

Mr. BURNETT. But it would be only expenditures within the length of time provided in that subdivision—July, 1919. Certainly not contracts that go beyond that time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think otherwise, from the reading of this provision, because it leaves absolutely no limitation whatever upon the bureau in the making of any contract for the expenditure of money after the expiration of the fiscal year referred to.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will read the provision, it does not make provision for contracts and does not contemplate any contracts.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand that. But when you repeal the provision that prohibits the making of contracts to extend beyond the fiscal year, and there is no inhibition against the bureau making contracts, of course they would have the right to make contracts in carrying out that provision. And that is the matter of which I am complaining.

Mr. BURNETT. It only applies to this appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And I am trying to get the gentleman, if he will, to explain to the House why it is necessary to repeal the provision of law as applied to this particular appropriation.

Mr. BURNETT. It might be in giving the authority it was not absolutely necessary, but we do not want the section to get in the way of the comptroller auditing and allowing the disposition of this money in the manner authorized by that subdivision.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has provided that this fund shall be only available until June 30, 1919, but at the same time, by the insertion of this language repealing this particular section as applicable to this provision, he has made it possible for the bureau, although it may not have expended the money within the time fixed, to make contracts for the next year, or even the year later, involving an appropriation to be made by Congress subsequently.

Mr. BURNETT. That was the precedent that had been made by the statute that was passed before, and has never been so construed as the gentleman thinks it might be.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I was calling attention a moment ago to those cases where men had made a declaration of intention and had not followed it up with a petition for naturalization. Now, would the proviso on page 15 affect them?

Mr. BURNETT. What are you quoting from?

Mr. MAPES. From the proviso on the bottom of page 15.

Mr. BURNETT. I did not catch the question.

Mr. MAPES. My question is, Would not that proviso take care of the men who have made declaration of intention and exercised the rights of citizenship?

Mr. BURNETT. No. I have called attention to what the present law is.

Mr. MAPES. It provides "That any person belonging to the class of persons authorized and qualified under existing law to become a citizen of the United States, who has resided constantly in the United States during a period of five years next preceding May 1, 1910, who, because of misinformation in regard to his citizenship or the requirements of the law governing the naturalization of citizens, has labored and acted under the misapprehension that he was or could become a citizen of the United States and has in good faith exercised the rights or duties of a citizen," and has not obtained his naturalization papers because of misinformation and belief, may upon further showing be naturalized.

Mr. BURNETT. We substitute section 10 for that, and in doing that we expressly repeal that. The law will be then just as we express it in section 10, and section 10 is substantially a repetition of the act of June 25, 1910, which provided—

That any person belonging to the class of persons authorized and qualified under existing law to become a citizen of the United States who has resided constantly in the United States during a period of five years next preceding May 1, 1910, who, because of misinformation in regard to his citizenship or the requirements of the law governing the naturalization of citizens has labored and acted under the impression that he was or could become a citizen of the United States and has in good faith exercised the rights and duties of a citizen or intended citizen of the United States because of such wrongful information and belief may, upon making a showing of such facts satisfactory to a court having jurisdiction to issue papers of naturalization to an alien, and the court in its judgment believes that such person has been for a period of more than five years entitled upon proper proceedings to be naturalized as a citizen of the United States, receive from the said court a final certificate of naturalization.

Mr. MAPES. I do not understand the gentleman's statement that the bill has substituted section 10 for the provision I have read. They are both in the conference report.

Mr. BURNETT. As the gentleman will observe, he was reading from the portion of the section repealed. We set out the portion of the section repealed.

Mr. MAPES. You make provision for those men to become naturalized.

Mr. BURNETT. I know; but if the gentleman will look at page 15 he will see that we repeal certain laws, setting out the laws, and that which he calls attention to is that law which I have just read, including the proviso of the law that I just read.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman means that the proviso sets forth the law that is to be repealed?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. It is just a copy of the law that is to be repealed.

Mr. MAPES. I did not so understand.

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to explain that for a minute. I would like to explain what the effect is. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization reported, and the House felt that we ought to bring it up to that time—May, 1910, when the bill was reported—the law allowing people who had honestly labored under the misapprehension that they were citizens, under misinformation that induced that misapprehension, and who had resided in this country five years before May, 1910. We felt that they ought to be permitted to go on and perfect their naturalization. The conferees believe that if it was right to bring it up to date then, in May, 1910, when the act was passed—it having been approved June 25, 1910—we ought to extend the time to July 1, 1914, so that those who had resided in this country for five years before July 1, 1914, and had labored under this misapprehension and misinformation would be allowed to become citizens. We did not feel that we ought to bring it up within the period of the war in Europe, but by making the residence date back five years before July 1, 1914, it will permit hundreds of good men all through the country, some holding official positions, who have labored under this misapprehension, to become fully naturalized. There are some in my own State. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] before the Senate committee cited a number of cases of extreme hardship in his own State. They have them in the States, no doubt, of every gentleman here, men who have, out of misapprehension, gone on and become aldermen and members of the legislature and mayors of cities, and some voting; and now, in order to meet such hardships as that, this date was moved up so as to include those who resided here five years preceding July 1, 1914.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My attention was called by one of the Senators from Nebraska to a case in his own State of a Union soldier of the Civil War. He had thought himself a citizen. He had been voting all his life, and he found out recently that he was an "alien enemy." The Senator was anxious to have the law amended to relieve that citizen and others similarly situated.

There have been quite a number of cases in my district. I have numerous instances in mind; there are three or four gentlemen who came to Texas 70 years ago and grew up there. Their fathers voted under the specific authority of the constitution of the State of Texas, where a man who declares his intention to become a citizen becomes a voter after he has lived in the State a year and six months in his county. Their fathers voted, and their sons went into the military service in 1861. I will not say which service they entered, because it might prejudice the bill in the minds of some. But they came back and have been loyal citizens, and in three or four cases have been holding office, both State and Federal. One of them, I recall, was a postmaster for 17 years. They are all good citizens. They have grandsons in the Army at the present time, and to the extent of their ability—which is very considerable, too—have invested in the bonds of this country. Those people would be relieved by this legislation. It would relieve both Union and Confederate soldiers. I hope this particular provision will make an appeal to every Member of the House, as it did to every Member of the Senate.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether this section 10 will cover a case like one that I have in my district that has given me considerable anxiety and worry. A man came from Germany bringing with him a son, a boy of about 14 years of age. This son has now grown to be a man of probably 40 years of age, and he has held various positions of trust and responsibility in the city where he resides, as a member of the school board and as a member of the city council. He has voted there ever since he reached the age of 21. The question has been raised whether he was naturalized. Of course, he was not, and he could not prove that his father had ever been naturalized during his residence in this country. This man had to register as an alien enemy, but he is not an alien enemy. He does not even speak the German language. Under section 10 of this bill, as I read it, he will be entitled to become a citizen simply by making a declaration and proving by two witnesses that he is a bona fide resident of the country and desires to become a citizen and would renounce his allegiance to the Imperial German Government.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If he has resided uninterruptedly in the country for a certain length of time——

Mr. ROBBINS. He has resided uninterruptedly in my native county for at least 20 years. Now, does section 10 meet his case, or is it intended to meet such a case as that? This man came down here to see me, and I advised him to register as an alien enemy. I am quite anxious to have his case disposed of in a satisfactory way, so that he may become technically and legally what he is now in fact, a loyal citizen of the United States.

Mr. BURNETT. Perhaps the tenth subdivision would not reach that case, but the eleventh subdivision will reach the case to which the gentleman refers. The tenth subdivision says "not an alien enemy," but the eleventh subdivision will cover it.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will yield, a member of the Committee on Appropriations referred to section 3679. I just wanted to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the act he refers to was passed before the beginning of the fiscal year, and took in a month or so just like this, so that there is nothing in the point made about the appropriation for the remainder of this fiscal year.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, this brings me to section 11. I will ask the Chair how much remains of my 30 minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has only one minute remaining.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I will ask for 30 minutes more.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely important matter. The gentleman is about to take up an important section of the bill. I do not think it is fair to the gentleman himself or to the House that there should be so few Members here, and I will make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman allow me to obtain the consent first for an extension of my time?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly; I will withhold the point until the consent is granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for 30 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. I wish the gentleman had asked for 40 minutes instead of 30.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOUSTON). Two hundred and eighty-eight Members have answered "present."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

BILLS ON UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, without having it taken out of my time, I wish to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, there are five bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar that encumber the calendar and mislead Members who have other bills on that calendar. These five bills have been passed by the House, as they were included in the naval appropriation bill. I ask that they be stricken from the Unanimous Consent Calendar so that the calendar on next Monday will not mislead Members.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What are the bills?

Mr. PADGETT. The first one is H. R. 10783, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to increase the facilities for the proof and test of ordnance material, and for other purposes, calendar No. 102.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are they naval committee bills?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and were passed in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The purpose is to take them off the calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. The next bill is S. 3406, calendar No. 107, an act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to determine where and when there are no public quarters available for officers of the Navy and Marine Corps.

The next is H. R. 7327, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916.

The next is H. R. 8983, a bill to amend an act approved May 27, 1908 (35 Stats., pp. 417 and 418), and for other purposes, and the other is H. R. 8986, a bill to pay a cash reward to civilian employees in the United States Navy. I ask unanimous consent that those bills of which I have given the numbers be stricken from the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and as they appear on the Union Calendar, that they be stricken from that calendar and lie on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the bills of which he has given the numbers and titles to be stricken from the calendar for the reason stated. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, were these bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and objected to?

Mr. PADGETT. No; they are on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, but before they were reached they were included in the naval appropriation bill and passed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the purpose of the gentleman is to take them off the calendar altogether?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF STATUTES RELATING TO NATURALIZATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, in regard to section 11 the purpose is to provide for many meritorious people who have filed their declarations of intention to become citizens, or who are otherwise entitled to become citizens, but who, on account of the fact that we are at war in the countries of which they are natives, like Austria-Hungary, Germany, and Bulgaria, they are not entitled to perfect their citizenship. This provision we thought ought to be extremely well guarded. It is well guarded. In the first place, the petition must have been filed not less than two nor more than seven years before the war. We go further and say that no alien embraced in that subdivision shall have his petition for naturalization called for a hearing, or heard, except after 90 days' notice given by the clerk of the court to the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization to be present, and the petition shall be given no final hearing except in open court and after such notice to the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization, whose objection shall cause the petition to be continued from time to time for so long as the Government may require.

I think that is self-explanatory. For the purpose of enabling these people in that condition, after due notice of 90 days, to the Naturalization Bureau agents to investigate the question as to whether these people are loyal or not. There are thousands of people from Austria-Hungary—Bohemian and Moravian—who are just as much with us in this war as the Americans, and yet these people by the accident of birth are included in the class of alien enemies not entitled to perfect their citizenship. It is for the purpose of protecting such cases as that that we put in this provision.

There is an amendment to that, that the President may in his discretion, upon investigation and report by the Department of Justice fully establishing the loyalty of any alien enemy not included in the foregoing exemption, except such alien enemy from the classification of alien enemy, and thereupon he shall have the privilege of applying for naturalization.

One member of the conference committee, my good friend from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], called attention to a case of extreme hardship, where a washerwoman in this city was in the class of an alien enemy and about to be interned. This gives the President, not the right to select classes and say that they shall be exempt from the alien enemies, but upon investigation by the Department of Justice as to the loyalty of individuals, the President may remove the ban of the condition of an alien enemy from these people, and thereupon they may apply for naturalization.

Mr. RAKER. And even then, after the President does that, the party must comply with the naturalization laws just the same.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; after the President acts, they have to run two gauntlets; first the Naturalization Bureau which makes the investigation, and then the court is not bound by even the report of the Naturalization Bureau.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Turk come under section 10 or section 11?

Mr. BURNETT. The Turk is not an alien enemy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then he would come under section 10.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; unless he is an Asiatic.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Ought he not to be under section 11?

Mr. BURNETT. When the President declares war he should be.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is not for the President to declare war. The Congress declares war.

Mr. BURNETT When I say the President I mean when Congress does on the recommendation of the President.

Mr. RAKER. At the present time all those that have complied with the naturalization law can be naturalized, if they comply with the law, and this only applies to alien enemies who can not proceed at all at the present time. Is not that right?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I do not quite understand what is meant by the language "that the President upon investigation and report of the Department of Justice fully establishing the loyalty of an alien enemy," and so forth. If a person is an alien enemy, I do not see how a report upon investigation can establish his loyalty.

Mr. BURNETT. They are alien enemies theoretically. It is the law that fixes the status of the alien enemy. We have a statute which says that no alien enemy can become naturalized. Many of those by law who are theoretically alien enemies and by letter of the law are alien enemies are at heart loyal to our Government.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that, and perhaps it might be considered as quibbling; but I think the language should be "fully establishing the loyalty of any person classified as an alien enemy," and then it would not apply to a person who was an alien enemy. You can not establish the loyalty of an enemy.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This is the same language that is in the act of July 30, 1813. They shall be alien enemies at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, but if they comply with the law, having lived in this country the requisite length of time, having filed their declaration of intention and made their application, notwithstanding the legal status, if their loyalty is shown to this country, they can then be admitted. For over 105 years that has been on the statute books, and it has worked well.

Mr. WALSH. But we have a few different judges interpreting the law from those we had back in 1813.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but we have, in addition to the judges, the Bureau of Immigration and the Attorney General's office, and we have every appliance for the purpose of determining the loyalty of the particular individual, and I will call attention to this: Say a man makes his application, then everybody is given notice and everybody will determine whether he is loyal or not. If he is loyal and is willing to give his lifeblood for this country in order that his sons may become naturalized and enter the service, ought he not to be permitted to enter?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, certainly; but the gentleman will note that before he can apply under this provision the President will have to exempt him from the classification, and he can not file his application until after the President has acted upon the investigation.

Mr. RAKER. There are two subdivisions, the one where he has already complied with the law except as to getting final judgment of the court by reason of the declaration of war. This last provision is to allow the President to make thorough investigation. He would call on the Attorney General's office or the Bureau of Immigration, and if he did determine that fact then the individual would be in a position to make his application and go forward with it to final determination, if all of the conditions were ripe that he should.

Mr. WALSH. I think under the language it might be possible for a spy—I wish the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] were here—or a person engaged in furthering propaganda to withstand an investigation, to be found to be loyal, who was classified as an alien enemy, and who might be permitted to be naturalized during the continuance of the war; and I only wanted to get the chairman's view of the matter, as well as the opinion of the gentleman from California, and have those opinions put in the RECORD so that in case occasion should arise the full intent of this change would be determinable. I think the language, however, is a little faulty in the respect I have pointed out. There seems to be an attempt to prove that somebody who is an enemy is loyal. If he is an enemy, he can not be loyal; and if he is loyal, he can not be an enemy.

Mr. BURNETT. Possibly the gentleman has been misled by the language of the Senate bill, which authorizes him to exempt from the classification of alien enemies any individual or class thereof. We struck out the words "or class thereof," so that it is confined to the individual. The investigation has to be of the individual, and the report has to be made on each individual.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, in that connection will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to suggest this: In the city of Chicago, for instance, on Saturday they are to have a parade and a large meeting in the interest of our country by the Hungarians of Chicago, and possibly there may be among those people men who would be described legally as alien enemies, but a more patriotic lot of people we have not in the United States, for they are not only here ready to fight for this country but they are anxious to spread this doctrine of republicanism or democracy in the country they came from, which is wholly in the interest of this country and our allies, and anything that will encourage those people who are really loyal but who come in under the definition of alien enemies ought to be encouraged.

Mr. SABATH. And that applies to the other nationalities in Chicago, to the Poles, the Bohemians, the Moravians, the Lithuanians——

Mr. MASON. Yes; the Lithuanians and others.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Friendly aliens from enemy countries.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman has referred to these cases of hardship, I desire to say that we have cases brought to our attention where the sons of some of these people are enlisted as privates and are fighting in our armies, and yet the father and the mother have to be interned because they are alien enemies, and it is not right.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I suppose all of us have cases of this kind in our districts, but here is a case of a gentleman who has repeatedly written to me. He came here at about the age of 18 years. He was erroneously advised that when he became 21 he would become an American citizen, and about five years ago he took out his first naturalization papers. He is a minister of the Gospel and moves around from one place to the other wherever the synod chooses to send him. Now, under this bill, if this conference report becomes a law, will he be permitted to take out his second papers?

Mr. BURNETT. Has he taken out his first papers?

Mr. COX. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURNETT. When?

Mr. COX. About five years ago.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. This says not less than two and not more than seven years prior to the existence of a state of war; that is, our declaration of war. If he is a German, not less than two or more than seven years before—I believe it was the 6th day of April—we declared war, and if he is an Austrian or Hungarian, then not less than two or more than seven years before the declaration of war with those countries.

Mr. COX. I am delighted to hear that, because I want to bear testimony to this man's loyalty. He has moved heaven and earth to try and get into the Army somewhere. He was in the Spanish-American War, and he has done wonderful work in Red Cross and other war activities.

Mr. BURNETT. In a case like that this bill would give relief.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I have a case in point of a captain in the Army—now serving in the Army—who was brought to this country by his parents when he was a small boy. His father was not naturalized until this boy was 23 years of age, and so he never did apply for naturalization papers, because he always supposed he was a citizen. Now he is in the Army, and the question of citizenship has arisen, and he is likely to be declared an alien. Now, what I want to know is whether or not this measure will protect him?

Mr. BURNETT. It will. Under the statement the gentleman makes it would, because he believed erroneously that he was a citizen, and acted under that impression. In the second place, even if that was not the case, this bill provides that those who have enlisted in the Army, whether drafted or volunteers, they may immediately make application, and on 90 days' notice the court could naturalize them on proper proof.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. In addition to that, this captain has taken oath several times as a National Guardsman. That would not have any effect——

Mr. BURNETT. How did he get to be a captain?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Through the National Guard.

Mr. BURNETT. One of the very handicaps aliens have is that they can not go into a commissioned office as long as their alienage exists. That is why I made that inquiry. This will take care of him.

Mr. SABATH. The chances are they do not know that he was not a citizen.

Mr. BURNETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, section 12 says:

> That any person who, while a citizen of the United States during the existing war in Europe, enters the military or naval service of any country at war with a country with which the United States is now at war, shall be deemed to have lost his citizenship by reason of any oath or obligation taken by him for the purpose of entering such service, may resume his citizenship by taking the oath of allegiance to the United States prescribed by the naturalization law and regulations; and such oath may be taken before any court of the United States, or of any State authorized by law to naturalize aliens, or before any consul of the United States; and certified copies—

And so forth.

Mr. WALSH. May I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that he has put the word "who" in there twice?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I observe that.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose the gentleman will have that corrected by unanimous consent later?

Mr. BURNETT. Can we do that on a conference report?

Mr. RAKER. By resolution.

Mr. WALSH. By resolution or unanimous consent, I think the gentleman can.

Mr. BURNETT. I think the gentleman's criticism is right, but I do not think it is vital, and, if so, we will find a way to correct it. It is simply an oversight in repeating the word "who."

Mr. RAKER. The trouble was we worked so late and so many nights that the owls were "who-whoing," and we did not strike one "who" out.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. Does that clause the gentleman is discussing refer to the young men who have gone over to Canada and enlisted in the Canadian forces in the Royal Flying Corps over there?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. This is simply the Rogers law that we passed some time ago amended, and I was delighted when I found my good friend, Mr. ROGERS, was satisfied with it, because I had labored with him very recently trying to get my committee to report the bill which was before the committee, and it is a most wise provision. Now, Mr. Speaker, under our naturalization law they have to take an oath that they retain no allegiance to any king, and so forth. In other words, it is this:

Any American citizen shall be deemed to have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws—

If they had stopped there no harm would have been done, but in addition—or when he has taken the oath of allegiance to any foreign state.

Now, those who joined the Canadian and English armies were required to take an oath of allegiance to King George, and under the construction of this law—perhaps a strict construction at least, and I have no doubt the correct one—they have expatriated themselves.

Many of them enlisted before the war. And the Rogers bill was for the purpose of curing that. It is thought by the naturalization authorities in getting that bill up there might be some unnecessary red tape about it, and so, in order to remedy anything of that kind, we simply require them to take the oath of allegiance to this country before the court, if they are here, or before some consular officer on the other side. The Senate bill made it that they did not lose their citizenship in this country, simply a negation. The conference committee believed there ought to be some expression on the part of the soldier that he wanted to resume his citizenship, and therefore they require him to express his desire in the way we indicate in order to rehabilitate himself as an American citizen. And that is simply all there is of that.

The thirteenth provision, Mr. Speaker, is for the purpose of allowing those who are honorably discharged and have not secured their citizenship to acquire their citizenship.

Section 2 is a repeal of these numerous acts that have been codified. As I said a while ago, there has been a great lack of harmony and uniformity in the enabling act for the purpose of allowing aliens to become citizens, and this is a repeal of those statutes, and made necessary by reason of this codification.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman have any information, as a member of the conference or chairman of his committee, that those sections would not have been repealed if they had simply been referred to by numbers and dates when they were approved, instead of setting out all that language?

Mr. BURNETT. I think so, beyond a doubt. I am informed they were riders or, rather, amendments to appropriation bills, and hence were perhaps necessary; but I believe even if the law is in conflict with a provision that, ipso facto, it repeals the existing law.

Mr. WALSH. You do that on page 16.

Mr. BURNETT. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I rather desired that as a matter of information, so that my friends, in the discussion of this matter, would have right before them just the language that was sought to be amended and repealed. And I agree with the suggestion of the gentleman, but from my standpoint it was more a matter of aid in securing the speedy passage of the bill than anything else. I recognize the legal principle that my friend states.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think, unless some gentleman desires to make some further queries in regard to this matter, that I have consumed about all the time that I wish.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. DAVIDSON. In reference to section 3, page 17, which limits the effect of the act so far as the declaration of intention is concerned, I want to call the gentleman's attention to some court decisions with which he is familiar, where some naturalizations have been held void. Is this intended to cure that?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. I am very glad the gentleman has called my attention to it, because I had overlooked that fact; and I want to state it is for the purpose of curing naturalization which had been, as the individuals thought, effected by the courts whose decisions have been annulled by the decision rendered on the 7th of January, holding that those declarations were void after seven years. And that was the purpose of it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has been very liberal in yielding for questions.

Mr. BURNETT. Well, this is an important matter, and all the questions have been proper ones.

Mr. WALSH. Will he state the effect and reason for the last sentence of this act? I see what it covers, but I think perhaps a little explanation of it ought to be made, as I do not think it was included in any measure which we passed here. Would that prevent, for instance, citizens of Italy who may have come over here, and are still considered by their Government to be citizens of Italy, from becoming naturalized?

Mr. BURNETT. I will state to the gentleman that that was another amendment of the Senate that the conferees would not agree to. The Senate had in their bill that—

Hereafter, subject to the provisions of subdivision 11 of this act, no citizen or subject of any country which by law permits its citizens or subjects to retain their citizenship or allegiance in such country after being naturalized in another country shall be eligible for naturalization in the United States.

Now, I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, I was considerably in sympathy with that proposition, but the committee, I believe, except myself, thought that was a question of restriction more than anything else, and ought to be considered later on, when the question of whether we would admit people who were by their laws debarred from becoming citizens of this country was being considered. And for that reason it was stricken out, and it was left so that, in the opinion of the committee, it will include those, regardless of what the laws of their own country are.

Mr. WALSH. After you get a lot of them in here and naturalize them, and pass this bill, what good will it do then?

Mr. BURNETT. The question is what good will it do us. One good it will do, Mr. Speaker, is that it will make these people subject to our draft laws, subject to our laws, the laws of our country.

Mr. WALSH. By not including?

Mr. BURNETT. Exactly. Mr. Speaker, I would like now——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the House has been exceedingly courteous to me. I have consumed a great deal more time than I anticipated, by reason of the questions—everyone of them pertinent and proper—that were asked me. There are gentlemen on this side who wish to speak. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] will ask for one hour in his own right, and by reason of the fact that I have consumed so much of this time I should like to have, say, 20 or 30 minutes more, in order that I may yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], who were my colleagues on the conference, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], a member of the committee, who helped us to frame what is known as the Sabath bill, which has been reported. I ask for 30 minutes more.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the gentleman will not object if the gentleman from California would like to have more time than the hour?

Mr. BURNETT. Not at all.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to have my hour, and would not want to yield for 30 minutes. The gentleman has had over an hour. I would like to use my hour now.

Mr. BURNETT. I just wanted to give notice now that I would like to have the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has explained most of the provisions of this bill so there are probably few misunderstandings in regard to it. I think there are still some.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has raised a point here that I think can be easily cleared up. The provision in subdivision 7, relating to the Filipino, is no discrimination against him, but on the contrary it extends to him a privilege. The Filipino at this time, so far as naturalization is concerned, is an alien, and, being a member of the Malayan or brown race, he is not eligible for naturalization; and the purpose of the first provision here is to permit him or to encourage him to enlist in the naval service, in the Marine Corps, or in the merchant marine. After his term of enlistment, or after three years of service, he may be admitted to citizenship and become a citizen of the United States.

This is incorporated in the bill at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, and the purpose, as I say, is to encourage the Filipino to enlist and serve in the Navy. The Filipino makes a splendid sailor. The bill is not a discrimination against the Filipino at all, but extends to him a privilege which he does not now enjoy.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. With due respect to the gentleman, I still insist that it is discrimination against him, and for this reason: When the courts come to construe this act they are going to say, "You made a line of demarcation between a Filipino and an alien." And there is one. A Filipino has to swear and maintain allegiance to the United States flag and the United States Government.

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. To that extent he is not an alien at all. The courts do not hold him an alien.

Mr. HAYES. He is not a citizen.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He is everything but a citizen. But you can not describe him as an alien, and this bill makes a distinction between him and an alien. You permit an alien to do many things that you do not permit a Filipino to do.

Mr. HAYES. That is true, because it is not intended to admit the Filipino, or any member of the Malayan race, to naturalization as a general proposition. That is the policy of our law. It has been the policy of this country from the beginning, and it still is our policy, that only white people and, latterly, persons of African nativity or African descent shall be admitted as citizens.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. We have made all the people of Porto Rico citizens of the United States.

Mr. HAYES. They are not members of the brown race. They do not enlarge the general scope of our naturalization laws. They are not Malayans or Mongolians, and therefore they are eligible to naturalization under our law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How about the Hawaiian? He is not a black man.

Mr. HAYES. No. He is not; but by law the Hawaiians became citizens of the United States at the time the Hawaiian Islands became the property of the United States, I believe.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. What disability does the Filipino labor under except that he has not the right to vote? He holds the right of acquiring property and the right of marriage and the right of bequeathing property.

Mr. HAYES. There are other disabilities that he has.

Mr. ROBBINS. What are they?

Mr. HAYES. He can not serve in the United States Army as an officer. One of the provisions of this bill relieves him during the present war from that disability. There are others. We all desire to do justice to the Filipino, but I do object to giving him the right—ten or twelve millions of him—to become a naturalized citizen of the United States and to swarm over here.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is that accurate, that he can not serve in the Army of the United States? The Filipino Scouts are made up almost entirely of Filipinos.

Mr. HAYES. That is true. I said he can not be an officer in the United States Army. During this war the Filipino can become an officer of the United States Army, but as a general proposition he can not. I mean he can if this bill becomes a law. I would be very much opposed to admitting the Filipinos generally to naturalization. In my view—and I think in the view of the gentleman from Minnesota and in the view of almost all of us—the flag is floating over the Filipinos not as a permanent proposition.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not agree with the gentleman as to that. I am not worried about whether it is going to be permanent or not. I am not worried about that.

Mr. HAYES. We have promised the Filipinos their independence ultimately, and, of course, that promise will be kept.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am not willing to pass any law that makes a distinction that is unfair to the Filipino.

Mr. HAYES. I will agree with the gentleman in that respect, but I think the first consideration that the Congress of the United States should have in this matter is justice to the people of this country and the avoidance of any further troublesome racial questions coming into this country to plague us, as the one that we have already has done.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not know whether the Filipino can be enlisted in the Army or the Navy or not, but I will say to the gentleman that 20 years ago in his State an officer of the Regular Army asked me to enlist a couple of Filipinos.

Mr. HAYES. I did not say they could not be enlisted.

Mr. LITTLE. Excuse me; I have not finished. They changed their minds, and a general order was issued in San Francisco to the effect that no Filipino should be enlisted. I judged from that that they could be.

Mr. HAYES. I have not stated that they could not be. I said they could not become officers in the Army of the United States without some enabling act like this, because they had to be citizens of the United States in order to be officers in the United States Army.

Now, the principal purpose of this subdivision 7 is to permit the immediate naturalization, as I recall, of something like 126,000 aliens who are now in the Army of the United States—many of them now in France and many more of them going—to naturalize them immediately, so that when they get over there they will have the right of the protection of this country as citizens of the United States, so far as we can give it to them. At present we can not even say that they are citizens. We should have the power to grant them protection. We have no right to attempt it under international law. We desire to put these men and the families of these men who are serving and offering their lives on foreign soil for this country on the same basis as soldiers who are citizens of the United States by giving them the right to become immediately citizens by naturalization. That is the immediate purpose of subdivision 7, and I think it does this, and does it so far as we are able to do it, by throwing around the naturalization proceedings the necessary protection, so that the right shall not be abused.

Of the 126,000 who are not citizens, 76,000 have not even declared their intention to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Are the 76,000 out of the 126,000?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; 76,000 out of the 126,000.

Subdivision 8 is intended, as the gentleman from Alabama has already indicated, to equalize the time that aliens must serve in the Army, or Navy, or the Marine Corps, or the merchant marine of the United States in order to take advantage of their service in becoming citizens.

Subdivision 11 is intended to take care of those aliens who are friendly to the United States and loyal to us, but who are classified under the law as alien enemies. For example, almost all of the Bohemians in this country are enemies of Austria, and are just as loyal citizens under our flag as we have; but they are classified as alien enemies, and under the law are liable to be interned. Subdivision 11 permits the reclassification of those alien enemies who are really at heart not alien enemies, and permits them under certain and very severe restrictions to apply for naturalization, so that they may be protected in their rights. It is intended to relieve certain very extreme cases where there is great hardship. There is a woman, for example, who has lived for 30 years in this city, and who is engaged in business here. Her husband is dead. She is a German woman and her husband never took advantage of the law to become naturalized. She has been in business here since his death, and is a perfectly harmless and loyal woman. Yet she has been interned as an alien enemy. This subdivision would permit her, after an examination by the Department of Justice, to satisfy the department that she is perfectly loyal, to be reclassified and admitted to naturalization. That is the purpose of the latter part of subsection 11.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. There are certain provisions of this bill which affect those who serve in the Army or the Navy, and I should like to ask the gentleman if the conferees know whether these provisions of the bill are approved by the War Department and the Navy Department?

Mr. HAYES. The conference committee had before them representatives of the War Department and of the Department of Justice, and so far as I understand it the bill is framed to meet their views. Some of the provisions in the bill have been specifically requested by the Secretary of the Navy. So far as we are advised the bill is entirely satisfactory to both those departments.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Has the State Department made any suggestions in reference to the provision of the law that the gentleman is now discussing—for the naturalizing of alien enemies?

Mr. HAYES. I do not recall that it has.

Mr. GORDON. There are some countries, Germany in particular, that undertake to impose conditions and restrictions upon the rights of their citizens to become citizens of foreign countries.

Mr. HAYES. Yes. Italy and Germany have such laws.

Mr. GORDON. I was wondering whether the committee have considered that?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; we considered it very fully. I am coming to that. That is the last subdivision. I would say, however, to the gentleman in regard to the Department of State, that so far as I know we had no suggestions from the Department of State, but we are advised by that department that they fully approve this bill, or at least have no objection to it. Now, so far as the other point that the gentleman referred to is concerned, the conferees considered that it would be a great injustice to those citizens of Italy, for example, who come to this country and who desire to become naturalized and incorporated into our citizenship, to deny them naturalization simply because their country refuses to recognize the naturalization laws of the United States and their change of citizenship. It is a matter entirely beyond their control. They have no control over the laws or the Government of Italy, and if they desire to come here and become citizens I see no reason why they should be discriminated against because of the remarkable action of their own Government.

Mr. GORDON. Of course there is just this difficulty about it: In case these men should enter the military service and be captured they would become liable to the pains and penalties of treason.

Mr. HAYES. That is true; but if they were not naturalized the same thing would be true, so they are in no worse position; but, on the contrary, by becoming naturalized American citizens they acquire the right to whatever protection our Government can give them.

Mr. GORDON. I understand it is the policy of the War Department not to permit any such aliens as that to go abroad.

Mr. HAYES. They have never said anything to us in regard to that. At least I have not heard of anything of that kind being said by the representatives of the War Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The statement has been made that certain aliens whom it is not desirable to send to foreign countries are being placed in other service in the United States.

Mr. HAYES. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That covers their case.

Mr. HAYES. Yes; perhaps it does.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Has the gentleman any information as to what attitude the State Department has taken in recognition of the fact of dual citizenship?

Mr. HAYES. The State Department, in view of our laws, can not recognize any dual citizenship, of course. The naturalized aliens are citizens of the United States in our view, no matter what may be the law of the country to which they formerly owed allegiance. So our State Department does not recognize the law of Italy or of Germany in that regard. That has been for many years a bone of contention between the governments that have such laws and our own Government.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. And there never has been, either directly or indirectly, any recognition at all on our part of any such dual citizenship?

Mr. HAYES. On the contrary, quite the reverse.

Mr. GORDON. In the War of 1812 we expressly repudiated that idea.

Mr. HAYES. Absolutely; and have always repudiated it ever since then, and still do.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. JAMES. The other day I had a letter from the Secretary of State, in which he said he expected in a short time that under the new treaty with Italy men who come over here from that country and are naturalized here will be treated as American citizens

Mr. HAYES. That would be a very desirable outcome of the dispute which has been going on for years.

Mr. JAMES. Germany passed a law a short time ago in which it was provided that a German before leaving for this country or any other country might go before his burgomaster and take an oath, as a result of which, notwithstanding any renunciation of allegiance to the Imperial German Government which a man is required to declare when he becomes a naturalized citizen of the United States, he would still be a subject of the Kaiser.

Mr. HAYES. In their view of the law, yes.

Mr. JAMES. Now, I notice that the Senate put in an amendment to this bill which provided that—

> Hereafter, subject to the provisions of subdivision 11 of this act, no citizen or subject of any country which by law permits its citizens or subjects to retain their citizenship or allegiance in such country after being naturalized in another country shall be eligible for naturalization in the United States.

I take it that referred specially to Germany.

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. For what reason was it stricken out?

Mr. HAYES. For the reason I have stated. Italy has the same sort of a law, and it would be unjust to former citizens of that country who have come here with the firm intention of becoming a part of our citizenship to refuse them naturalization because of the unreasonableness of the laws of their home government and the attitude they take toward all other governments in the world.

Mr. JAMES. But there is a difference between Italy and Germany. Italy does not recognize the naturalization laws, while Germany has a law that, notwithstanding they become citizens of another country, they still remain citizens of Germany. They deliberately cover up the Germans, which is not what Italy is doing.

Hr. HAYES. The result is the same.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. What does the report do and what does the bill do where a German subject becomes naturalized in the United States and Germany will not recognize that naturalization? Did not we fight the War of 1812 to establish that principle?

Mr. HAYES. We did; and we have been fighting for it ever since through the State Department.

Mr CANNON. Does this bill interfere with that provision?

Mr. HAYES. It does not; the committee struck out the provision that would interfere with it.

Mr. CANNON. Otherwise they could take the naturalized German citizen or the citizen of any country with which we were at war and shoot him.

Mr. HAYES. And we would have no power to interfere; that is, no international power or international right to interfere, even if we had naturalized him.

Mr. CANNON. It would be a question of force and retaliation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As to this question of dual citizenship, Germany and Italy, and formerly, if not at this time, France, claimed that her citizens were still citizens of that country; she never gave up her claim on citizens. Now, a matter of that kind can only be reached and corrected, I suppose, by a treaty duly ratified.

Mr. HAYES. That is true.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Germany declares that her emigrants becoming naturalized do not lose their citizenship in the German Empire. We say they do. That is as far as the argument can be advanced except through a treaty or the battle field.

Mr. HAYES. Yes; it must be settled either by treaty or by force, or not at all.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. If my friend from Texas will permit and my friend from California indulge me, I think the citizen of Germany who becomes naturalized, if he applies to the consul of that country, can retain his German citizenship, thus assuming an absolutely dual allegiance.

I think that both Italy and France maintain that they have the right to the military service of their former citizens even after those citizens have become naturalized in America. While we have denied this right, it is a conflict of law and does not involve dual allegiance. France and Italy only in a qualified way concede the right of their people to expatriate themselves, while Turkey and Russia deny it absolutely. Germany, however, while not denying this right, sets up in lieu of it the doctrine of double allegiance, inviting emigrants from her sovereignty to retain their German citizenship while accepting the obligations of American citizenship. Those naturalized citizens must perjure themselves and assume a false position, a position that is reprehensible and repugnant to the spirit of our institutions.

Mr. HAYES. I think that Italy is in substantially the same category as Germany. I see little practical difference in the attitude of the two countries.

Mr. JAMES. I think that the claim of Germany is that he is a citizen of both countries; but not so with Italy.

Mr. HAYES. The effect, so far as this country is concerned, is substantially the same.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As I understand it, the Senate was recognizing in this paragraph the fact of dual citizenship.

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. By eliminating that particular language from this law the Senate as a treaty-making power has recognized that fact.

Mr. HAYES. Yes. I will say to the gentleman that the gentleman that put the amendment in the Senate bill was satisfied by argument that he was mistaken and that it ought to go out.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. In common with the gentleman from Illinois, I think it ought to go out and that we ought to protect these men when they become citizens with all the power of the country.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. It was Senator LODGE who offered this amendment, was it not?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Do I understand that he was satisfied to have it go out of the bill?

Mr. HAYES. We are so advised. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other thing I wish to mention, and that is that the act of October, 1917, permitted repatriation of soldiers who had expatriated themselves. The reason it is incorporated in the bill is to eliminate the provision in the act of October last that is susceptible to great abuse. That is the requirement that a certificate of citizenship should be given to those who repudiated themselves. There were presented to the committee a large number of certificates, typewritten and in different forms. One in particular was issued to an Englishman who lived in England at the time he took the oath of allegiance. His family lived there, and it did not appear on the face of the papers that he had ever been in the United States at all. It is plain that this would open the door to great frauds, and the only essential change that is made in the present law is to take out the provision requiring such certificates to be issued by the consuls to repatriated citizens, and the bill requires a copy of the oath to be filed with the Secretary of State and the Bureau of Naturalization in this country as a safeguard against frauds that might be perpetrated under the law of October, 1917.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I am not sure that the bill covers the case that I want to ask about, and I rather think it does not, but when the war broke out in 1914 quite a number of American citizens went up to Canada, enlisted in the Canadian forces, some of them without letting the authorities there know that they were Americans, and others, in order to do it, I suppose in a form renounced their allegiance to this country.

Mr. HAYES. They did.

Mr. FESS. Then after we got into the war some of those who had not gone overseas with the Canadian forces came down to this country without leave.

Mr. HAYES. They are expatriated under the view of the administrators of our law, and this bill permits them to become citizens again by taking the oath of allegiance and having that oath filed with the Secretary of State and the Bureau of Naturalization.

Mr. FESS. Take the case of a citizen who has renounced his allegiance in order to join the Canadian forces, who then without leave, in order to join our own Army, leaves the Canadian Provinces and comes back to the United States. He can not make application to enter the Army as an American citizen, for he finds that he is not an American citizen, and he is in a sense a deserter from the Canadian forces. What is the remedy for a case of that kind?

Mr. HAYES. The remedy proposed in this bill is to let him go before a United States court or, if he is not in this country, before a United States consul in any part of the world and take the oath of allegiance and have that oath or a copy of it filed with the Secretary of State and the Bureau of Naturalization, and he again becomes a citizen of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Is there any plan in the bill whereby he can cancel that charge of desertion?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly not.

Mr. FESS. Without some other procedure?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And nothing like that can be permitted to come about, because it would interfere with the relations of the armies of the allies.

Mr. FESS. That would have to be done diplomatically between the two nations?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is some military order by which men can be inducted into the American Army in such cases as the gentleman inquires about. A soldier in the Canadian forces may be inducted into the American Army.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have two or three letters recently from German-American citizens who have been here for 25 or 30 years, who have voted and held office, and have taken out their first papers, but now find themselves aliens, and they are very anxious about it. One of them has a boy in the service. Would this bill take care of those cases?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; it takes care of those cases.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. As I understand it, this bill would permit, under certain circumstances, citizens of Germany to become naturalized during the period of the war?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think there might be some danger lurking in that provision. I understand it is to cover cases of men and women of undoubted loyalty, who have lived in this country for many years, but who have not availed themselves of their opportunity to become citizens of the United States by declaring their intentions; but is it not possible that some designing German who wants to avoid the suspicion of being a German agent might take advantage of the provisions and secure American citizenship and aid himself in the prosecution of some design inimical to the best interests of this country?

Mr. HAYES. I think it is hardly possible under the safeguards that the bill provides. Before such an alien can be naturalized he has to give 90 days' notice to the Bureau of Naturalization, and the bureau will, of course, in such a case make a thorough investigation. If it is not satisfied with a man's loyalty it may hold up the case and get it continued until it can be satisfied whether he is loyal or disloyal. Besides that, if he had not already applied when war was declared and he is classified as an alien enemy he can not be admitted even to apply for naturalization until the Department of Justice has made a thorough investigation of his case, and is thoroughly satisfied that he is loyal, and I think the gentleman may be sure, if he has come in contact with the Department of Justice at this time or since the declaration of war, that if there is the slightest doubt of the loyalty of that alien in such case his application would be held up.

Mr. HUSTED. I have not any doubt about that, but these German agents are pretty clever in avoiding suspicion.

Mr. HAYES. And our officers are pretty clever and skilled in the detection of all such cases.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question on the line of the one the gentleman from Indiana was asking. Do I understand the gentleman from California to say that this bill also covers a case where a man has taken out his first papers and thinks he has been naturalized, and he is honestly mistaken, as well as the case where he is not?

Mr. HAYES. Absolutely.

Mr. SNOOK. I understood the chairman of the committee to say it did not.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman only needs to read the bill, where he will see it refers to the case of a man honestly exercising the rights of citizenship supposing that he was a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SNOOK. I understood the chairman of the committee in making a statement to say it did not cover the case where a man took out his first papers.

Mr. HAYES. If he has taken them out and lets them lapse by negligence, it does not cover him.

Mr. SNOOK. Suppose a man had taken out his first papers, and he thinks he has been naturalized and thinks the process has been completed, is the gentleman of the opinion that the bill covers that?

Mr. HAYES. If he can satisfy the court that he has thus acted in good faith it covers the case.

Mr. SNOOK. It is a question for the court?

Mr. HAYES. Exactly. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTAGUE). The gentleman has 25 minutes.

Mr. HAYES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, because this bill to amend the naturalization laws contains many technical phrases it is not easy to pick out from its several paragraphs the many beneficial things that it proposes to do for the unification and general welfare of all the people in the United States, including those aliens who hope to remain here and who are willing to help fight our battle, many of whom are in fact fighting under our flag and in the uniforms of our country, who can not complete their naturalization without such a measure as this one. This bill comes to us from the Senate as a substitute; in fact, a long and technical rider on a small bill passed by the House which dealt with only one phase of the situation. But the House Immigration Committee gave the bill, as it is now before you, much study and I am convinced that this bill when enacted into law will perform a great service toward putting right a large part of the population of the United States. The bill does four or five things in addition to codifying the naturalization laws. Let me state them briefly:

First. It permits the correction of mistaken citizenship brought about through misunderstanding as to the rights of men who have thought they are citizens, because they think their fathers took out full citizenship papers.

Second. This bill gives the opportunity for quickly making full-fledged Americans of all of those brave boys who, without waiting to complete their citizenship, have gone into our great Army and are fighting against our enemies. That is not only fair but a just proposition.

Third. It permits the President of the United States, after full examinations are made by the Department of Justice, to exempt from classification as alien enemies individuals now so classed. Each individual case is to be handled on its own merits. Whole classes, such as Slavs, Bohemians, and the like, are not to be exempted as classes, but each person personally, after full investigation. An aged German, who, for some reason or lack of foresight, has neglected citizenship and now finds himself an alien enemy, can step out of that classification on proper proof and become known, if I may coin the phrase, as a friendly alien from an enemy country. He can then begin the process of naturalization. That is a just proposition. Every Representative knows of cases where some well-known citizens, long-established residents, both men and women, have neglected to start the citizenship process and suddenly upon the President's proclamation, necessarily so, find themselves declared alien enemies. Such a law will help the Department of Justice in its efforts to mark and imprison alien enemies as well as spies and treasonable persons. It will do a lot to clarify the situation.

Fourth. The bill permits those aliens in this country who were here two years prior to the beginning of the war with Germany—that is, aliens from that country who had started naturalization proceedings—to go right ahead with the naturalization process if they have made a satisfactory showing as to loyalty. For instance, that would take care of men who have made homestead entries on the public domain. Certain restrictions are imposed, of course. The man must have taken out his first papers not more than seven years prior to the day war was declared by the United States.

Mr. Speaker, these various offers of American citizenship to those aliens who deserve citizenship can not fail to clear conditions in all parts of the United States. For years I have been for a restriction of immigration. Too many aliens came too fast. But those who are here and who mean well deserve fair and just treatment.

War has checked immigration, and I am satisfied that one of the things this war will do for the United States is to determine its citizenship, so we will know who are the real Americans, no matter when or whence they came. But, Mr. Speaker, we can not afford, in making that determination, to encourage a feeling of hate against the people whom we know and who can themselves prove that they are loyal. Sooner or later we must gather up all the loyal and well-meaning people in the United States into full citizenship, and I am satisfied this bill will go a long way toward doing it. We can jail or deport the others. The bill when it becomes a law will be one more proof that the United States never lets itself give way to malice, viciousness, or hatred, for it will prove to the people here from other countries, when their countries are at war with us through no acts of these people, that the great United States means to be fair to them. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw attention to section 3 of this bill, which runs as follows:

SEC. 3. That all certificates of naturalization granted by courts of competent jurisdiction prior to December 31, 1918, upon petitions for naturalization filed prior to January 31, 1918, upon declarations of intention filed prior to September 27, 1906, are hereby declared to be valid in so far as the declaration of intention is concerned, but shall not be by this act further validated or legalized—and to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon the paragraph to which he has just addressed himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the minute or two remaining I wish to say to the House that this is one of the important paragraphs in the bill. Recently the Supreme Court, in the case of Morena—and, as it is a short case, I shall insert it in the RECORD—decided that where certificates of naturalization had not been applied for within seven years they were void, and this decision had the effect of invalidating probably 100,000 certificates of former aliens who believed themselves to be citizens of the United States. The invalidation of their certificates again alienated them, their wives, and their children. The effect of the Supreme Court decision, of course, was Nation-wide.

In every congressional district—certainly in every State—there are men who believed they had qualified under the law with regard to naturalization, but who were cast out suddenly by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, due to the legal conditions that will appear. Good faith to these intending citizens, I assume, should induce us to remedy the defects pointed out by the court. I shall put in the RECORD certain data bearing upon the matter.

Mr. Speaker, the following letter from the clerk of quarter sessions of Philadelphia first brought this matter to my attention:

PHILADELPHIA, January 10, 1918.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am in receipt of a telegram from the Commissioner of Naturalization, advising me the United States Supreme Court has handed down an opinion in which it held that the declarations of intention issued prior to the date on which the act of June 29, 1906, went into effect are invalid.

One of the provisions of the above-named act was to make declarations of intent invalid for all purposes seven years after the date of issuance, and, with the exception of the United States judicial circuit taking in the southern district of New York, it has never been heretofore held that that provision was retroactive.

It is my belief this opinion of the Supreme Court will have the effect of making all certificates of naturalization issued throughout the country since this act went into effect, namely, September 27, 1906, the petitions for which were supported by declarations of intent that were more than seven years old, null and void.

I thought that you might be interested in introducing a bill in Congress that would have the effect of validating all such certificates.

Yours, very truly,

THOS. W. CUNNINGHAM,
Clerk Court of Quarter Sessions.

The Department of Labor was then consulted, with the result shown in the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, January 18, 1918.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MOORE: I am in receipt of your letter of the 15th instant to the Commissioner of Naturalization, with which was transmitted a communication addressed to you by the clerk of the quarter sessions court at Philadelphia, Pa., in relation to aliens who have been naturalized on declarations of intention filed prior to September 27, 1906, which declarations were recently held by the Supreme Court of the United States to be invalid.

In reply I beg to inform you that this matter is now being taken under advisement, and as soon as it is possible to do so a bill to accomplish the purpose indicated will be prepared and submitted to you.

The letter of the clerk of the court is herewith returned to you, as requested.

Very truly, yours,

LOUIS F. POST,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, January 29, 1918.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MOORE: Referring further to your letter of the 15th instant, to the Bureau of Naturalization, in relation to the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States with regard to declarations of intention filed prior to September 27, 1906, I beg to state that I believe some legislative action should be taken in this matter and submit the following as a draft of the bill proposed by you:

"That all certificates of naturalization granted by courts of competent jurisdiction prior to December 31, 1918, upon petitions for naturalization filed prior to January 7, 1918, upon declarations of intention filed prior to September 27, 1906, are hereby declared to be valid in so far as the declaration of intention is concerned, but shall not be by this act further validated or legalized."

Very truly, yours,

LOUIS F. POST,
Assistant Secretary.

The bill introduced by me February 1 followed the exact language of the Department of Labor as submitted in the second letter of Assistant Secretary Post, and is now incorporated in the bill submitted by the conferees, except that the date "January 7, 1918," is changed to "January 31, 1918," for reasons satisfactory to the committee.

The purpose of it, of course, was to remedy the unfortunate conditions arising from the confusion of rulings on naturalization matters, but these have now been settled by the decision of the Supreme Court. I append that opinion:

[Supreme Court of the United States. No. 523. October term, 1917. The United States v. Antonio Morena. On a certificate from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Jan. 7, 1918.]

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court.

This certificate presents for construction certain sections of an act of Congress passed June 29, 1906, and entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States." (Ch. 3592, 34 Stat., 596.)

The pertinent parts of the act are as follows:

"SEC. 4. That an alien may be admitted to and become a citizen of the United States in the following manner, and not otherwise:

"First. He shall declare on oath before a clerk of any court authorized by this act to naturalize aliens, or his authorized deputy, in the district in which such alien resides, two years at least prior to his admission, and after he has reached the age of 18 years, that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States * * *: Provided, however, That no alien who, in conformity with the law in force at the date of his declaration, has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall be required to renew such declaration.

"Second. Not less than two years nor more than seven years after he has made such declaration of intention he shall make and file in duplicate a petition" for citizenship.

The facts certified are these:

Morena, on December 15, 1905, declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and on December 21, 1914, filed in the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania a petition for citizenship. On April 6, 1915, the petition was granted, and he was admitted to citizenship.

July, 1915, the United States filed in the district court a bill praying that the order admitting Morena to citizenship be vacated and his certificate be canceled upon the ground, among others, that the certificate was void, because it had been granted upon a petition filed more than seven years after he had made his declaration and more than seven years after the passage of the act of Congress of June 29, 1906.

The district court dismissed the bill, and an appeal was taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

The Circuit Court of Appeals, reciting that there are conflicting decisions upon the construction of the act of Congress, has certified the following questions:

"1. Is a declaration of intention made before the naturalization act of 1906 saved by the proviso of the first paragraph from the seven-year limitation of the second paragraph of section 4 of the act?

"2. Is an alien who has made a declaration of intention before the act of 1906 required to file his petition for citizenship at a time not more than seven years after the date of such declaration of intention?

"3. Is an alien who has made a declaration of intention before the act of 1906 required to file his petition for citizenship at a time not more than seven years after the date of the act?"

The question in the case, then, to state it succinctly, is whether the act of 1906 is applicable to declarations of intention made prior to its passage, and to what extent applicable, if at all?

That the question is susceptible of different answers is indicated by the diversity of views of the courts which have passed upon it.

(The cases deciding that the seven-year limitation is applicable to prior declarations are as follows: In re Goldstein et al. (D. C.), 211 Fed., 163; Yunghauss v. United States (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 218 Fed., 168, sustaining 210 Fed., 545; Harmon v. United States (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 223 Fed., 425, affirming decree of district court; and In re Lee (D. C.), 236 Fed., 987. The cases contra are: Eichhorst v. Lindsey (D. C.), 209 Fed., 708; In re Anderson (D. C.), 214 Fed., 662. And to like effect are: United States v. Lengyell (D. C.), 220 Fed., 720; In re Valhoff (D. C.), 238 Fed., 405; Linger v. Balfour, 149 S. W., 795.)

The cases that have answered the question in the negative have invoked in support of their view the presumption that statutes have prospective operation unless controlled by contrary intention clearly expressed and certain provisions of the act which indicate, it was said, that it was not the intention of Congress to invalidate a declaration of intention made prior to the act "at any future time." And one case adduces the contemporaneous construction of an administrative board.

The words especially relied on are those of the proviso in the first paragraph of section 4 and those of section 8.

(SEC. 8. That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not speak the English language: Provided, That this requirement shall not apply to aliens who are physically unable to comply therewith, if they are otherwise qualified to become citizens of the United States: And provided further, That the requirements of this section shall not apply to any alien who has prior to the passage of this act declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in conformity with the law in force at the date of making such declaration: Provided further, That the requirements of section 8 shall not apply to aliens who shall hereafter declare their intention to become citizens and who shall make homestead entries upon the public lands of the United States and comply in all respects with the laws providing for homestead entries on such lands.)

The latter may be disregarded. It prohibits the naturalization of aliens who can not speak the English language, if physically able to do so, but preserves prior declarations if made in conformity with law in force at their date. The proviso of section 4 deserves more notice. It is that no alien whose declaration conformed to law when made "shall be required to renew such declaration." To this provision the cases we have summarized—and we refer to them because there is no brief on file for Morena—have ascribed the direct influence of excluding declarations theretofore made.

We can not assent to that view or to the view that if a limitation be put upon the time to complete the declaration by the final application for citizenship it can be construed as invalidating the declaration. It is no destruction of a right or privilege to limit the time for its assertion, and the cited provision does no more. Section 4 prescribes a time for completing the declaration, a time so liberal regarding the privilege granted and the reason for granting and seeking it as not to be considered in any just appreciation of words as even a limitation of it. And there was appealing purpose. There were reasons for diligence and reasons for giving to all declarations the same duration.

It is to be remembered that the resolution of the alien to change his allegiance is expressed in his declaration. The interval of time between it and admission to citizenship is the precaution of the law to assure of qualification. In the old law this interval could not be less than two years, and so in the new law. Aside from this there was no other prescription in the old law of the time that should elapse between the declaration and the final petition. The minimum of time was preserved in the new law, but there was a maximum time prescribed for the completion of the declaration, and unless this was made applicable to "old-law declarations" as well as to "new-law declarations" the act of 1906 would not do what its title declares it was intended to do—"provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States."

A limitation of time even upon the assertion of a right theretofore having no limitation upon its assertion, or a different limitation, is not infrequent, and its legality is unquestionable if a time reasonable, in view of the subject matter, be given. (Wilson v. Iseminger, 185 U. S., 55; Soper v. Anderson, 201 U. S., 359; Blinn v. Nelson, 222 U. S., 1. See also Sohn v. Waterson, 17 Wall., 596; Union Pacific Railroad Co. v. Laramie Stockyards Co., 231 U. S., 190.) This being the power of Congress, there were, as we have seen, promptings to its exercise.

The act therefore does not invalidate old declarations. It only specifies a time for their realization, a time ample to consider and estimate the value of realization, the extent of its duty and responsibility, a time determined and applied, therefore, upon full consideration; and we are not impressed with the argument that would assign an eternity of duration to prior declarations.

The first question certified would seem to be addressed to the view that the act of 1906 made nugatory declarations theretofore filed. This, however, is not urged by the Government, and we consider it untenable for the reasons which we have already expressed. Such has been the ruling of the cases.

We therefore answer the first and second questions in the negative and the third in the affirmative.

And it is so ordered.

An unofficial statement of the far-reaching consequences of the Supreme Court decision, which suggests the harm that has been or may be done unless the bill validating certificates as proposed is speedily enacted into law, is herewith submitted:

An examination of the naturalization records of the United States district court and the quarter sessions court, Philadelphia, indicates that an average of 17 per cent of the certificates of naturalization issued between June 30, 1913, and June 30, 1917, inclusive, were based on old-law declarations of intention, and therefore illegal under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Antonio Morena, rendered January 7, 1918.

It is assumed that this average (which is considered very conservative) would be maintained throughout the United States. The total number of certificates of naturalization issued during the four fiscal years ended June 30, 1917 (less the number, approximate, issued in districts where old-law declarations were rejected), was 250,637, to which should be added the number of such certificates issued during the period July 1, 1917, to January 7, 1918, approximated at 31,330, making a total of 281,967 certificates thus issued, which, computed on a 17 per cent basis, shows that 47,934 illegal certificates of naturalization were issued during the period stated.

Exact figures can only be obtained upon an inspection of approximately 500,000 individual petitions for naturalization to ascertain whether an old law or a new law declaration of intention was filed in support thereof and whether the petition was granted, denied, or is pending.

In view of the position in which the holders of so many invalidated certificates—men who have believed themselves citizens by the action of our courts—now find themselves, due evidently to mistaken notions of the law, for which the certificate holders were not to blame, I trust this remedial legislation will pass. Otherwise, it returns to the alien class for all the odium and suspicion that attaches to aliens in war times, hundreds of thousand of patriotic and good-intentioned women and children who necessarily resume an alien status with the fathers and husbands who understood they had shaken it off.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I have served notice upon the House that at the proper time I desire to move to recommit this conference report to the conference committee, and I wish now to indicate to the membership of the House upon what ground I propose to take that step. I want to say at the outset, however, that I think this is a very salutary bill as a whole, and am glad that it has progressed so far toward enactment.

The matter to which I desire to direct the attention of the House seems to me a fundamental blot upon a bill which is, in general, a most desirable and important addition to our laws. I wish the Members of the House would turn to the bottom of page 3 of the text that is before us, and which reads as follows:

Any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States during the time this country is engaged in the present war may file his petition for naturalization without making the preliminary declaration of intention and without proof of the required five years residence within the United States.

The purpose of that provision, of course, is to grant citizenship to the men who are in the military or naval service of the United States—men who need to be protected with the cloak of American citizenship as long as they are continuing to fight for the flag of the United States; men who have shown that they have patriotism by volunteering or by declining to claim exemption, as they had a right to do under the draft; men who, in other words, are as worthy of American citizenship as any men in the entire United States. That, I think, is an admirable provision.

Page 4 and most of page 5 deal with the methods by which those men can take on American citizenship, so long as they are in the United States, namely, that they may appear, after complying with certain formalities, before the appropriate court, may take the oath of allegiance, may be relieved from the necessity of proving residence, and may then directly and forthwith acquire American citizenship.

Then, at the bottom of page 5 there is a provision to which I wish to direct the especial attention of the House, which takes care of soldiers in the military forces who are in France and elsewhere outside of the territory of the United States, and who, therefore, can not, in the discharge of their duties, appear before a naturalizing court as is ordinarily required in order to acquire American citizenship.

I desire to read that provision in part:

Any alien who, at the passage of this act, is in the military service of the United States, who may not be within the jurisdiction of any court authorized to naturalize aliens, may file his petition for naturalization without appearing in person in the office of the clerk of the court, and shall not be required to take the prescribed oath of allegiance in open court.

In other words, that, as I say, is to take care of the men who have left the United States on duty and who are now, perchance, members of the American Expeditionary Force. Those men number to-day somewhere in the neighborhood of 125,000. There are about 125,000 men serving in the Army of the United States, most of whom are in France, who are aliens and to whom we desire to give the opportunity of acquiring American citizenship. With that, I think, we all sympathize. But I wish to direct the attention of the House to three respects in which the language that I have read and the immediately succeeding language fails utterly to accomplish the purpose which we desire to achieve:

Any alien who, at the passage of this act, is in the military service of the United States.

There are, we will say, about one million and a half men in the military service of the United States to-day. There are 125,000 of those men who are aliens and whom we want to permit to acquire citizenship. We are going to have an army, perhaps, of 4,000,000 men or 6,000,000 men—nobody knows.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS. With an army of a million men or thereabouts, I say, we have 125,000 aliens. That is about one-eighth of the total. If we have an army of 4,000,000 men in the near future, we shall have half a million of our soldiers, if the same proportions are maintained, who will be aliens. And yet this conference report says that unless those men are in the military service at the time this act becomes law they may not be permitted to acquire American citizenship.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. I must correct the gentleman. That is not a provision of the law at all. The provisions of the law permit a man when he is here—as stated on page 3—to be naturalized, and the intention is, and it is the purpose of the appropriation, that in the future all who are aliens and desire to become citizens of the United States shall be naturalized before they leave the country. That is a provision of the law.

Mr. ROGERS. It may be the intention and the purpose of the law that these men shall acquire citizenship before they leave the United States, but suppose those men are shipped off to France before they have the opportunity to acquire citizenship? We all know that men do not instantly take advantage of their rights. We all know that this law will not be familiar to the officers of our Army at once or to the aliens who are in our Army, and the moment that they go to France, the moment they leave the United States, provided they enter the military service subsequent to the passage of this law, their rights are instantly stopped, because they must appear in person before the naturalizing court in order to have the privileges of this act.

Mr. HAYES. Let me say to the gentleman that his fears are entirely groundless. The law not only permits their naturalization before they leave this country, but every Army officer in the United States is fully alive to the necessity of seeing they are naturalized, and the committee has had repeated conferences with the War Department upon that subject, and this provision is entirely satisfactory to them.

Mr. ROGERS. There may be somebody in the War Department or somebody else somewhere else who will know about this law and who will try to encourage our soldiers to acquire American citizenship before they go abroad. But we know from our experience with the war-risk insurance act and the limitations of the provision for taking out insurance that as a practical matter these soldiers do not do things at once, and that very many of them will be left outside of the fold.

Now, I ask the House what possible reason there can be for saying that the alien who enlists in the Army the day before this law becomes operative is to be permitted to take advantage of this provision without appearing in open court——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. ROGERS. What reason is there for saying that an alien who enlists in the Army the day before this law becomes operative shall be permitted to take advantage of this provision without appearing in open court, while the man who enlists the day after the law becomes operative and who is sent abroad promptly to France, and who, during the interval, has not taken out his citizenship papers, is absolutely debarred from the process of this law, and must still be an alien, although he is fighting for the flag of the United States?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I understand that the War Department is not sending over aliens to France now.

Mr. ROGERS. There are aliens in France now, and there will be aliens in France later.

Mr. RAKER. My colleague from California [Mr. HAYES] has explained that those will be provided for. The officer will know just who are aliens in his service. He will be interested as well as the Bureau of Immigration to see that those men are all naturalized before they go across. Then they can take the matter up and go into court close by, and the same day they will be naturalized, and the next day they will go to France, so that it will protect everybody.

Mr. ROGERS. There is a theoretical remedy. But what we want is a practical remedy. Can any Member of this House give a reason why a man who joins the Army the day before the law becomes operative is permitted to do one thing and the man who joins the Army the day after the law becomes operative is required to do another thing? Why is one required to do what his brother has not done?

I have been very much interested in this law. I think the committee knows that I am very anxious to do anything I can in promoting its enactment. I ask unanimous consent that, without infringing further upon the time of the gentleman from California, I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would couple with that request a request that I may have five minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no possible objection. I understood that the chairman of the committee was going to take care of the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will submit my proposition to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the War Department has already written to every cantonment in the United States, expecting the passage of this law, so that all the aliens in those cantonments will be listed, and every one will be known, and they will be naturalized as speedily as the law can do it, and no doubt all future enlistments will be subjected to the same sort of care.

Mr. ROGERS. We all know that the provisions concerning the taking out of insurance by soldiers was very thoroughly and very effectively advertised throughout the armies and camps of the United States, and yet we know that at this moment, perhaps, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is taking testimony with a view to amending that law so that men who failed to apply within the time limit may hereafter acquire insurance. Now, this is precisely the same sort of thing. There may be a theoretical remedy for these soldiers. There may be a possibility that they will acquire naturalization papers before they will go abroad. But I venture the confident prediction that there will be hundreds and perhaps thousands of these men who will go abroad and who, if this language is left in the law as it stands, will not be able to take advantage of the act.

At the bottom of page 3 the conference committee recommends this language:

During the time this country is engaged in the present war may file his application for naturalization.

My suggestion is that, on page 5, line 21, we strike out the words "at the passage of this act" and substitute the words "during the time this country is engaged in the present war." There can be no possible objection to that, I submit to the House, and these men will thereby automatically be taken care of. Why should one sort of treatment be extended to men who join the Army on one day and another sort of treatment be extended to men who join the Army the next day?

And, then, there is another point that I want to call attention to. In line 22 are the words "any alien who is in the military service of the United States." Why should there be a restriction to the military service? Why should not men in the naval service be included? Why do you repeatedly in this act use the term "military or naval service" but confine this provision to those in the military service? I call your attention to the language on page 3, line 20, "any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States." I call your attention also to page 4, line 4, "service in either the military or naval service of the United States." I could cite you half a dozen other places where aliens in the military or naval service are taken care of. There must be some reason why naval men are excluded in this place, and I would like to know why it is.

Mr. BURNETT. Those in the other places the gentleman has called attention to are not to go out of the country. Those are now in the military service and none are in the naval service now.

Mr. HAYES. There are now none but citizens in the naval service of the United States. Up to five years ago there were men who were in the naval service of the United States who were not citizens. That language is intended to protect those in the future, so that, so far as our law is concerned, there will be none except citizens.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me call your attention to the language on page 3, line 21:

Any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States during the time this country is at war.

Mr. HAYES. There are none.

Mr. ROGERS. Then, why do you speak of it in one place and not in the other?

Mr. HAYES. It is mere surplusage.

Mr. ROGERS. Even though it may be true that at this moment there are no aliens in the Navy—which I very much question—we do not know what the policy of the country will have to be in the near future. The Secretary of the Navy has the power to handle this by regulation, and he may at any moment modify the present policy so that declarants may be admitted to the Navy, or, possibly, so that out-and-out aliens may be admitted to the Navy.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. That being true, is it not a fact that any man in the United States who enters either the military or naval service can the very next day be naturalized under this bill?

Mr. ROGERS. There is a theoretical remedy. I do not know how long it would take, but he would have the remedy, provided he was not shipped right off to the front.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the carrying out of the draft law in the future it is not proposed to draft any first-paper aliens. The trouble which we have had in the Army was due to the fact that we took in first-paper noncitizens on the theory that they were citizens. That caused the Secretary of War to recommend legislation here to change the draft law.

Mr. ROGERS. What I am trying to find out is why men in the military or naval service of the United States are taken care of in most places in the bill, but in this particular case only the men in the military service are taken care of.

Mr. HAYES. I explained to the gentleman that in the cases where they are not taken care of it provides for the future, and there are no men taken into the naval service of the United States who are not citizens, whereas there are men who have been in the naval service, and it is possible that there are still a few whose term of enlistment has not expired, because I am advised by a gentleman sitting by my side here that instead of five years it is only three years since the law was changed.

Mr. ROGERS. I repeat that in my obtuseness I can still see no reason why you should draw the line in one place and not in another.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the third and last suggestion that I have to make is with reference to words which appear at the top of page 6—

The petition shall be verified by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses who are citizens of the United States, and who shall prove in their affidavits the portion of the residence that they have personally known the applicant to have resided within the United States.

At the bottom of page 3 it is stated that—

Any alien serving in the military or naval service of the United States during the time this country is at war may file his petition for naturalization without making the preliminary declaration of intention and without proof of the required five years' residence within the United States.

And I assume that that means that it is not necessary to file proof of any period of residence within the United States. Yet when we get to the top of page 6 we find the requirement in the case of the men who are in France that their witnesses shall prove in their affidavits the portion of the residence that they have personally known the applicant to have resided in the United States. I submit that there can be no justice in that requirement. In view of the fact that by the very terms of the act itself residence is not necessary to be shown in connection with taking out naturalization under these circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, I shall move to recommit the conference report, because it seems to me that these things go to the essence of a very good bill. There is no great delay involved in this process, as we have seen more than once, most notably in connection with the draft law of a year ago. We shall certainly have to correct these three or four places in the bill, and perhaps some others that have been suggested in the course of the debate, before very long by resolution if we do not take care of them now. It will mean a delay of only one day to take care of them at this time.

I am very sorry that in a bill of this importance the House has not had an opportunity to consider it in detail and under the five-minute rule. I think there are many places where a careful study and scrutiny by the House would have improved doubtful places. At the same time I repeat that I think this bill is an enormous step forward, and I am very glad indeed that we are going to have the opportunity to do this measure of justice to the aliens who are fighting for the cause which we all hold sacred. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I can not persuade myself that the objections urged by my distinguished and learned friend from Massachusetts are really important. This bill has had the careful consideration of two committees, of the Senate and the House, and then of the joint committee of both Houses, and has been gone over, I am told, in a careful manner by the departmental officials in the Bureau of Naturalization, and has been approved all along the line as a wise and timely measure. In point of fact there are, as the gentleman says, about 125,000 or 130,000 men now in Europe who are not citizens of the United States, but who are helping to fight the battles of the United States. In most instances they are citizens of countries with which we are engaged in war. They undertake a double hazard in their military service. If they escape the bullet or the bayonet in the actual battle, they are rather apt to run into more serious trouble if they are captured, for they will be promptly shot as traitors as soon as it has been discovered that their allegiance is to Germany, to Austria Hungary, or perhaps to Bulgaria or Turkey. We want to correct that situation at once. It is most urgent. It is in behalf of these particular people that urgency in this matter is demanded. They are there now, perhaps engaged in battle to-day, and we ought to relieve them of that needless peril as quickly as possible. We ought to throw around them, as the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] said so convincingly, all of the protection that can be given them by clothing them with the citizenship of the American Republic. I hope that no gentleman will be sufficiently impressed by the argument of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] to persuade him to vote to recommit the measure, because there will be more than one day of delay in that event.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are other features of the bill that I am very much in favor of and, which I regard of extreme importance. These features relieve men who are merely technical aliens from that stigma; good, loyal citizens, with members of their families doing loyal service. That ought not to be delayed. There are men interned to-day as alien enemies who have been living in this country 10, 20, 30, 40 years, who have discharged the duties and exercised the rights of citizens, and until this question came up they never suspected themselves to be alien enemies, even technically speaking, and they are as good and loyal citizens as we have in the country.

There are living in my district now quite a large number of Slavs, Bohemians, Croatians, Poles, and others who when they go into our Army, unless they shall have become citizens, undertake for themselves serious peril which we can avoid for them. They are more intensely hostile to the countries with which we are at war than we are ourselves; their enmity is traditional, it is personal, their enmity has inclined them to take the peril of revolution under the most hazardous conditions. Do not let us be negligent of our duty in affording them all the protection possible. I think the question that the gentleman from Massachusetts has raised about the difference between men who are enlisting the day before the act passes and those who enlist the day after is of no particular importance, if he will pardon me, because no man who has enlisted is inducted immediately into the Army or the Navy of the United States. When he has enlisted the enlistment tells the date, the birth, the age, and all about him, and he can at once, if this bill becomes a law, be made a citizen of the United States before he is sent abroad to fight the battles of the country. That citizenship is their due. They are our soldiers, fighting our battles, and, I repeat, entitled to all the protection we can give them.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, no country in all history has such a composite population as America. Europe's picked people were our earliest settlers. This is true whether applied to the English, the French, the Dutch, the Spanish, or Swedes, all of whom were represented in the original Colonies. That is due, first, to the promised land, whose glowing reports were made to Europe by the early discoverers and explorers, who gave it the title of "the land of the free and the home of the brave." It soon became and has remained the shelter place and the refuge of the Old World, some coming to better their condition because of a chance to materialize real ability in the country which Emerson declared was but another name for opportunity, and another motive was to run away from oppression. Much of our population is imbued with the spirit of freedom simply because of its denial before they came here. They have largely shared in the progress of the country, which in the short space of a little over a hundred years has shown the most wonderful growth in population, as well as in wealth and other achievements, of any nation on the globe.

Naturally these conditions—oppression in Europe and freedom here—would populate our country with a large proportion of people who, although without sympathy with the home country, yet might not take advantage of naturalization at once to become citizens of this country. Notwithstanding that fact, when we think of that particular element of European population who came here to escape oppression we can easily recognize their fighting spirit for liberty when the war in Europe was realized as a struggle of a people against the oppression of autocratic government.

Especially is this true of that portion of the population of the central powers living in Austria and denied the freedom which belongs to a democratic system.

It is easy to explain why at least 17,000 residents here that are not citizens of our country, but who in law must be regarded as citizens of the country from which they came—in this case Austria, in the main—would at the very first outbreak of the war, which now has become a struggle for liberty, take the earliest opportunity to engage in a fight against the world oppressor for liberty as represented by their native country. The 17,000 from the other side are but a small proportion in the service of liberty.

That spirit explains why they are found in the army of the allies, notwithstanding the fact that legally they belong to the countries that they are fighting. They came to escape oppression. Now they fight to assist their kin to enforce liberty at home. Now, I think it is the least thing we can do, first, in honor of the brave fellows who with eyes wide open to the penalty awaiting them in case of capture, and, secondly, in removing the embarrassment to our own Nation, and, thirdly, to give impetus to those who are fighting first in the ranks of our allies and then to the millions of oppressed under the Austrian yoke, as well as trepidation to those who are fighting against us.

When we realize that Austria at this very moment is in a state of unrest which augurs possible revolution, especially if they could organize their power and secure in their own hands, by the use of effective weapons revolution might be heard in Austria. The difficulty is that 10,000,000 Germans in Austria, known as the Austrian ruling element, are controlling 18,000,000 that are not Germans and have little to say about government. The 18,000,000, double the population of the ruling class, are little more than abject slaves. That is absolutely true, for I am giving figures. Eighteen millions of people who in a country where government is of and by and for the people, in Austria are subjects composed of Czechs of Bohemia, Slovaks of Moravia, Poles of Silesia, the Slovenes of Slovenia, and Serbo-Croats of southern Austria. All these and many more are subjects and have no privilege to speak of in the government. Yet they double the population of the ruling element, and if this vast mass could know that America is giving their own blood not only for the protection of civilization but its best support to back up their patriotic purposes in a fight for liberty, and also that the prestige of this Government will go to the very limit in fighting for the things they are fighting for, in my judgment that will stir, as few things can stir, the spirit of revolution in Austria. We ought not, in my judgment, to be too nice about what we do in order either to strengthen our own people in their fight in this war or to weaken our enemy, both of which are military strategy employed by every belligerent. I shall vote for this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, there is no bill in which I am more interested than the one now before us. Many years ago I remember to have read that Gen. Garfield while in the House, in writing to Hinsdale, wrote across the corner at the top. It was during the days of reconstruction. He said, "Dear Burke, I am trying to be a radical without being a fool."

There have been times when that message has come ringing into my own ears. No man who has followed my votes here from time to time could question for a single moment that I am intent upon the prosecution of this war to a victorious end. [Applause.]

On the other hand, I recognize that due to faulty State laws and misconceptions many citizens in my own State who vote and who have held office, who have conducted themselves as good citizens for many years, find themselves suddenly to be aliens. This law undertakes under certain conditions to give them an opportunity to perfect their citizenship. I think that is wise at this time. It is true that we asked them to come here, and it is true they took advantage of our institutions and have prospered, but it is also true that they have built well for us. There is many a man to-day, in my own district, who if he were to loudly talk of his patriotism would have suspicion cast upon him on the ground that he was undertaking to cover up his delinquencies, and on the other hand, if he is quiet and moves along in the course of his life as he has ordinarily done, yet suspicion also is cast upon him. It would be outrageous, so far as the fighting boys are concerned, not to pass a bill of this kind, but simple justice demands that German-American citizens should be treated as human beings at least, and given just consideration. This bill undertakes to do that, and I am going to vote for it. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. FAIRFIELD to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I occupied quite a lot of time unintentionally by reason of the number of questions that were asked, and there are two members of the conference committee to whom I would like to yield 25 minutes or get unanimous consent that they might speak, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] 15 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). Does the Chair understand the gentleman to make that request?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] be allowed 15 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is a very important bill to follow this, which the House yesterday granted unanimous consent to be taken up this morning immediately after the morning hour, of course subject to disposition of matters on the Speaker's table. It is a bill that I think will not take much time, but if it is not finished to-day under the order entered yesterday, will it have the right of way to-morrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman understands that the present occupant of the chair is a temporary occupant, and he would not like to answer that inquiry, but would prefer to have the Speaker of the House answer it.

Mr. FLOOD. The unanimous-consent order was that the bill should be in order to-day. This is a bill that the President and three or four of the departments of the Government are intensely interested in having passed, and they say that an hour's delay is important.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has been advised by the Speaker of the House, he will say in answer to the gentleman's inquiry, that unless the bill is disposed of to-day it would not go over until to-morrow and be the continuing order.

Mr. FLOOD. Then, with the gentleman's permission, I will interpose a request and ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 10264 be the order and the continuing order to-day and to-morrow, after the conclusion of this conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] has 15 minutes between the conclusion of this conference report and the taking up of the bill referred to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the consideration of any important measure, and I shall ask unanimous consent to postpone my 15 minutes until Tuesday morning next. I should prefer not to stand in the way of the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes on Tuesday morning next, not to interfere with conference reports, in lieu of the 15 minutes allotted to him to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of this conference report the bill H. R. 10264 shall be made in order, and that it be the continuing order for to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is the passport bill concerning which the order was made yesterday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] for 10 minutes on the pending measure. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman add to that five minutes to be allotted to myself?

Mr. BURNETT. I would be very glad to have that done.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will say that I expected to have time to-day.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that will mean 30 minutes more?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Is that all?

Mr. BURNETT. That is all that I know of.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Alabama make his request that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. BURNETT. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the request again. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] be allowed 15 minutes, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] 10 minutes, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] 5 minutes for the discussion of the pending conference report, and that at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that cut out the motion to recommit or is that not being pressed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will answer that it will not. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on the conference report be given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks general leave that all who have spoken on the conference report be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, because I have had occasion while in public office to come in contact with the foreign element of this country, especially that of Chicago, which I might say is one of the principal meccas for immigrants, I have always taken a lively interest in the citizenship and the naturalization of aliens, and therefore it affords me great pleasure and I will take this opportunity of expressing a few thoughts in a cursory way relative to the bill in question, and of emphasizing certain points thereof.

I have given this matter considerable thought and a plan such as this has appealed to me, and I am happy to see this Government make it its business of seeing that declarants of intention to become citizens of this country are to have means whereby they may become familiar with this country, its laws, its ideals, its fundamental principles, and its history.

The past proves the need of instructing the alien who intends to become a citizen. Books of naturalization and citizenship have been published and the declarant in order to obtain the same has been obliged to pay for them. As I understand this bill, and it is also my idea, these books regarding citizenship are to be distributed free of charge to the applicant. But the bill provides that such textbooks are to be distributed only to candidates in attendance at schools. I am of the opinion that such books should be distributed to each and every alien who declares his intention of becoming a citizen; that such distribution should be made at the clerk's office where the declaration is made. The need for such books exists. The good derivable therefrom on the part of the alien would be great. As my experience has taught me, Government agents and judges have counseled applicants needing instruction to obtain such citizenship textbooks. It resolves itself into the question of the most expedient means of effecting the distribution of such textbooks.

My experience as clerk of the circuit court of Cook County, Ill., makes me realize, now, more than ever the neglect of which this Government is guilty in reference to the instruction of its new citizens. The declaration of intention or the taking of the final oath is not such a preparation as will fit an alien to become a worthy and thorough American citizen. We have been naturalizing citizens, not nationalizing them. As a matter of fact, a great many aliens have taken citizenship papers not because of their desire of becoming Americans, not because they knew of this Government's ideals, not because they appreciated the air of freedom afforded by this land, not because of any particular knowledge of this country's past and destiny, but in many cases because of qualifying for a position of pecuniary advantage they could not otherwise obtain or to avoid certain obligations to their foreign country. I understand that to-day in Chicago the number of applicants for first papers has increased from three to five hundred per cent during the month of April of this year. The applicants are residents of this country and have been residents of this country for the past 5 to 30 years. Can you in all fairness believe that these citizens are lifting their hand in taking the oath of allegiance because of love for their new home, because of love for the colors? No; the reason why these residents, who have been living upon the fat of the land enjoying its luxuries just as the citizens of this country are, declare their intention is because of recent enactments and laws they are not able to obtain certain licenses to do various works and continue in certain jobs.

Let me say a word or two regarding another point, but before I touch upon it let me emphasize the fact that this country must instruct its candidates for citizenship. Schools should be established in such cities as have a great population of aliens, in centers inhabited mostly by foreigners, and these schools should be made permanent in such cities and localities. The books of instruction should be distributed free and declarants should be informed of such schools and classes for aliens by the clerk at the time of declaring their intention or applying for second papers.

Referring again to the great number of aliens in this country who have resided here for many a year and have not yet taken out their papers, it is my purpose to foster a bill that would make it compulsory upon them to take out their citizenship papers. [Applause.]

During the past year I learned to appreciate the problem of the great number of aliens in this country who owe no allegiance to it. I had the honor of being appointed chairman of the advisory board of the twelfth local district of Cook County, Ill., and while discharging such duties I was astounded at the great number of young men who claimed exemption on account of being aliens. Young men who had lived in our midst for years, given equal opportunities with our boys, men who were making comfortable livelihoods, claiming exemption because they were aliens. They had received the best the land could give them, they had left a foreign shore to better themselves and had done so; they had immigrated here to be free of the thraldom of autocracy, and they refrained from fighting for that freedom; and still they so little appreciated it they had not thought it worth while to bind themselves to the country of their adoption by the oath of allegiance. But the heirs apparent of the land, the firstborn, our American boys, had to go; they claimed no such exemption, and they went willingly. They went to fight the enemy of civilization in order to preserve intact the democracy of the world and of this land. But the alien remained behind. Our boys left their positions, sacrificed their future, tore themselves away from their mothers and fathers or their wives; they placed on the altar of patriotism their all, and offered all for the greater glory and the safety of the Stars and Stripes. But the alien stayed behind, behind the subterfuge of his alienation. He remained behind, stepping into our boys' position, reaping the harvest while the sower is away. Waxing fat with the riches of this land while our boys, those preeminently entitled to such riches, are spilling their blood on foreign soil. Is there any justice in such condition of affairs? Long ago the prophet said, "They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat." Such thoughts when pondered upon are revolting in the mind of the thinker, and brand him as a coward and a parasite who enjoys the luxuries of a country and fails to respond to its call when the source of his happiness and comfort is in jeopardy. This is no idle pen picture. It is a fact—a living fact; a fact for which the Government can only say, "mea culpa." And to remedy the same I will bend every effort in my power so that if in the future America calls her young men to the front she will call indiscriminately and without restraint, because all her young men will be Americans; not one half American and the other alien. [Applause.] The injustice of the situation appeals to me feelingly, because in my district we have a large population of foreigners, and when I think of American boys whom I have known all their lives, whom I have seen grow up and become successful in life, go to the front I am proud of them; but when I realize the great number of young men of military age remaining behind because of their foreign allegiance, my soul revolts with the injustice of the plan. We were all foreigners at one time, either our ancestors or ourselves. Why should some of us bear all the burden and the sweat of the day while others, similarly situated as we were, or our parents were, escape the sufferings, the sacrifices, and death incidental to carrying on this war to a successful end. I am not decrying the fact that we have to make sacrifices at this time, for greater honor and praise to him who makes the greater sacrifices and suffers more; but I want to draw your attention to the situation confronting us. The boys of my district have gone freely, gaily, and enthusiastically to meet the common enemy of humanity; they are in unison with the patriotism that permeates the air we breathe; naturally I feel the people of my district are in a class by themselves. They are sometimes referred to as from "in back of the yards," well back of the yards is the richest, the greatest, and one of the most important districts in the United States to-day. I am proud to say I come from that district, also known as the Stock Yard district. The people of my district sent me here recently to represent them, and represent them to the best of my ability I will try. I would like to foster a bill making it compulsory upon aliens to apply for their first papers.

I advocate the naturalization of all aliens, whether of military age or not. And the safeguard and penalty I advocate would be in time of war internment, and in time of peace deportation back to the country they came from.

I do not wish to leave the impression that we are not a nation but a "mere polyglot of the nations," for this war has proven that, although we are composed of the blood of many nations, we have assimilated our ideas and our hopes in this country. In the past some expressed doubts as to whether the United States could survive a world war in which the various nations taking part had sons and daughters in this country. But our doubts and our hopes of yesterday have become a convicition that we are to-day a Nation united in the bonds of liberty, united in the common desire to a more perfect state of living, united to live and let live, to rule and to be ruled, for "they love the land of their children better than that of their parents." I do not think that aliens who have not yet applied for their papers have failed to do so because of a greater love of their mother country than of America—no; in the majority of cases it is pure negligence.

My idea advocated here does not seem to me to be radical, severe, harsh, but is simply a matter of justice due from the alien to this country, and a matter of self-preservation, self-betterment, and greater national unity in peace time and especially in war time.

We might as well take these questions up now unflinchingly and without respect to persons and feelings illguided, for when our Army of boys come back, let me tell you, there are going to be great changes; they are going to see that these equitable, just, and democratic principles are lived up to and enacted into law. Our Government should enact such laws as will make the responsibility for military service incumbent upon all residents of this country who are or may be of military age.

These measures might just as well be taken up now as later on, for "ideas rule the world," and whether ideas arise before or after the conditions to which they relate, once they have arisen they will make their power to change and alter felt. No great and telling improvement or change has ever taken place without having been the fruit of an idea, sometimes an idea arising in the mind of a single man. True, ideas are powerless unless embodied in some kind of organization, but the latter is only the vehicle and detracts nothing away from the former. But supposing the vehicle, the organization, stands ready to carry to full fruition the idea emanating from the mind of the thinker, or supposing it emanates from the mind of a couple of million thinkers, can anyone deny the power of that idea? Therefore, remember that the young men you are banding together to go fight the Hun are going to be the thinkers for the future of this Nation, and the military organization the vehicle, the instrument to bring to full realization those ideas. If the impelling force of a simple single idea is so powerful, what titanic latent force must reside in the ideas that to-day, as a result of war, are not the idea of a single man, even of a few hundred thousands, but of millions and millions. What power to change! Let us not be taken by surprise. Each and every soldier boy silently keeping guard at the outposts or awaiting in the dark the command to go over the top, thinking of home, of what he has left, of what he has sacrificed, of what the autocracy of a couple of nations have forced him to do, of the great transition from peace to the battlefield; every boy so thinking will also realize the fact that there are many young men of military age remaining behind just as liable, just as obligated to fight for America as he is, and each and every one of them becomes a thinker, and will bring back his thoughts with him, and they collectively will force them upon the country.

These boys, millions of them, will bring back ideas to change many of the present and antiwar conditions. They themselves will be changed physically, mentally, and morally. War will have called forth the man in thousands of them. They are going to bring back with them a mighty organization to foster their ideas. Do not think that theirs is only a military organization. It will be the most powerful political organization the world has ever known. Through it our international courts and schemes will find a foundation. Can anyone deny the vast political influence which the Civil War veterans exercised after the Civil War. How many of their generals became our national leaders. They will bring ideas in reference to industrial alterations; their ideas regarding the health of the citizens will be heightened; they will give an impetus to a more real universal education; labor will really be dignified and not called dignified only by the sycophant politician; the wage increase will not be simply a bonus or war measure, it will be something permanent; and they will return a religious army seeking "the evidence of things not seen," for their proximity with death will reawaken in them the undeniable feeling best expressed by the phrase "Mankind is incurably religious."

And when in my mind's eye I see these boys returning, having become older in age and wisdom, having developed measures and thoughts for better government, more equality, greater comfort and happiness for the greater number, having a new life before them and a new earth to live on, after coming out of a terrible nightmare such as a battle field in this war is, I see them coming back a powerful organization either to contend with or to assist us in right and proper democratic government. They are fighting for democracy, and after winning it they are going to insist that it be given them. And they will insist upon just such measures as is here advocated, namely, the free distribution of books of instructions to new citizens, the establishment of schools to make Americans not only naturalized but nationalized citizens, the compulsory taking out of citizen papers. [Applause.] Read what the press have to say about slackers, also suggestions to frame such a law as I have in mind.

The New York Globe believes that—

To allow slackers of our companion nations in arms to find refuge here while their fellow men are giving their all in the struggle for world freedom is not doing our utmost for our allies. We are all one in the great fight, and we must stand together if we are to hope for victory. There must be no room in this country for the slacker, and the sooner he is given to understand this the better it will be for the cause.

The Macon Telegraph says:

The question of international law being in the way can easily be met, for surely the Governments of Britain, Canada, France, Italy, and every country fighting by our side will waive all meticulous points of law with positive enthusiasm, as they will have as little sympathy with slackers from their shores enjoying American immunity as we have with those of our people who have fled into Canada and Mexico, for instance. * * *

This land of the free and home of the brave is not and can not be made a sanctuary for those whose nationality calls for service under any of the many flags carrying the entente cause to victory.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat says:

If we were in a war with a neighboring nation over some comparatively inconsequential matter, it would be different, but we are engaged in the greatest struggle of all history in defense of the rights of all people to live their own lives without trespassing on the rights of others.

The Macon Telegraph follows with:

Subjects of Japan, Serbia, and Italy are absolutely exempt from military service for this Government, according to a State Department memorandum summarized by a New York World correspondent, "because treaties between the United States and these countries specifically provide that nationals of the contracting parties shall not be taken for military service against their will." Aliens from other friendly countries may, however, be drafted if they have taken out their first papers announcing their intention to secure American citizenship. This writer learns that most of the allied governments would be willing to have their nationals drafted here or deported to their homes.

This law is not an imposition that I suggest here to-day; we have not to become apologists to enact the same. We are not asking anyone for anything. We are demanding for this Government what is due to it, what it is entitled to—allegiance and loyalty on the part of all who have come here to make their home under the mighty branches of the mighty tree of liberty, of all those who reap of the plenty of the country, of all those who, "dreaming dreams of freedom" and wishing to realize the same, left the land of their ancestors and family and childhood ties behind them and came here to enjoy the liberties destined for men who can live as men, established for men who can act as men, and preserved by men who, realizing what the Stars and Stripes mean to them, their parents, or their children, are conscientious and loyal enough to shed their very blood to keep those colors afloat upon the flagstaff of victory and success.

Not only for the far and dim future but for the present this measure seems opportune. The great problem to-day in the Nation, so far as I can see, is coordination in all and every respect, unity in all things, a national spirit imbuing all with the same desires and hopes, and a centralization of the powers of each and every resident of the United States—not only of every citizen—to win this war.

And any inhabitant of this land not responsive to this call and suggestion, any resident of this land who would refuse to fit and prepare himself in every way possible, physically, mentally, morally, and especially politically, to bring to triumphant issue the present conflict, any inhabitant of this country enjoying the benefits of the land who would act or speak in such a way as would make one infer that he thinks that this war is not his war, that he has no obligations of patriotism and loyalty to the land he has adopted, is not worthy of our companionship as fellow men, is not worthy to tread upon the soil made sacred by the blood of the first foreigners and aliens who came here years ago, has no place beneath the American sky, and should be sent back to the land he came from, for there is no such thing in this life as being a citizen of no land, as being neutral in all respects—perfect neutrality is death—and America has no time for dead members. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, being extremely anxious for passage of this bill without any further delay, I do not desire to take up a great deal of time, but in view of certain attacks and objections raised on the part of some gentlemen against several of the provisions of the bill, and in view of the fact that others are more or less opposed to the bill and, not being able to find any valid objections, lay great stress on the form in which it has been presented to the House, I feel it my duty to take some time in which I desire to explain how it came about that the bill was not considered originally in the House, and, at the same time, wishing to assure the Members that the action on the part of the conferees was proper and not unusual, feeling confident that I will be able to demonstrate it before I conclude my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, the very day the resolution declaring war against the Austro-Hungarian Government was passed, being satisfied that the great majority of the subjects of Austria-Hungary were not in sympathy with their Government, and having positive knowledge that nearly all the former subjects of the monarchy, especially the Slavic and Latin races residing in the United States, who, remembering the discrimination, oppression, and persecution of their kinsmen by the tyrannical and deceitful Governments, welcomed the opportunity to be of service to their adopted country, this great Republic of ours, and enlisted in our Army in large numbers, notwithstanding that they still were unwilling subjects of that hypocritical monarchy, not having had the opportunity of becoming naturalized citizens of the United States. [Applause.] On that day I introduced a resolution, known as House joint resolution No. 181, providing for their exemption from the classification of alien enemies, which I insert as part of my remarks:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 181) providing that Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks Roumanians, Poles, Ruthenians, Serbs, Croatians, Slovens, and Italians be, and are, specifically excluded from the classification of alien enemies as subjects of Austria-Hungary.

Whereas this Congress, upon the recommendation of the President of the United States has declared that a state of war exists between the United States and Austria-Hungary; and

Whereas certain States and Provinces within the Empire of Austria-Hungary have been subjugated to its rule without their consent and against the wishes of the inhabitants; and

Whereas the peoples of these States and Provinces, to wit, the Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Poles, Serbs, Croatians, Slovens, Italians, and Roumanians, suffering from the persecution and oppressions inflicted upon them by the Empire of Austria-Hungary, have sought and been given the haven of these United States in very large numbers; and

Whereas these people gratefully appreciate the shelter and opportunities given them by the United States and are now eager and anxious to serve this country in its present grave crisis; and

Whereas throughout the breadth and length of this country thousands of men of these races have enlisted in the several branches of the armed forces of this country to sustain and aid it in the holy fight for democracy and the freedom of all nations, large and small; and

Whereas many more thousands of the men of these races have been called to serve and are now serving under and by virtue of the selective-draft act; and

Whereas the said Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Poles, Serbs, Croatians, Slovens, Italians, and Roumanians are technically considered subjects of Austria-Hungary, which status is beyond their control and contrary to their wishes; and

Whereas by the declaration by this Congress that a state of war exists between the United States and Austria-Hungary these said Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Poles, Ruthenians, Serbs, Croatians, Slovens, Italians, and Roumanians at present serving this country in the several branches of its armed forces who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, or who, having declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, have never become fully naturalized, are immediately considered alien enemies, thereby being restrained in their patriotic desire to serve this country whole-heartedly and devotedly and to give their all to aid the cause of humanity and democracy; and

Whereas they and all other peoples of these States and Provinces who are noncombatants would be barred from entering, working, conducting business, or residing within certain territories prohibited to alien enemies; and

Whereas such a condition would cause a grave wrong and irreparable injury to peoples whose loyalty and devotion to this country stands unquestioned and unchallenged, and who unselfishly and unreservedly have upheld the cause of the allied powers against the central powers: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the said Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Poles, Serbs, Croatians, Slovens, Italians, and Roumanians be, and they are hereby, specifically excluded from the classification of alien enemies wherever such classification now exists, as to subjects of Austria-Hungary, by reason of any act of Congress of the United States or regulations established by the President of the United States and under such rules and regulations as the President may from time to time promulgate.

SEC. 2. That the said Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Poles, Ruthenians, Serbs, Croatians, Slovens, Italians, and Roumanians shall not be barred from the armed forces of the United States due to their status as (unwilling) subjects of Austria-Hungary and that they shall be subject to the operation of the selective-draft act.

The resolution was referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee, and the following day a hearing was held on the same and I briefly gave the committee my reasons in support of the resolution, and insert herewith the statement I then made:

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, realizing the fact that we will be forced and compelled, due to conditions, to declare war against Austria-Hungary, and being more or less acquainted with the conditions of that country, or dual monarchy, and the people who compose that State, I felt it my duty to prepare a resolution which would exclude from the classification of the alien-enemy act such people who are now, and always have been, unfriendly to the Austria-Hungary Government, and who, through no fault of theirs, are the subjects of that dual monarchy.

Austria-Hungary is composed of a great many States and Provinces. Austria herself is only a small part of the Austria monarchy. The Germans have a population in Austria of 9,950,266.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean that is the whole population?

Mr. SABATH. That is the population of Germans who reside in lower and upper Austria and some of the Provinces. On the other hand, there are 6,435,983 Bohemians, there are 4,957,984 Poles, 3,608,844 Little Russians there are 1,252,940 Slovenians, there are 783,334 Serbo-Croatians, there are 768,422 Italians, and 275,115 Roumanians. That is in Austria. In Hungary there are 10,050,575 Magyars, who are known as Hungarians; there are 2,949,067 Roumanians, 2,037,435 Germans, 1,967,970 Slovaks, 7,833,167 Croatians, 7,106,471 Serbians, and 472,587 Little Russians. So that the majority of the people are not Germans, but are of Slovak and Latin descent. They are held and dominated by the empire of Austria-Hungary against their will, and for years and years the Bohemians, the Poles, the Slovaks, the Croatians, the Slovenians, and Serbians have endeavored to secure their freedom and independence from Austria.

Mr. STEDMAN. And that is the feeling there?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; and it has been for years and years and is now. In the last three years, and since the declaration of war, a great number of Bohemians, Serbians, Slovenians, and Poles have been condemned by the Austrian Government for treason, because they have tried to secure for their countries, now controlled and held by Austria, the freedom and independence to which they are entitled, and which, I hope, they will eventually secure.

Being acquainted with these people and their sentiments, I have introduced this resolution, believing they should be exempt from the operation of the alien-enemy act, because to-day we have large numbers of these people in our Army——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Have you a copy of the alien-enemy act?

Mr. SABATH. I have not. As I was saying, to-day we have large numbers of these people in the Army of the United States as well as in our Navy. A great number of them have been accepted on their first declaration, mostly on declaring their intention to become American citizens, but under our law it takes two years after they have filed their declarations to become citizens, so that many of them are not yet citizens, although they have filed their intention and declaration to become American citizens. There are a great many others who have not filed such a declaration of intention and who are in our Army and Navy. However, all of these people are loyal to our cause, to the cause of America, not only for the love they have for and duty which they owe to this country, but also through the sympathy which they have for their mother country. In addition to these large numbers of people of these various States and Provinces who are found in our Army and Navy, we have thousands who are employed in ammunition plants, in our coal mines, and in a great many other industries, whom I know to be loyal to this country and to the cause of our flag. Therefore I believe it would be manifestly unfair to them, as well as to ourselves and to our industries, and even to those men who are now serving, if this resolution or a similar resolution should not be adopted, so as to exclude them from the operation of the alien-enemy act.

I have introduced this resolution for another reason. Of course, among these nationalities, as among all other nationalities, although their sympathies are with us, there are some who claimed exemption from the operation of our selective-draft act. I feel that as we are giving these people every opportunity to better their condition in this country, and as they have all of the advantages of an American citizen, that they should also be made to accept the responsibilities of this Government the same as any other American citizen in this war and during this war, and I am therefore providing in this resolution that all these of military age shall be treated the same as our own citizens and shall be subject to the selective-draft act. I feel satisfied that nearly all of the men whom I have in mind are desirous of doing their duty toward this country. I am satisfied that nearly all of them are right; I will not say that there are not some here or there who may not be in full accord with the things we do, but we find that even among some of our own American citizens, born in this country and whose forefathers were born in this country. But on the whole I feel that they are loyal and can be trusted.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I call your attention to the fact that our conscription of these aliens would be violative of international law? It is not optional, it seems, whether we will make them citizens of this country and subject to conscription, because our treaty with Austria-Hungary perhaps forbids that we should force their subjects into our armies.

Mr. SABATH. Well, I will say this: I do not think that we have a treaty with these nationalities. We may have with Austria-Hungary, and I am not one of those who is willing to violate the treaties of any nation, but nevertheless——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If I am not mistaken, our treaty with Austria-Hungary carries with it the most-favored nation clause, and we have treaties with certain countries which provide that even in case of war we can not impress their subjects into our armies.

Mr. SABATH. I have that in mind; but I also have this in mind: All of these nationalities that I am describing do not subscribe to the treaty with Austria-Hungary; they do not desire the privilege of exemption that might be theirs under the treaty; they are not in accord with Austria-Hungary, and I know that the sentiments of a large percentage of those who live here are not with the country of their birth or the Government that has oppressed them, their relatives, fathers, and mothers for many, many years, but their sympathies are with our country, and they are anxious and willing to serve this country.

After extensive hearings on the resolution, during which representatives from the Department of Justice, the Army War College, State Department, and Council of National Defense appeared, it was referred to a subcommittee for redraft and amendments. Within a few days the resolution, with some amendments, was favorably reported to the committee, and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], was authorized to report the same to the House, which was done on January 23 in the form of bill H. R. 9159. For the information of the Members and the record I insert the report thereon, containing the amended resolution or bill:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 181) providing that Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Roumanians, Poles, Ruthenians, Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, and Italians be and are specifically excluded from the classification of alien enemies as subjects of Austria-Hungary, having had the same under consideration, reports back, as a substitute therefor, a bill (H. R. 9159) to authorize the President of the United States to exclude certain subjects of Austria-Hungary and Germany from the classification of alien enemies and to naturalize certain members of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and recommends that the bill as reported do pass.

The bill referred to is as follows:

"A bill to authorize the President of the United States to exclude certain subjects of Austria-Hungary and Germany from the classification of alien enemies and to naturalize certain members of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered by proclamation or otherwise to exclude Alsatians, Bohemians, Croatians, Hungarians, Italians, Jews, Lithuanians, Loranians, Moravians, Poles, Roumanians, Ruthenians, Serbs, Slovaks, Slovenes, and other natives, subjects, or denizens of Austria-Hungary or Germany, or any individual or class thereof, from the classification of alien enemies, wherever such classification now exists by reason of any act of Congress of the United States: Provided, however, That such exclusion shall not apply to any individual who claims exemption from the military service of the United States under the selective-draft act of May 18, 1917, on the ground of alienage.

"SEC. 2. That during the present war any alien now or hereafter in the service of the United States, as a member of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who has an honorable record in such service, may, while in such service, be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition filed in any district court of the United States, the United States district courts for the Terriories of Hawaii or Alaska, the United States district court for Porto Rico, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or a court of record of any of the States having a common-law jurisdiction and a seal and a clerk, whether or not any such alien be a resident of the State, Territory, or District in which the application is made. The court before admitting such alien to citizenship shall require oral or documentary proofs, by witnesses under oath or by affidavits, that he is of good moral character and loyal to the United States, but shall not require him to prove more than one year's residence in the United States previous to filing such petition, and shall also require him to make the oath of allegiance to the United States as now prescribed under the law relating to naturalization. And except as hereinafter specified in this act, the method herein provided for acquiring citizenship shall apply to all aliens hereinbefore described, whether or not they are natives, citizens, subjects, or denizens of a country, State, or sovereignty with which the United States is at war: Provided, That they are not otherwise ineligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws now in force.

"SEC. 3. That application for naturalization in the mode herein provided shall not be open to natives, citizens, subjects, or denizens of Austria-Hungary or Germany, except such individuals and classes as may be exempted by the President under the provisions of section 1 of this act.

"SEC. 4. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to make and promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, whether or not such regulations conform to the procedure now existing.

"SEC. 5. That certificates of citizenship obtained in the mode provided in this act shall be subject to cancellation in any district court of the United States upon proof that the person so naturalized has been guilty of mutiny, sedition, desertion, or of committing a felony against the criminal laws of the United States, or of committing a crime which, according to the laws of the place where it was committed is punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year in a penitentiary, or that he has been dishonorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States. The procedure in the district court of the United States for such cancellation shall follow the procedure described in the act of June 29, 1906, chapter 3592, section 15, and shall be in addition to modes of cancellation and of expatriation provided by all statutes now in force.

"SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall remain in force and effect during the continuance of the present war, and all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended during the continuance of the present war."

The committee earnestly and unanimously recommends the passage of this bill.

It has come to the attention of the committee that within the confines of the two great military empires with which this country is at war there are probably 32,500,000 people who are friendly to our war aims and those of our allies and bitterly hostile to every aim of the central powers.

Of these, 8,500,000 are German subjects, and 24,000,000 are subjects of Austria-Hungary.

The representatives of these submerged nationalities, held down at home by the exercise of despotic military power, now residents of the United States, number close to 5,000,000 people, who are engaged in many classes of important industries of this country. Evidence given before your committee discloses that over 76,000 unnaturalized men of these nationalities are now serving in our Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, 62,000 having enlisted and about 14,000 having been incorporated in the service under the selective-draft act, who have not claimed exemption as aliens. The status of these aliens must be fixed, and they should be made citizens, as it is our duty to give them all the protection which it is possible to give, so that in the event of their capture they would not be considered traitors by the country of which they are still subjects and unwilling citizens.

Our task is first to do our duty by these people, especially those who have enlisted in our military service.

Second. To conserve the good will of these people here, and of their kindred and members of their races in the central empires, by making it clear to them that we do not consider them as enemies of this country.

Third. To utilize their activities in the many fields of industry in which they are now engaged in this country.

Fourth. To leave nothing undone to safeguard the security of our country.

The committee feels that it has accomplished all of these purposes in the bill which is herewith submitted.

The French Government early in the war adopted a similar policy.

On October 13, 1914, the French ministry of justice instructed the district attorneys to seize all personal and real property of German, Austrian, and Hungarian subjects engaged in commerce, industry, or agriculture in France, and place such property in the charge of receivers. The ministry of the interior issued, on the same date, instructions to the prefects of the various Departments to assist the district attorneys in every possible way. It was expressly provided, however, that the measure was not to apply to Alsatians, Poles, or Bohemians, the original provision reading:

"Cette mesure ne sera pas applicable aux Alsaciens-Lorrains, aux Polonais et aux Techèques."

The text of the instructions will be found in L'Économiste Français for Saturday, October 24, 1914, page 443.

As evidence of the feelings of these nationalities, resolutions recently adopted by the Bohemian National Alliance of America are herewith attached:

"RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE BOHEMIAN NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF AMERICA.

"Whereas in A. D. 1526 the Czech (Bohemian) Nation of its own volition elected the Hapsburgs to the throne of Bohemia, and had nothing in common with the other Hapsburg lands except the dynasty, and the Hapsburgs at that time, by solemn oaths and pledges, bound themselves to maintain and protect the independence of the Bohemian State; and

"Whereas the Czechs never ceased to fight for complete independence from Austria and never waived, directly or indirectly, their rights to complete independence, and their representatives always opposed the present arrangement of the Dual Monarchy, as is evidenced by the President of the United States himself, who, in his work on 'The State,' declares: 'No lapse of time, no defeat of hopes, seems sufficient to reconcile the Czechs of Bohemia to incorporation with Austria.' And even now the Austrian Emperor, as one of his titles, calls himself the King of Bohemia; and

"Whereas no Bohemian parliamentary body has ever authorized a declaration of war, and the Czechs throughout the war have opposed Austria-Hungary to the utmost limits of their ability, as is evidenced by declarations of Czech deputies in the Austrian Parliament, manifestos of Czech authors, and pronouncements of Czech workingmen's organizations, as well as by the bitter prosecution and wholesale executions the Austrian Government perpetrated upon the Czechs throughout the duration of the war; and

"Whereas the legal existence of the Bohemian State is further attested by the existence of a Czecho-Slovak Army in France and Russia, under the leadership of the Czecho-Slovak National Council, headed by Prof. T. G. Masaryk; and

"Whereas the Czecho-Slovak Army in Russia recently declared in public proclamation that the Hapsburgs are deprived of the Bohemian Crown and of Slovakia, that it is conducting a defensive war on Austria-Hungary, that the Czecho-Slovak Army, led by the Czecho-Slovak National Council, is a regular army, and should be recognized as such under international law; and

"Whereas Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary, as far as the Bohemians are concerned, is nothing but a usurper, he never having been crowned King of Bohemia, and thus not having performed the ceremony which would give him the legal sanction to govern Bohemia, and the throne of Bohemia is therefore vacated; and

"Whereas the Czechs and Slovaks are members of the same nation, the only difference being that the Czechs are suffering under German domination in Austria, while the Slovaks are suffering under Magyar domination in Hungary, and Czechs and Slovaks, by a solemn manifesto issued in Paris on November 15, 1915, declared themselves against Austria-Hungary and the Hapsburg dynasty, demanding therein complete independence for the Czecho-Slovaks, and the reconstruction of an independent Czecho-Slovak State; and

"Whereas in the other allied countries Czechs and Slovaks are not considered alien enemies, move freely about in Great Britain and in France, and an identification card of the Czecho-Slovak Council is sufficient evidence that the bearer is a member of a friendly nation, and in Russia the late provisional government ordered all the local authorities to extend the privileges allowed members of friendly nations to all Slovaks and Czechs living in Russia who bear identification cards of the Alliance of Czecho-Slovak Organizations in Russia; and

"Whereas immediately upon declaration of war against Germany by the United States Czechs and Slovaks joined the United States Army in large numbers, and, indeed, furnished more volunteers proportionately than any other racial group, and by other methods, such as large purchase of liberty bonds, they attested the passionate loyalty of all Czechs and Slovaks to the United States of America: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the President and the Congress of the United States of America be urged not to classify the Czecho-Slovaks as alien enemies and exclude them from the operation of the alien-enemy act."

Some days later the bill was called up on the floor for consideration, and the first section exempting the nationalities therein mentioned from the operation of the alien-enemy act and the third section stricken out, and, as amended, the bill was passed by the House. It then only provided for the immediate naturalization of all aliens now or hereafter in the service of the United States. A short time later the so-called Raker bill, H. R. 3132, passed the House, amending section 2171 of the Revised Statutes. On March 8 I introduced a bill to validate certificates of naturalization erroneously issued, which bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on March 15, and which is now on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I insert herewith the report of the committee, which contains the bill as reported to the House:

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred H. R. 9455, introduced by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, having had the same under consideration, reports in lieu thereof a bill H. R. 10589, and recommends that the bill as reported do pass.

The bill referred to is as follows:

"A bill to make valid certain certificates of naturalization.

"Be it enacted, etc., That all certificates of naturalization granted by courts of competent jurisdiction prior to December 31, 1918, upon petitions for naturalization filed prior to January 31, 1918, upon declarations of intentions filed prior to September 27, 1906, are hereby declared to be valid so far as the declaration of intention is concerned, but shall not be by this act further validated or legalized."

On January 7, 1918, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the United States v. Morena, held that all certificates of naturalization issued on declarations of intentions filed over seven years prior to the issuance of said certificates were issued in violation of the act of 1906. The Naturalization Bureau and the Secretary of Labor feel that it is for the interest of the Government, and in justice to the persons so naturalized, that all such naturalizations be validated, which this bill aims to do.

In the last session the House passed several bills harmonizing our naturalization laws pertaining to the aliens in the Navy, Marine Corps, and merchant marine. All of these bills having been favorably considered by the committee, and most of them having passed the House, remain awaiting consideration in the Senate. Feeling that there should be no unnecessary delays on any of the bills, and fearing that many of them may fail to pass the Senate, I have, with the aid and cooperation of the Naturalization Bureau, drafted a bill which not only included the bills previously passed and those favorably reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee and the Immigration and Naturalization Committee, but also other provisions which the various departments thought necessary, and which I thought very much needed to assist thousands upon thousands of deserving and loyal resident aliens, and introduced on March 13 the bill H. R. 10694. Prolonged and careful hearings were held on this bill by the Immigration and Naturalization Committee, and after careful consideration on the part of the committee the bill was amended and perfected, and on the 15th day of April I was authorized and instructed by the committee to reintroduce the bill as amended and report the same to the House, which was done by me on April 18, the bill being numbered H. R. 11518, and the report thereon was filed April 20. On April 16, the day after the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization agreed on the bill, and the Senate committee fully realizing the importance of the legislation and the immediate need for it, the same having been submitted to the Senate committee, after careful consideration agreed to the House bill and, wishing to finally expedite the delayed passage of this legislation, embodied it (H. R. 11518) as an amendment to H. R. 3132, which had previously passed, and the committee asked for a conference on the same, to which the House agreed. In view of the fact that the Senate amendment is virtually the bill H. R. 11518, which after weeks of careful consideration was favorably reported by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the conferees on the part of the House came to the conclusion that the matter was properly before them and that they were not exceeding their authority in its consideration in that form, and felt that thereby the House, as well as the Senate, would be saved a great deal of time in enacting this needful legislation. At this juncture I desire to insert the report on H. R. 11518, filed on April 20, which fully explains the bill:

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11518) to amend the naturalization laws and repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and other laws relating to naturalization, and for other purposes, reports the same to the House and recommends the bill be passed. It recommends this bill as a war emergency measure and urges its passage at the earliest possible moment. The main provisions of this bill consist in adding seven subdivisions to section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906, being an act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States.

The seventh subdivision has been prepared for the purpose of unifying the rule of exemptions extended to certain aliens who have received military training in the armies of the United States and the Philippine Islands, as well as those serving on vessels of the United States Government and the American merchant marine. It also makes the first enlargement ever authorized of the provisions of section 2169 by allowing Filipinos who have served in the United States Navy or Marine Corps or the Naval Auxiliary Service, and have been honorably discharged therefrom after the term of enlistment specified, to petition for naturalization under the conditions and limitations as defined in the seventh subdivision, and includes all those who are at present in the military service of the United States, whether they have declared their intention or not.

For all of these classes of cases the seventh subdivision provides that a petition of naturalization may be filed in the most convenient court, and be heard without the usual delays necessitated under the general provisions of the naturalization law and without the usual proof of residence in the United States required of aliens to whom no exemptions from the general provisions of the naturalization law have been extended. Because of this special method of naturalization the subdivision requires the appearance of those candidates before a representative of the Bureau of Naturalization before filing their petitions for naturalization in the office of the clerk of the court.

It also provides a means for the naturalization of all of the foreigners in the military forces of the United States in whatever capacity they may be associated. The subdivision, in brief, provides for the naturalization of those who have taken up arms in defense and in the service of the United States Government.

Further provision is made to prohibit the filing of a declaration of intention during 30 days preceding and including election day. This provision is analogous to the one which excludes the courts from naturalization authority during the 30 days preceding election, and is a provision that has long been known to have been inadvertently overlooked in the enactments heretofore passed. The subdivision also prohibits the naturalization of aliens serving on vessels of foreign registry, this construction having been maintained by some courts in view of the provisions of section 2174, which recognizes service of aliens on vessels of American registry. Penal provisions are contained in this subdivision by the terms of which citizenship is forfeited by those who are naturalized under the terms of the seventh subdivision if they are convicted during the time the country is at war of the offenses named. It also waives the payment of the naturalization fee by the American soldier during the time of war.

Subdivision 8 safeguards the rights that have for years been given to aliens serving on vessels of the American merchant marine and is necessary in view of the inclusion in the general codification of section 7 of such aliens.

Subdivision 9 authorizes the continuance of the work of the Bureau of Naturalization in connection with the public schools and the local Army exemption boards.

Subdivision 10 contains a reenactment of the act of June 25, 1910, in language that is clear in its meaning and continuing the exemption up to May 1, 1914, instead of May 1, 1910, and includes all in the general provisions of the law except the alien enemies who are authorized by subdivision 11 to proceed, under the restraint imposed by the eleventh subdivision.

Subdivision 11 authorizes those who by the terms of section 2171 were excluded from naturalization because they were alien enemies to proceed under the terms of this subdivision to naturalization. It includes those who by the act of June 25, 1910, at the time the existence of the state of war was declared were entitled to become citizens of the United States without making the declaration of intention, and in addition authorizing those who had declared their intention prior to that event and those who had petitions for naturalization then pending to perfect their naturalization after the consent of the Bureau of Naturalization shall have been received by the clerk of the court. It distinctly provides for the hearing in open court and in the presence of the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization, and in this particular class of aliens provides that the objection of this representative of the Government shall cause the petition of this alien, who has been exempted from the alien enemy classification, to be continued until the Government is satisfied as to his loyalty.

There is a large number of aliens whose loyalty is unquestioned and well known who, under the registration of alien enemies, have recently had disclosed to them the startling fact that they are not citizens of the United States. They are to be found in largest numbers in the States where aliens have been voting for generations upon the declaration of intention. Instances have been reported to the committee of these unfortunate individuals who are Americans at heart, who have lived in this country upward of 70 years—they were infants when they were brought to this country by their parents over 70 years ago—some of them, and have lived almost all their lives in States where aliens have been authorized by the State constitutions to vote upon their declaration of intention. These children, growing to manhood, have exercised all the rights of American citizenship, some of them for nearly a half a century. Some of the cases reported to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization included those who were legislators in the States where they lived, and others who had held elective and appointive offices and who have their grandchildren as soldiers in the present war. Cases have been reported to the committee of those who were engaged in the Civil War, on either side, who have but recently, by reason of the registration required by alien enemies, found that they were not citizens. The act of June 25, 1910, which is repealed by this act, gave them the right to proceed to become naturalized without making the declaration of intention. Subdivision 10 reenacts this portion of the act of June 25, 1910, but it is not applicable to the alien enemy as reenacted. Subdivision 11 provides the means by which those who by the act of June 25, 1910, were at the time the state of war was declared to exist between this country and their sovereign entitled to become citizens of the United States without making the declaration of intention to file their petitions without making the declaration of intention, because they have for years in good faith believed themselves to be citizens of the United States and have exercised the rights and performed the duties of a citizen. While this act will repeal that portion of the act of June 25, 1910, referred to, it does not prevent them from filing their petitions for naturalization upon the right which was vested in them by the act of 1910, and which was theirs at the time the existence of a state of war was declared, although their alien enemy status was unknown to them and the necessity to exercise that right was not at that time known by them.

Subdivision 11 also authorizes the Bureau of Naturalization to investigate the loyalty of any alien enemy who may apply for naturalization and who is not included in those previously exempted, and after determining definitely the loyalty of such alien enemy to except him from such classification for the purposes of naturalization. It also authorizes the appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose of carrying on the provisions of this act.

Subdivision 12 authorizes the naturalization of any alien soldier of the United States military or naval forces serving outside of the United States, upon return to the United States, and to have the period of military service outside of the United States counted as residence within the United States to complete the five years.

Subdivision 13 offers a great relief to hundreds of thousands of citizens who secured their American citizenship status by the act of the father in becoming naturalized. Great embarrassments have been experienced by those who have secured citizenship through the acts of their parents because of the insufficiency in the law to provide them with certificates showing their American citizenship. This provision will relieve all these citizens, and those who hereafter secure citizenship by the acts of their parents, by providing a distinctive certificate of American citizenship to be issued by the Bureau of Naturalization from its records. It will be impossible to cause the issuance of this certificate of citizenship by the clerks of courts, for the reason that the father may have been naturalized in Baltimore and subsequently removed himself with his family to St. Louis. His children on reaching adult age and desiring to exercise the rights of citizenship may be in various parts of the country. None of them can secure any evidence of their citizenship, since the law provides no certificate of citizenship for them. The clerk of the court in St. Louis would be wholly incompetent to issue a certificate of citizenship on the naturalization of the court in Baltimore, and none of the clerks of the courts at the places where the sons reside would have any means of determining whether or not these sons were actually naturalized by the act of their father as alleged. The Bureau of Naturalization has the duplicate originals of all naturalization records authorized by law to be retained, and it alone is the only source from which such certificates of citizenship can be issued and the fraudulent issuance of them prevented. In view of the importance of this certificate of citizenship, and the uses to which it may fraudulently be placed, the same penal provisions that surround the certificate of naturalization are enacted in connection with this certificate of citizenship.

Section 2 contains the numbers of the sections of the Revised Statutes that are repealed, and also refers to and quotes the other portions of the acts amending the naturalization law that are repealed. The lengthy quotation is necessitated by the fact that in all of these instances the acts carrying these provisions have been parts of acts which carried appropriations.

In the general repealing portion of this section the provision as to the effect of this act upon section 2169 of the Revised Statutes is clearly shown not to enlarge it in any way except as to the Filipino, and only in those cases of Filipinos who have performed the service in the Navy as defined in subdivision 7.

The provisions of section 2166 of the Revised Statutes are not repealed in their application to those who were honorably discharged in Civil War times and up to and including those who were discharged from the Spanish-American War.

It also makes the usual provisions regarding the application of the criminal statutes in cases of offenses and crimes against the naturalization laws of the United States.

Section 3 validates all certificates of naturalization that may be granted by courts of competent jurisdiction up to December 31, 1918, where the declaration of intention has been declared by the Supreme Court to be invalid. This relates to declarations of intention made prior to the operation of the current naturalization law that were not acted upon until after the seven years which the present naturalization law prescribes as the limit of the life of a declaration. There were probably a hundred thousand aliens naturalized upon declarations of intention, between September 27, 1913, and January 7, 1918, which had been taken out under the old law and were held by the Bureau of Naturalization to be valid. The decision of the Supreme Court declared them to be invalid. None of these naturalizations, therefore, has been legally conferred, on account of the invalidity of the declaration of intention.

There were probably many petitions filed in January, in good faith, by foreigners whose declarations of intention that were not valid under the Supreme Court decision, after the decision, and before the notice from the Bureau of Naturalization was received by the clerk of the court. This notice was sent at once, but in order to embrace all that may have filed, the date of January 31, 1918, has been named as the final and inclusive date, and December 31, 1918, as the date when these petitions may be acted upon. Under the present law they will all have an opportunity to be disposed of.

This section also classifies the positions of naturalization assistants where the compensation has been paid by the Department of Labor under the authority of various appropriations and section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906. This has been urged heretofore by the Department of Labor because of many gross irregularities that have grown up by the acts of these clerks and because of the inability of the clerks of courts to supervise their work. This will place them immediately under the Bureau of Naturalization and prevent and wholly eradicate these practices, and also result in a more economical expenditure of the funds from the appropriations.

The committee has most carefully considered this bill and held extensive hearings covering many weeks. At these hearings it has learned from the report of the Provost Marshal General that 123,277 aliens waived all exemptions on account of their alienage and were certified to the first draft army. The second draft army, with its larger quota and prospective legislation further increasing the military forces of the United States will bring in ever increasing numbers of other loyal foreign-born men who owe an allegiance in their heart to the United States, the country of their adoption. This will probably mean that 500,000 loyal foreign-born residents of this country will joint our colors in the next year. All of these should have the privilege of citizenship conferred upon them while they are taking up this most fundamental and sacred of all obligations of citizenship—the obligation and willingness to take up arms against the common enemy.

During the last year there has been unprecedented increase in the number of applications for citizenship, in addition to those candidates for citizenship disclosed by the reports of the Provost Marshal General. The number of candidates for citizenship in the civil life has been greater during the last year than at any time. The number of naturalizations since the European war commenced in 1914 has been greater than at any other time, notwithstanding the fact that immigration has been only on an average of about 300,000 annually. Over 75,000 petitions for naturalization were filed during the first nine months of this year, while the average number of foreigners admitted to citizenship annually heretofore has been but slightly more than 70,000.

In addition to this, attention is particularly called to the large number of foreigners who have been classified by law as alien enemies. Among these, it is well known, are large numbers—hundreds of thousands—who are loyal and devoted wholly to this country. These foreigners feel the stigma of their alien-enemy status—many of them have innocently believed themselves to be citizens under the Federal and State laws. Registration of alien enemies during the past year has disclosed the fact that they had not completed their citizenship in accordance with the law, although they had exercised all of the rights for many years. Particular attention is also invited to the provision which will enable the alien who secures citizenship by the act of his father to receive the certificate of United States citizenship which this bill for the first time authorizes to be created and issued.

Because of all of these most insistent remedial measures, the committee has recommended the appropriation of $500,000. This amount has been found to be the minimum amount necessary, after careful investigation and study both by the committee and by the Bureau of Naturalization of the Department of Labor. The subject matter of this bill as contained in the bill H. R. No. 6347 has been approved by the Department of Labor. Certain modifications have been made in the bill since that time by the committee as the result of subsequent experience.

The minor amendments shown in the conference report have already been explained by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to the best of my ability to show, and believe that I have shown, that the conferees have acted in the best interest, not only of the House but also of the country. I regret that I have not the time to personally more fully explain the bill, and therefore, for the benefit of all those Members who are not present now and who, due to lack of time, have been unable to familiarize themselves with each and every provision of this bill, I insert herewith a statement explaining it:

GENERAL STATEMENT.

This act is a general codification of the several exemptions that are extended to aliens who serve in the military and naval forces and in the American merchant marine, so that they will all have a uniform rule of exemption from compliance with the general provisions of the naturalization law.

There have been a great many amendments to the naturalization law carried by various appropriation bills in the last 10 or 15 years, which are entirely lacking in uniformity.

This bill makes the rule uniform in requiring at least three years' service and an honorable discharge of aliens, so that they may be naturalized and recognition given to their time in the military service or in the service on the seas. While they are in these two branches of service they do not have any domicile on the land in the usual sense, and therefore are unable to acquire residence in the jurisdiction of the court, to enable them to comply with the general provisions of the naturalization law.

It also makes it possible for the military forces of the United States to be strengthened at the present time by providing for the immediate naturalization of those who have had military, naval, or merchant-marine training, by doing away with the 90-day period of posting the petition and by enabling them to come into the most convenient court without proving that they have lived in the State for the one year necessary under the general provisions of the law.

This will all be found in subdivision 7. This subdivision also provides the formal method for the naturalization of the soldiers in the draft army who are not citizens. It allows them to file their petitions for naturalization in the courts at the cantonments or Army camps, and allows them to have their petitions heard at once.

The seventh subdivision provides means for the naturalization of all of the soldiers who are in our military forces, whether they have declared their intention or not and wherever they may be found.

These provisions have all been deemed wise by the committees of the two Houses and the conferees, as well as the Senate, in view of the fact that these aliens have waived all exemptions to which they are entitled and have put on the American soldier's uniform and are ready to fight and offer their lives in protection of the principles of liberty and freedom for which this country is fighting.

The seventh subdivision also provides that no fees shall be paid by these foreign-born soldiers.

Subdivision eight preserves the rights which American seamen of foreign birth now have, and which they have always had, of protection as American citizens after they have declared their intention, and is necessary of inclusion here, for the reason that section 2174 of the Revised Statutes has been modified by the provisions of subdivision seven, and in order to safeguard these rights, which have been extended to these foreign-born sailors in our American merchant marine from time immemorial, it was deemed wise to reenact the remaining portion of that section of the Revised Statutes and repeal the section itself, since its principles are embodied in this act.

Subdivision nine. This subdivision will enable the Bureau of Naturalization to continue the work it has been carrying on with the public schools throughout the United States for approximately four years and strengthen that work by authorizing the presentation to the foreigner who is a candidate for citizenship of a textbook by which he can be instructed in the responsibilities of American citizenship. It also gives lawful authority for the Bureau of Naturalization to continue the work which it has been carrying on with the local army exemption boards, at their request, of locating alien declarants subject to the draft army who have denied their declarations of intention and claimed exemption as aliens. Many thousands of names have been reported to the Bureau of Naturalization, and large numbers of aliens have been disclosed as fraudulently claiming exemption and have been turned over to the military forces as a result of this work.

The tenth subdivision is a recodification in clear and concise language of the ambiguous language contained in the act of June 25, 1910.

Subdivision eleven. This section amends the provisions of the act which was passed by the House and which appears in lined type on page 1. This provision as it passed the House allowed alien enemies to be naturalized without any restrictions. The language in subdivision eleventh allows them to be naturalized, but only after a searching investigation by the Bureau of Naturalization has determined that they are loyal. It also allows the Department of Justice to recommend to the President any specially meritorious cases where the loyalty of the individual alien is substantiated without a doubt. Upon this recommendation the President of the United States may exempt these aliens from the alien enemy classification in order that they may apply for naturalization.

This subdivision also, as it passed the Senate and was agreed to by the conferees, carries an appropriation making effective the administration of this most important legislation.

The American soldiers of foreign birth now in the first draft army represent over 123,000 patriotic foreigners. The second draft army will have a larger number, and as there are apparently to be 3,000,000 soldiers raised, it will mean a larger and heavier responsibility and work than ever before. The number of aliens in the first draft army to be naturalized is far greater than the entire naturalization of any one year. The work can not be done without adequate means to accomplish the purposes of this act.

The twelfth subdivision is a substitute for the legislation that was passed on October 5, 1917. That act required the certificate of citizenship to be issued, while this substitute allows the American soldiers to repatriate themselves in the same method without requiring the issuance of the certificate of citizenship. This certificate has already been found to be a very dangerous instrument, and opens the door wide for fraud.

The thirteenth subdivision makes it possible for any alien-born American soldier to become naturalized on his honorable discharge, and return to the United States without proving five years' residence immediately preceding his naturalization in the United States.

Section 2 contains the numbers of the Revised Statutes that are repealed. It also contains those portions of the various appropriation acts which offer exemptions from a compliance with the general provisions of the naturalization law but which were not at all uniform in their application.

The last portion of section 2 contains a general repealing clause but leaves the provisions of the penal statutes for violations of any acts that may occur before the passage of this act, so that prosecutions may be maintained after this enactment. It also safeguards the rights of aliens who have been honorably discharged from the Spanish War and Civil War and who may not have completed their naturalization, so that they may perfect their rights at such time as they deem it necessary.

SEC. 3. This section validates all naturalizations that were granted by courts of competent jurisdiction during the period following September 27, 1913, where the declaration of intention was more than seven years old. It also allows time for all petitions to be heard that were filed prior to January 31, 1918, upon such declarations of intention. On January 7, 1918, the Supreme Court declared all such declarations invalid, and notices were received by all clerks of courts before January 31, 1918, not to accept any more such declarations.

Mr. Speaker, briefly this bill will permit, without delay, the naturalization of nearly 150,000 men now in the military forces of the United States. It will enable us to utilize men who have had years of experience in the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, the Mexican border, and in many of the European armies, who, notwithstanding their experience and knowledge of warfare, can not be appointed as officers to help in training recruits here or to be of service in the trenches on the western and Italian fronts. The bill will also make it possible to naturalize a large number of aliens who are classified as alien enemies, and who, due to age and other causes, can not enlist in our armed forces, but are doing their utmost to be of service to our country. They are employed by the thousands in our mines, in the munition plants, in the shipyards, in the shops, in the factories, and on the farms, and, in fact, in every essential industry in the United States, working to supply food and to maintain our Army and Navy and our allies. But due to the fact that unfortunately they were born in the lands ruled by the Austro-Hungarian Government, they are made by existing laws and classified as alien enemies and, upon the declaration of war against Austria-Hungary, could not be naturalized.

Mr. Speaker, from the beginning of the war a large number of our citizens joined the allied armies, but before doing so were obliged to swear allegiance to the country under whose banner they enlisted, and consequently have expatriated themselves. A provision in this bill provides that they can without great trouble and delay again establish their American citizenship.

Another provision appropriates $400,000, authorizing certain expenditures for the purpose of helping the naturalization, investigation, and education of aliens. To my mind it will be of great benefit.

In a general way the bill harmonizes the naturalization laws, making them simpler and easier, and still gives the naturalization department greater opportunity to eliminate the undeserving from being naturalized.

This explanation, I regret, only imperfectly explains the most important provisions of the bill, but the statement which I have inserted does so fully.

Mr. Speaker, when the House considered my bill H. R. 9159 on March 4, which we passed, and which provisions are embodied in the bill now under consideration, I endeavored to assign the reasons why the measure should be enacted into law; and therefore I shall not take up your time to-day in further explanation, being desirous of securing the immediate consideration of the bill; and, feeling satisfied that the membership is favorably inclined, I will conclude with the earnest hope that I have not mistaken the sentiment of the House in believing that they will vote nearly unanimously for the adoption of the conference report, which will bring relief, happiness, and joy to thousands upon thousands of deserving, loyal, and courageous aliens in our military forces, as well as to those millions of honest and hard-working aliens in our most essential industries which keep our Army and Navy properly and sufficiently supplied, who will appreciate this legislation, and thus inspire them to still greater efforts in behalf of our country and for the cause for which we are fighting, and which eventually must and will succeed. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, due to an error in my remarks on the main provisions of this bill, namely, H. R. 9159, on March 4, a part of my speech was charged—or, if I may be permitted to say, credited—to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDOW], and, notwithstanding that I have asked and received consent of the House that same be corrected, it has not been done. In view of the fact that the remarks then made by me apply to this bill as well, I shall insert same here, relieving the gentleman from New York from any apologies he may be obliged to make for it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, having the utmost confidence in the loyalty and patriotism of the people of the nationalities described in section 1, I introduced a resolution some time ago exempting them from the operations of the alien-enemy act. Since that time the President of the United States in a proclamation has exempted all of these people and has added other nationalities, exempting them from the operations of the alien-enemy act. That I have been justified in my confidence I offer this fact, that nearly 100,000 aliens of these nationalities are now in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States. It is to protect these men, to enable them to remain in our armies, that this legislation is sought. All this bill aims to do is to naturalize all these men who desire to fight for the country of their adoption who otherwise would have no chance or opportunity to become American citizens.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not section 2 admit of the naturalization of other aliens apart from those referred to in section 1?

Mr. FLOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. SABATH. Section 2 applies to all of the aliens who are now serving in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps; it matters not of what nationality they are. I believe that any man who has volunteered, or any man who has not claimed exemption under the selective act, is a good enough man, is made of the right material, has the right conception of his duty to this country, and as such is entitled to all the protection that we can give him, and is also entitled to become a citizen of the United States without any unnecessary trouble or delay.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has made a study of this matter and has introduced a bill, as he indicates. While the gentleman is on his feet, and since he is talking in the time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I desire to ask him one or two questions. Is it not a fact that any alien, not these particularly mentioned in paragrap' 1, but any alien who has been in the country one year and who has enlisted for service in the Army or Navy, may become a naturalized citizen of the United States on petitioning a court of competent jurisdiction, as referred to here?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; and on complying with the rules and laws and regulations of our country pertaining to the naturalization of aliens.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman is something of an expert I want to ask this question, so that this matter may be made clear to my constituents, who are interested in it: If an alien comes forward to-day and enlists in the Army, he may apply to-morrow for naturalization and be naturalized a citizen of the United States if he can prove that he has been in the country one year. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SABATH. He must prove that he has been in the United States for one year, and he must also prove that he is a man of good moral character and, in addition to that, that he has an honorable record in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He must have the usual qualifications.

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and be loyal to the United States.

Mr. SABATH. And be loyal to the United States is right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Exactly. That is one of the qualifications. Now ordinarily a man must wait in this country for five years before he can become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Not only that, but he is subjected to examination, and must prove that he is capable of answering a great many questions that are propounded to him; he must know how to read and write the English language, and there are a great many other things that he is obliged to do before he can become an American citizen.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us get down to the point I wanted to make. An alien under the law must remain in the United States for five years before he can become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If he joins the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps and has one year's residence in the United States, he may apply for citizenship and secure it if he has the necessary qualifications?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is to say, he can cut short the period of residence four years and become a citizen if he joins the Army or the Navy?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; that is the intention.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Following up the purpose of the alien-slacked bill, if this bill is adopted it means that anyone who is an alien in the United States who has been here one year may become naturalized if he enlists in the Army or Navy?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; it means that he will be permitted to fight for our country, because otherwise, if the law is not enacted, there is great danger that he may be discharged on account of being an alien; that he is not an American citizen; and thereby this country would lose from the Army and the Navy seventy-five to a hundred thousand deserving men desirous of fighting for our country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some gentlemen on this side seem to misunderstand the point that the gentleman has been making, and I want to repeat it. This will apply to any alien now or hereafter in the service of the United States, and not only to those specifically referred to in paragraph 1.

Mr. SABATH. That enlist in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would apply to anyone. Any alien except a German enemy alien could become a citizen of the United States after one year's residence upon enlistment if he wanted to.

Mr. SABATH. It will apply to all aliens that are now or will be in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

Mr. FESS. Not quite as broad as that, for there is a proviso.

Mr. SABATH. There is a proviso as to people who can not become citizens now.

Mr. FESS. That is what the gentleman from Pennsylvania is driving at.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to show that if a man likely to be deported from the country under the slacker bill is qualified to become a citizen he can make a short cut to citizenship under this bill by enlisting in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps if he has had a year's residence and the requisite qualifications.

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. The people in paragraph 1 have been ordered back by Austria to fight in the Austrian Army. They have not gone; but in case they should be caught they will be treated as deserters. They will be deserters according to the law of Austria and according to our own law, and therefore, unless this bill is passed, we will place all these men in an embarrassing position. If it passes we can claim the men and look upon them as American citizens.

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. WALDOW. Does this bill give a change of status to the Poles who have formed themselves into an independent organization? A great many of them have gone to France to fight. We have right outside of my city an army of about 8,000 men, all of them of Polish nationality. Is this going to change their status in any way?

Mr. SABATH. We can not aid them in this bill. There is a separate bill pending now in which I hope we will be able to protect the brave Poles and men of other nationalities who are now joining the so-called Polish and Czecho-Slovak Army in France as well as in Canada. I expect that the bill will be shortly reported and that it will receive the unanimous support of all Members of the House.

Mr. WALDOW. Why is it not possible to have that bill incorporated in this bill?

Mr. SABATH. I think it is a very wise suggestion, and if it will not be objected to I would be more than pleased to look upon the amendment with favor.

Mr. WALDOW. I am very much interested in the proposition. We have over a thousand men from the city of Buffalo alone who have joined the Polish brigade, and it seems to me that they ought to have the protection of the United States.

Mr. SABATH. They are entitled to all the protection we can give them.

Mr. JAMES. Are these people going in a Polish legion—are they going as Poles or Americans?

Mr. SABATH. They are going as Americans. Many of them are citizens of the United States and many of them are not as yet citizens of this country.

Mr. JAMES. Who pays the expense?

Mr. SABATH. The Polish-American people in the United States, as well as other people vitally interested in organizing this splendid body of men. And what applies to the Polish legion and the Polish Army applies to the so-called Bohemian-Slavic Czecho-Slovak Army that is being formed here, in Russia, and France, and is now fighting the cause of the allies across the sea.

Mr. JAMES. Those who are citizens will be taken care of?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; but they will not be entitled to any pension or special benefits because they are not joining our forces. For that reason they are entitled to greater consideration than the men who are drafted and who are American citizens, because they do not have to go, but do it of their own free will, desirous of being of aid and assistance to the country of their adoption.

Mr. GALLAGHER. If the gentleman will permit, I want to say that this is the army I referred to a moment ago when I was talking to the chairman. They are not in our Army, and therefore this bill would not cover them. They joined the French forces.

Mr. SABATH. I realize the force of the gentleman's statement, and, as I stated before, if an amendment can be framed and will meet with the approval, as it should, of Members here, we should embody it in this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Can he conceive of any legislation that we could pass which would protect men not citizens of this country who join the armies of one of our allies?

Mr. SABATH. I say in answer to that that we are trying to reach that before the Immigration Committee in this way: We have a bill pending there whereby we will suspend the operation of the immigration law as to all of the aliens who are now going abroad with our forces or with the Polish, Czecho-Slovak, or the Jugo-Slovak armies, or who join the allied forces in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, to those in whom there remains any doubt as to the merits of this bill I desire to say that the people covered by this bill came to these shores to escape a tyrannical dynasty, allegiance to which they never subscribed and the overthrow of which they have struggled and sought for centuries. They came here eager to grasp the opportunities afforded under our institutions and denied them in the land of their birth. They sought to advance and educate themselves and their children, to understand our institutions and the form of government that had given them every opportunity and every advantage afforded to its own citizens and that had made them free men and women. They came here to better their own conditions and to relieve, if possible, the oppressed and persecuted brethern abroad.

That they have done this none can deny. In the mines and in the factories, in the mills and in the shops, upon the farms and in the forests, in the industries and in the professions, in commerce—everywhere they have toiled, labored, and studied for the increased development of the land of their adoption. They have helped and are now helping to turn the great wheels of our industry. They have aided our commerce. They have contributed to our science. They have always been good, true, and loyal residents of this great country of ours. Who can challenge their industry? Who can question their constancy? Who dares impugn this loyalty?

And now, in the hour of our Nation's trial, they have sprung to the support of our country, to sustain our glorious flag, by the thousands, aye, by the tens of thousands, patriotically volunteering and loyally waiving all claims for exemptions, to the end that the Stars and Stripes may ever float over a free and happy people.

We who live in this wonderful democracy of ours can only speak of the wrongs of autocratic government from a theoretical knowledge, but these people who have suffered under it know this form of government from bitter, practical experience.

We are at war to preserve "humanity and democracy." They go to war not only for this reason but in the fond and passionate hope that they might help to secure it for their oppressed kinsman across the seas. Shall we deny them this opportunity because in a technical, and a purely technical, sense they are subjects of Austria-Hungary and Germany? Shall we say to these people that because a brutal and overpowering military force has subjugated you to despotic and tyrannical rule you are barred from assisting in its overthrow, even though you are a loyal and devoted resident of this country? Shall we discourage and dishearten these people, interfere with the wheels of our industries, deplete the mines and the factories of their much-needed man power, diminish the output of our workshops, increase our economic problems, already stupendous, and thereby give "aid and comfort" to our enemies, who are even more their enemies, because of a status beyond their control, the removal of which they have sought with their life's blood these many centuries? Shall we deny them the right to fight for the colors of their adoption and force them into the foreign-legion division of France and Italy?

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe such action would be compatible with the principles for which we are striving. In the mines and in the steel mills, in the great ammunition factories, they are steadfastly preparing this country for the mighty conflict in which we are engaged. Whether it be before the fiery furnaces of the steel mills, the stifling depths of the coal mines, the hazards of the ammunition factories, they go about their work steady and contented, satisfied to be of service to this country, the country of their adoption. To be of service is all they ask. Shall we deny them this?

In our Army, Navy, and Marine Corps they are represented by over 76,000, and, if I am reliably informed, if they are not excluded from the operation of the "alien-enemy" laws our armed forces will in the course of time be deprived of some 400,000 men. What is there that would justify such a course of action?

I know that some will say that these people are responsible for this unpleasant situation because they did not become naturalized. This, however, is due to the harshness and stringency of our naturalization laws.

Mr. Speaker, with a deep faith and irrepressible confidence, I have stood upon the floor of this House upon many an occasion and vouchsafed the good and unimpeachable conduct and behavior of these people. I have never had occasion to regret it, and I say now, with a calm assurance that rests upon my complete faith in them, that they will never give me cause to regret one word or one sentiment. I call upon them now to vindicate my every assertion, to sustain my every utterance, to uphold my every assurance. I call upon them to prove, as I know they will, true to their best traditions, to meet every condition and make every sacrifice required of them with firm resolve and stout hearts, to uphold the ideals of the flag of their adoption—the red, the white, and the blue—to give their lives and their all in defense of these glorious colors, to the end that liberty and democracy may forever be preserved to our sacred country and to her brave "comrades in arms."

I call upon them to inspire and encourage their oppressed brethren in despotic Austria and military-controlled Germany; to rise in their might and break the chains that have held them in bondage and slavery, in misery and in want; to throw off the yoke of their oppressors and those tyrants who are responsible for this terrible war that has destroyed millions of lives; that has taken from mothers their sons, from wives their husbands, from millions of innocent children their fathers; that has driven from the humblest shelter and deprived of life's every necessity—life's every means of sustenance—millions of aged men, women, children, and babes. I also beseech them to call to their kinsmen across the seas and with loud voice exclaim, "Rise from your slumber, you Czecho-Slovaks, descendants of Huss-Ziska! Rise, you Poles, descendants of Sobieski, Pulaski, and Kosciuszko! Rise, you Jugo-Slavs, descendants of Dusan and Kara George! Rise, all you subjugated peoples, so that the liberty and freedom for which your forefathers hoped, suffered, bled, and died may be attained and to you forever made secure.

And when, aided by all other democracies of the world who are engaged in this monumental struggle to obtain for you this liberty and freedom, you will have helped to break the chains that have shackled you these centuries, then extend in the spirit of brotherly love and benevolence to the peoples of Germany, who are dominated by the iron and ruthless heels of military lords, the hand of friendship and aid, so that they, too—the great common masses of these German peoples—may live in peace with all the peoples of the world, but who are forcefully subjugated by the brutal power of Prussian militarism, which is attempting to conquer the nations of the world.

And, in conclusion, I fervently hope that the great Russian people and their leaders will have the wisdom and foresight to realize that the freedom they have attained and the liberty they have gained can be protected only in concert with the allied democracies of the world; that they will detect the cunning and deceit of the archenemies of every form of democracy and liberty, the autocracies of the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns; that they will not, after all these years of struggle and sacrifice, lose the freedom for which they have paid with their life's blood; that they will once more join hands with the other democracies of the world, so that the sunshine of liberty and democracy may throw its light and its warmth upon all the oppressed countries of the world, be they large or small, powerful or weak; that the peace we seek shall be a righteous and permanent peace wherein all tyrannized peoples and nations shall once more breathe the air of freedom and independence.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in justice to these peoples, in recognition of their unquestioned and devoted loyalty, in consideration of their industry and constancy, and, finally, as a measure of self-protection, a means to sustain and increase our tremendous war preparations, this bill should be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am not going to detain you even for the length of time that has been allotted me. The chairman of the committee has quite fully and thoroughly explained the bill to the House. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] has also gone over it in detail. I think it has been shown that there is a real necessity for the legislation, and also that the bill does contain what the House really wants and the country needs. True, the House has not passed upon a large part of the measure. The large part of the bill was introduced in the Senate some time ago, and a part of it in the House. The bill in the House was submitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and after some four weeks of hearings and then about three weeks of consideration by the committee it was placed in shape. And I want to say to the Members of the House that the Senate used the House provisions. There are but very few changes in the bill as passed by the Senate and that were finally adopted by the House Committee on Immigration. So the bill has had in its various phases a great deal of consideration. The conference committee spent some part of four days, and on three of those days the greater part of the time that could be occupied by the Members of the House and the Senate. And so we have gone into those matters in detail.

The bill attempts to relieve a condition that ought to be relieved at the present time, and I believe it does so. It puts into the service of the country men who have, by their actions, by their deeds, shown that they should be American citizens. They have shown it by joining the Army and the Navy and the other branches of the service of the United States in its struggle in this world-wide war. The purpose of the bill is that by eliminating the long, tedious processes of the course of naturalization, these men, after having been thoroughly examined by the Bureau of Naturalization, may go with that written record and file it with the court, and after the court hears it, they may be admitted as citizens by a final order and decree, to the end that they will then stand, as you and I do, as American citizens, invested with all the rights that follow from being an American citizen. They can then be sent abroad, and then there will be no question, in case they are captured, of their being shot down as traitors, as might be done if they were not naturalized.

There are many thousands of these men. The present situation can be relieved by the immigration officers going to the cantonments and other places and taking the statements of these men and by the court's early action; not as is done under the present law, where men are required to go to the court nearest their places of residence, but they can go to the court nearest to the camp or the cantonment and there be naturalized. This bill remedies the defect and cures the evil of the present situation, and gives full naturalization and citizenship to the men who believed that they were American citizens by virtue of their residence, by virtue of the naturalization of their fathers, and who have acted in the capacity of citizens and have voted and held offices, and who now want to be in the attitude and in the position where they can say that they are American citizens under the law of this country. It ought to be done.

Then, we take up another class, those who have received their naturalization certificates but whose naturalization has been nullified and declared void by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Morena case, where it was held that they had filed their original applications too long ago and had waited too long to be naturalized, and consequently the whole proceeding was void. This bill remedies that condition and permits those who thus received their final judgment of naturalization to have their certificates validated, notwithstanding the fact that they waited one year too long. There are many hundreds of such men, and it is but just that they should be naturalized. Many of them want to go into the military service. A good many of them would be classed as "alien enemies." The bill treats them all alike.

Further, in section 11, in addition to the bill as it passed the House, the Senate has passed the bill with certain restrictions. I want to call the attention of the House to that fact, to show that the conference committee has thrown all the necessary safeguards around the Government, to the end that no man can be admitted as an American citizen unless he be pure in heart, is loyal to the core, and is ready and willing to lay down his life for this country. When we find a man in that shape we ought to clothe him with the insignia of an American citizen, to the end that he may show it wherever he goes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Did not the bill that the House passed some time ago provide for all that?

Mr. RAKER. It did.

Mr. WALSH. This bill not only provides for all that, but for a lot of other important matters.

Mr. RAKER. You are considering them now, and doing it so thoroughly that I know that my distinguished friend can realize that under the circumstances, by doing it this way, we can expedite the matter.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is handling adjectives very carelessly.

Mr. RAKER. Not to my distinguished friend.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says it took the committee about seven weeks to consider this thing. Does the gentleman think that three or four hours of consideration by this immense throng here assembled is real full consideration of a measure of this importance?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; for the reason that the House has confidence in its committees, and when a committee takes charge of a bill that has been intrusted to it, it goes to the root of the matter, and then presents it to the House; and the House, having confidence in the committee, after the situation has been fully presented, and after getting all the reports and hearings, and seeing that the situation has been presented in proper form—takes but little time then, and the House can consider it more rapidly and expeditiously and at the same time most thoroughly—that is the condition in this particular instance——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is not disclosing any secret in making that statement, is he? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. Not at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman says the bill has been given full consideration at this time. It has been by the gentlemen who have spoken. I have not had a chance to study the bill. I want to vote for this measure, and yet I find that big appropriation of money in it, of which I disapprove, and I want to distinguish the good parts of the bill from the bad.

Mr. RAKER. I will say to the gentleman that every bill that comes before this House shows a like condition. The members of the committee have an opportunity to be heard, and in the case of many bills not all the members of the committee can be heard because of the lack of time.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not going to be heard on it. Where does my chance come? I want to vote.

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the gentleman the rest of my time.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want the gentleman's time. I want to have a chance to vote out that provision containing the appropriation.

Mr. RAKER. Now, the proviso is jurisdictional. I want to call the attention of the House to that. The proviso is jurisdictional with the court, to the end that the court can not set the case for a hearing nor can the court hear the application until two things exist, namely, there must have been 90 days' notice given by the clerk to the department, and the department must have made an examination before the court gets jurisdiction to hear the case. Then everybody knows who he is; the neighbors and every one else; and under the peculiar state of affairs we will all know who is going to be naturalized. The department has full opportunity to know, and if there ever was an opportunity thoroughly to sift a man's conscience and thoroughly analyze his conduct in this country by his neighbors and enemies and everybody else it is provided here. If you find anything wrong about him we have given power to the Attorney General's Office to say, "We believe there is a black speck on this man and at the present time he can not be naturalized." But if his record is clear, pure and white, and he is ready to fight for this country he should be admitted to citizenship, so that he and his boys, in common with other American citizens, may give their lives, if necessary, in defense of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; but how can I vote for this bill and vote against this appropriation?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman can vote for it, because we are all for it.

By unanimous consent Mr. MASON was given leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is very apparent that the conference report is to be adopted. It is equally apparent that the membership of the House would like an opportunity to change several of its provisions. Of course, the only way under which they can be changed, under the parliamentary situation now existing, is to return the conference report to the conferees and let the matter be thrashed out again.

It has been suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who is always anxious to accommodate the House, that certain corrections can be made by resolution later on. That may be the best way out of it. Anyhow, before the House votes—although I appreciate that the Members are somewhat wearied and tired with the discussion, short as it has been upon this important matter, and are anxious to come to a vote—I want to call attention to three things that I think ought to be changed, and to three things that I trust will be changed by joint resolution. And the committee ought to be the ones to bring in that resolution. They ought not to depend on some Member of the House to draw it.

The first point I desire to make is the one I made when I interrogated the gentleman from Alabama, and that is in reference to the people of the Philippine Islands. No matter how you look at this bill, my friends, it is an injustice to the Filipino. You are conferring benefits and privileges by this act. You are not taking things away. The question is, Do you confer upon the Filipino as many benefits and privileges as you confer upon other classes of noncitizens? You do not. Why? You make three classes of people in the bill: First, Filipinos; second, aliens; third, those citizens of Porto Rico who are not covered into the citizenship of the United States by the recent bill which we passed. A Filipino is not an alien, and you can not make him an alien. There is no language that means alien that can be used to describe a Filipino. He owes allegiance to this country and its flag, and while he is not a citizen of the United States he is not an alien. Now, he labors under the disadvantage of blood when it comes to acquiring citizenship in the United States, and yet there are thousands of people in the Philippine Islands without a drop of Malay blood in them, pure Spanish, who are barred from acquiring citizenship in the United States. This bill says that a Filipino who is 21 years old, born in the Philippine Islands, and who has also enlisted in either the Navy or the Marine Corps—it is confined to that—after four years' service and an honorable discharge can become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Three years.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; it is four. In the next paragraph an alien, and a citizen of Porto Rico not a citizen of the United States, can become a citizen of the United States under what opportunities? And their very recital discloses that they are vastly more numerous and more available than the two I have indicated as being open to the Filipino.

In the first place, this is open to all aliens who are in the Military Establishment of the United States in the land forces. You do not give that opportunity to the Filipinos. You give it to all aliens. You give it to Porto Ricans, but you do not give it to the Filipino, and it goes on down the list. If he serves in the Army, in the Navy, in the Marine Corps, or if he even serves on a merchant ship as a sailor, at the expiration not of four, but of three years of service, he can become a citizen of the United States. Now, what reason can there be to hold open this wide door of opportunity to all these others and not open it so wide to the Filipino, I know not. I fancy it is this: One part of the bill was drawn by one group of individuals, who had one thing in mind and carried that out, and another part of the bill was drawn by another group of individuals, who had another thing in mind and carried that out. I do not believe it is the desire of the committee—and I am sure it is not the desire of Congress—to fail to give the Filipino as full rights as any other class of citizens in the world. That is point No. 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have not come to my two most important points yet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used five minutes. Under the order of the House the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, in order that the conference committee may have an opportunity to consider the questions that have been raised here, I move to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recommit the report to the conferees.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH), there were—ayes 9, noes 37.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 13, nays 260, answered "present" 2, not voting 155, as follows:

The conference report was agreed to.

PASSPORT REQUIREMENTS.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous-consent order I call up the bill (H. R. 10264) to prevent in time of war departure from or entry into the United States contrary to the public safety, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the United States is at war, if the President shall find that the public safety requires the imposition of restrictions and prohibitions in addition to those otherwise provided upon the departure of persons from and their entry into the United States, and shall make public proclamation thereof, it shall, until otherwise ordered by the President or Congress, be unlawful, except under such rules, regulations, and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall authorize or prescribe—

(a) For any person to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States unless and until he shall have secured from such official or department as the President shall designate permission to depart or enter, as the case may be.

(b) For any person to transport or attempt to transport from or into the United States another person not having permission to depart or enter, as the case may be.

(c) For any person knowingly to make any false statement in an application for permission to depart from or enter the United States with intent to induce or secure the granting of such permission either for himself or for another.

(d) For any person knowingly to furnish or attempt to furnish or assist in furnishing to another a permit or evidence of permission to depart or enter not issued and designed for such other person's use.

(e) For any person knowingly to use or attempt to use any permit or evidence of permission to depart or enter not issued and designed for his use.

(f) For any person to forge, counterfeit, mutilate, or alter, or cause or procure to be forged, counterfeited, mutilated, or altered, any permit or evidence of permission to depart from or enter the United States.

(g) For any person knowingly to use or attempt to use or furnish to another for use any false, forged, counterfeited, mutilated, or altered permit, or evidence of permission, or any permit or evidence of permission which, though originally valid, has become or been made void or invalid.

SEC. 2. That whoever shall willfully violate the provisions of the foregoing section, or of any order or proclamation of the President promulgated, or of any permit, rule, or regulation issued thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or, if a natural person, imprisoned for not more than 20 years, or both; and the officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation shall be punished by like fine or imprisonment, or both; and any conveyance or any vessel, together with its or her appurtenances, equipment, tackle, apparel, and furniture, concerned in any such violation, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a much-needed measure to stop a gap left by the legislation we have enacted already in reference to the war. Its purpose is to give to the executive departments of the Government power to control ingress to and egress from this country. The Government is now very much hampered by lack of authority to control the travel to and from this country, even of people suspected of not being loyal, and even of those whom they suspect of being in the employ of enemy governments. On the 6th of April, 1917, the President issued a proclamation, and in regulations 9 and 10 provided that no alien enemy shall depart from the United States until he shall have received such permit as the President shall prescribe, or except under order of a court, judge, or justice, under sections 4069 and 4070 of the Revised Statutes, and that no alien enemy shall land in or enter the United States except under such restrictions and at such places as the President may prescribe; and the trading with the enemy act in section 3 (b) provided:

(b) For any person, except with the license of the President, to transport or attempt to transport into or from the United States, or for any owner, master, or other person in charge of a vessel of American registry to transport or attempt to transport from any place to any other place any subject or citizen of an enemy or ally of enemy nation, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported or attempted to be transported is such subject or citizen.

But there is no adequate punishment prescribed for the violation of this proclamation or this act, and there is nothing in the proclamation or the act to prevent American citizens, whether natural born or naturalized, from coming and going as they please.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Section 2 raises a question upon that point. It provides that after such proclamation by the President, and so forth, it shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to depart from or enter or to attempt to depart from or enter the United States unless he bears a valid passport. Is he not permitted to do that now—to go and come if he has a valid passport?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; he can go and come if he has a valid passport, and he can go and come without a passport if he can get in and out, and this law is intended to prevent him from going and coming without a passport.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How would that affect the coming and going of men along the Canadian border, men who work in Canada and come home to sleep in the United States? The gentleman knows there are thousands of men in the vicinity of Niagara Falls, Detroit, and other Lake ports who have the habit of ferrying across to Canada, where they work.

Mr. FLOOD. It is a very easy matter to provide themselves with a passport; but I do not think this would be necessary in the case of travel to Canada. The regulations prescribed by the President would reach that case, because American citizens going into Canada would not have to have their passports visfed, and regulations can be made under section 2 which would take care of the situation which the gentleman mentions. The section reads:

SEC. 2. After such proclamation as is provided for by the preceding section has been made and published, and while said proclamation is in force, it shall, except as otherwise provided by the President, be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States unless he bears a valid passport.

The President can prescribe otherwise in such a case as the gentleman intimates, and such regulations would take care of the situation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am asking the question for this reason: We are passing so many laws that bind and hog tie American citizens in the performance of their daily occupations, that it seems to me we ought to go cautiously about preventing their actual movements upon the highways.

The coming and going of American citizens across bridges leading into Canada is a matter of such daily occurrence, and is so commonplace now, that I assume it would be necessary, if this provision goes into effect, for every workman and every mechanic, every bricklayer and plasterer, every newsboy who wants to go and come back and forth from Canada, to apply to the department to get his passport?

Mr. FLOOD. Not at all. It will not be necessary at all under this provision of the law. There has never been any trouble in reference to people coming and going across the Canadian border. There has been trouble on the Mexican border, but not on the Canadian border. Section 2 provides that unless the President provides otherwise it would be necessary to have a passport. The President or the department of Government which would control this matter would take care of a situation like that on the Canadian border and make provision by which people there would not be inconvenienced, or inconvenienced any more than the public safety demanded, because the Government has not experienced any trouble with spies coming and going across that border.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Section 2 provides that he shall not enter or attempt to depart from the United States unless he bears a valid passport.

Mr. FLOOD. Not at all. The gentleman has not read all the section. I read what the section said. He must have a passport unless the President makes provision to the contrary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman means that the section leaves it open to the President by proclamation to state who shall or who shall not have a passport?

Mr. FLOOD. It leaves it to the President to make a general proclamation or a proclamation in reference to particular places or particular persons.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suspect that the Canadian question is not causing so much trouble as the question on the Mexican border.

Mr. FLOOD. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to know if the gentleman would care to state, if it is not incompatible with the public interest, whether this bill is intended to reach a certain class of persons only, or whether it is intended to embarrass, or would embarrass, every American citizen who crosses the Mexican border or the Canadian border?

Mr. FLOOD. It is not intended to embarrass anyone, except so far as the protection of the public interest would necessitate the embarrassment of some particular locality or individual. The Committee on Foreign Affairs made a very careful investigation of this matter and had a long hearing, and I am satisfied that the departments which would handle this matter—the Department of Justice and the Department of State—would make and enforce the regulations so that there would be the least possible inconvenience to any American who desired to travel. Of course, there is a large class of Americans who are now in the enemy country, and many of them have gone there since war was declared, and there ought to be a provision to prevent them from coming here or going away after they have come here and gained information to take back to the enemy. At present our Government is helpless, and this bill is intended as the remedy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose I wanted to go on the Canadian side of Niagara Falls, or suppose I, as an American citizen, wanted to cross the Mexican border, for sightseeing or for other purposes, as a good many Americans do, would I first have to apply for a passport under this provision?

Mr. FLOOD. I think under this provision and the regulations that would be promulgated under it by the President, if the gentleman wanted to cross the Mexican border he would have to get a passport; if he wanted to cross the Canadian border, I think that the regulations would be such that the gentleman could cross without a passport.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, then, the matter is left open so that the President has discretion to say who shall or who shall not have passports?

Mr. FLOOD. That is the purpose of the law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman advances this as a war measure and puts it on that ground?

Mr. FLOOD. Absolutely. It is limited to the duration of the war.

Mr. DILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. DILL. I wanted to ask whether the question of travel on trains that run through Canada and pass on their way into the United States was considered by the committee?

Mr. FLOOD. No; it was not.

Mr. DILL. For instance, in my own district we have trains and highways that, in order to get around the mountains, go up through Canada and come back into the United States.

At the present time people go and come without any thought whatever of passports or anything of that kind. Will this law make it necessary for them to have passports in order to travel?

Mr. FLOOD. It will depend, of course, upon the regulations promulgated by the President under this law. The impression that the committee got from the representatives of the State Department, the Department of Justice, the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Department of Labor, all of which departments have been embarrassed by the lack of law on this subject, was that, so far as the Canadian border was concerned, there had been no trouble, and I reached the conclusion that the regulations in reference to the Canadian border would be very liberal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia, in reply to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL], that my impression is that there are treaties existing between this country and Canada providing for a very liberal exit and entrance from one country to the other on the border.

Mr. DILL. This law would take preference over such treaties, would it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I assume that regulations would be made in consonance with those treaties.

Mr. FLOOD. I think so.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I wanted to ask the gentleman if persons desiring to enter Canada and Mexico have heretofore been obliged to obtain passports?

Mr. FLOOD. Those going to Canada have not. There has been an effort made to require anyone going to Mexico to have a passport.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I have an impression that they have. For illustration, I had a constituent a very short time ago who desired to enter Mexico, and he was obliged to obtain a passport, and have it viséed. I am quite sure of that being the case; and I have the impression that before we entered the war passports were required for persons entering Canada.

Mr. FLOOD. I think the gentleman is mistaken about Canada. That country does not require the passports to be viséed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Not viséed; but I was obliged to obtain a passport for at least one constituent going to Canada.

Mr. FLOOD. If you obtained passports for your constituent, you rendered them a good service, because they may be of great service to them.

The statement was made by the Counselor for the State Department before the committee that they were not required in the case of Canada. They have undertaken to require them in the case of Americans going into Mexico or aliens going into Mexico. But the legal right to do it, it was stated, was very doubtful.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There is one other question I want to ask the gentleman. In going to my own home—and I think it is so with most of the Michigan Representatives, we frequently go by way of Buffalo and across Canada, buying a ticket here, of course. How will that affect us? How will it affect passengers on the ordinary trains going across Canada from Niagara Falls or from Buffalo to Detroit?

Mr. FLOOD. Just like it would affect a man walking across the bridge.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Very well. But before I buy a ticket for home have I got to obtain a passport?

Mr. FLOOD. That, as I stated to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] would depend on the regulations promulgated by the President.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I assumed that that had been developed by the gentleman's committee, so that he would know.

Mr. FLOOD. It was developed to this extent, that we were told that the regulations with reference to travel to Canada would be very liberal and probably there would be no inconvenience as to regulations promulgated under this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. In further development of the statement made by the chairman, in order that it may be emphatic, that question was repeatedly asked with reference to Canada and the facility of travel between Canada and the United States.

The committee was assured, as the chairman has stated. I will say that I live on the border of Canada, and therefore I had that situation particularly in mind. The committee was assured many times that the regulations and rules that the President would undoubtedly promulgate would make ample and liberal provision for facilitating traffic back and forth across the country and between the boundaries. It is not the movement back and forth between Canada and the United States that is designed to be covered by this bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I was curious to know about the machinery. I thought perhaps the committee might know something about what sort of machinery would be introduced for the purpose of promoting the convenience of the traveling public.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It is very apparent, assuming that the President should—and I have not the slightest thought for a moment that he will—say that persons going from the United States to Detroit, for example, by the Grand Trunk line through Buffalo, or by the Michigan Central, would have to have a passport. Of course, the railroad company would not sell a ticket until the person had a passport. That is what is required to be done in Europe. If you go anywhere in Europe where a passport is required, you have to have your passport viséed and viséed and viséed, with your picture put on it, and authenticated before they will ever sell you a ticket. There is not any question but that the President will avoid all that by appropriate rules and regulations.

Mr. FLOOD. If the gentleman from Michigan will give me his attention for a moment in reference to the travel between the United States and Canada, Mr. Flournoy, the Chief of the Bureau of Passports of the State Department, in answer to a question asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], stated to us that we require no passports to our citizens going to Canada now, and there is no requirement on the part of the Canadian Government for viséed passports. He said the Canadian situation was not the thing that was giving our Government officials worry or trouble, but it was the suspects who were trying to come into our ports and leave our ports that were giving the trouble. I just wanted to make that statement to the gentleman as bearing on his question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there are some parts of the bill that I do not understand, or else the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] misunderstood to some extent the question asked him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Section 1, as I understand it, refers only to aliens or persons, who may be assisting them in some way in some unlawful purpose, while section 2 was intended to exempt the citizens of the United States from the provisions of section 1 and to provide that they should have passports, except in cases provided for by the President.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think the gentleman understands the bill. Section 1 provides for a method of dealing with aliens.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is what I said.

Mr. FLOOD. And section 2 provides for the methods of dealing with citizens.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. FLOOD. I thought the gentleman said section 2 provided some exemptions to citizens.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it does. But that may be merely a technical distinction. I do not care to insist upon that. If section 2 had not been inserted there would have been grave question as to whether citizens of this country were not subject to section 1.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. However that may be, the gentleman then says section 1 applies only to aliens or persons who assist them in violating some regulation.

Mr. FLOOD. That is right.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to be assured about that, because I am not entirely clear but that some provision would be made to apply otherwise. I understand that section 2, which applies to citizens of the United States, requires that they must have passports except in cases where the President may provide otherwise, and in this Canadian matter, where they merely pass through a part of the country, he can make, and is expected to make, regulations to cover cases of that kind.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. OSBORNE. I would like to inquire in what respect the present custom is changed in regard to people going into Mexico from this country? I understand that anyone going now across the Mexican border is required to have a passport, and I would like to know whether this bill makes any additional restriction to those that we have now?

Mr. FLOOD. I think our State Department have undertaken to require passports for people going to Mexico now.

Mr. BLAND. Is it not true that just now they are not permitting passports even into Mexico? I had a recent experience to that effect within the last two weeks.

Mr. FLOOD. Of course, the department issues some passports; not all that are asked for. It undertakes to require passports for all people who go into Mexico, but the legal right to do so is very doubtful.

Mr. OSBORNE. The people in my country do a large business with Mexico, and I am called upon nearly every day to get a passport for somebody who desires to visit Mexico.

Mr. FLOOD. This is just making it certain that the Government has the right to require these passports and to punish people who undertake to go without passports.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, reference has been made to assurances given to the committee by representatives of the various departments as to what kind of regulations would be adopted which would obviate the necessity for passports. It seems to me that some of the statements made are quite misleading. In the first place attention should be called to the fact that nobody appeared before us who was authorized to give us any assurance as to what regulations would be adopted. In the next place the gentlemen who spoke on the subject were interrogated by members of the committee as to what these regulations would be, and it was insisted that the regulations ought to be set forth in the bill instead of being left to future decision; but each one of these officers protested his inability to say what the regulations would be, and insisted upon the necessity of making changes in any regulations that might be adopted, to meet what might be considered emergencies. So that in passing upon this bill we can not assume that regulations of one kind or another kind will be adopted. We are completely at sea upon that point, except that we have the right to assume that the President will not approve any regulations which are not reasonable. That is all we have got. I do not think the House should be left under the impression——

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that if he wants to debate the matter, he can get time later.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am about through with what I wanted to say. I do not think the House should be left under the impression that we were given any information whatever as to the particular kind of regulations that would be adopted, or that we were given any assurance by any responsible authority as to anything concerning the regulations.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, we had quite a number of gentlemen before the committee. We had the Counsellor of the State Department, who was then the Acting Secretary of State, and he did give it as his opinion that, so far as Canada was concerned, the regulations would be very liberal.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Can the gentleman tell us what is meant by that?

Mr. FLOOD. What he said was that there would not be very much interference with Canadian travel. He said with reference to Mexico they would be very stringent, and with reference to people going to Cuba they would be very stringent. We also had the representatives of the War Department and of the War-Intelligence Bureau of the War Department, as well as representatives of the Department of Labor and the Navy Department, all of whom complained of the inadequacy of the present law.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I call attention to the fact that the representative of the War Department who appeared before us was merely a captain, an officer far down the line, who was authorized to give us no assurances whatever?

Mr. FLOOD. We had the Counsellor of the State Department, who was then acting as Secretary of State.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. We did not have a Cabinet officer before us.

Mr. FLOOD. The Secretary of State was absent from Washington, and the Acting Secretary of State appeared before the committee. All these gentlemen gave us their views about the bill. I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] questioned Mr. Polk, the Counsellor of the State Department, as to the policy of the department.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But we got no definite information.

Mr. FLOOD. Of course, no Cabinet officer and no other officer could give you definite information as to what the regulations are going to be. The President has to promulgate the regulations.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And they protested that they could not be definite, because they did not know themselves.

Mr. FLOOD. But Mr. Polk told us as to the general policy of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. No difference what they said, they did not have any power to bind anybody at all.

Mr. FLOOD. No; and I am just giving you my opinion as to what I think would be the result.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman touching section 2, with the amendment. We have 3,500 miles of frontier, substantially from one ocean to the other, where we are adjacent to Canada. I think Canada is quite as patriotic as we are in this war.

Mr. MADDEN. More so.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says more so.

Mr. MADDEN. They have made greater sacrifices than we have.

Mr. CANNON. They have made greater sacrifices so far than we have. Now, when it is considered that from one ocean to the other all the roads come in and go out, and under this bill no citizen of this country can step a foot across into Canada without incurring a penalty. The gentleman says, no, the President can make regulations. I believe that regulations for passports between New York and some of the adjacent States would be much more important, if we are to have passports, than it is to have them for those who go back and forth into Canada.

Mr. FLOOD. I did not say make regulations about passports, but make regulations dispensing with passports.

Mr. CANNON. That amounts to the same thing. I do not know that we have any treaties with Canada; but, if so, this would repeal anything contrary to the regulations that the President might make. I suppose that millions of people yearly go back and forth between this country and Canada. It does seem to me that the gentleman might well submit to an amendment excepting Canada. It seems to me there is no necessity of requiring passports through Canada.

Mr. FLOOD. I think we can trust the President to take care of that situation.

Mr. CANNON. The President is receiving the support of Congress such as no President ever asked for or received heretofore. We give it to him because we think we ought to give him large discretion. But here is a penalty, a large penalty of fine and imprisonment, and I would prefer at first blush, if it was in my power, not to require passports back and forth to Canada. I call the gentleman's attention to it, and think it ought to be pretty carefully considered. It seems to me that there ought to be an amendment preferably prepared by some gentleman on the Committee on Foreign Affairs that would except Canada.

Mr. FLOOD. I will say that the committee considered that very carefully, and so much harm has come to this country by the freedom of travel——

Mr. CANNON. Not through Canada.

Mr. FLOOD. Not through Canada.

Mr. CANNON. But this is to be back and forth through Canada. I hope that somebody that has given the matter more attention than I have, preferably some member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, will offer an amendment to except Canada from the operation of the bill.

Mr. FLOOD. I think it would be unwise to put a hard and fast rule in the law.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question, and I believe that Members ought to have more time to consider it. I did not see the bill until a short time ago, and I make the point of no quorum, so that we may have until to-morrow morning to look at it.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the Chair lays before the House the following personal request:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DRANE, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for the balance of the day, on account of important business.

HOUSING FACILITIES FOR WAR NEEDS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. AUSTIN, is not in the city, and the Chair appoints in his stead as one of the conferees on the bill (H. R. 10265) providing housing facilities for war needs the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. LANGLEY.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had ordered that Mr. GORE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. GRONNA be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in regard to certain publications concerning an alleged statement I am said to have made in an address on the bill providing for the reorganization of the executive departments of the Government, found in the issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 23, 1918, on page 5484.

Mr. President, I wish to say very briefly that this is the first time that I have ever risen to a question of personal privilege in now nearly 18 years of service in legislative bodies of various kinds, including five years as a Member of this body. As this is the first such occasion in my life it is likely the last. It is not because I am unduly solicitous on what the press says, for if I can not take care of myself with careless editors I shall make no complaint. They are subject to the usual imperfections of all erring mortal humanity; and it is not in addressing myself to that fraternity that I occupy the few moments here, Mr. President. It is out of consideration for the regard which I have for the Government of my country; it is out of that high regard which I have for the Members of the Senate, with whom I am serving the brief time that I shall be a Member in this Chamber.

Mr. President, on the occasion referred to, following the address made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] on the Mooney case in California, which many of the Senators here will remember, an address which I considered one of the most timely and powerful that I have heard made in any legislative body in this country, I used the language to which I shall call attention. There was no conference on our part; I never talked with the Senator from Washington at all on this subject previous to his address. His line of thought led him to make the address; and, without communication with him, I selected material on the matter which I had gathered and used it in the comments I made on the bill for the reorganization of the executive departments. So there was no understanding between us, because we had had no communication whatever on the subject; but our addresses proceeded along the line of collective material relating to the same ground. I used the following language in my address, referring to conditions in Russia:

> The bourgeoisie constitutes the whole of the bourgeois, as a class. Against them Mr. Trotzky and his government level relentless warfare. He says they are the agents of tyranny; that they must be destroyed. He thinks more of the government referred to by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] yesterday as "a hobo government," and properly so, with all due deference to the dignified and well-considered expressions we ought to use in the Senate. There is no other phrase that will so soon reach the conciousness of the American citizen as to call it by its right name. It is the most expressive phrase that could be employed. Mr. Trotzky and his governmental agents would embrace as a long-lost brother everyone connected with the hobo government in this country, but one connected with and founded on the self-supporting, God-fearing, industrial middle-class element of the country, who are neither millionaire nor pauper nor idler nor vagrant—for those he has nothing but words of condemnation. It is the middle class, the bourgeoisie, as he defines it, against whom he levels his fulminations and directs his destructive agencies.

That was the connection in which the expression "hobo government" was used. It did not refer to the Government of the United States at all; but it has been used out of the context. Mr. President, of the paragraph I have quoted, and the statement has been made that I referred to this administration as "a hobo government." There was not a Senator who heard the comments that I made who obtained any such impression from what I said, or from anything that the Senator from Washington said, nor was it in our minds. I would no more use an expression of that kind as applied to the Government of the United States than I would be guilty of opposing the war.

I criticize some things that public officials do and certain public policies, as my Democratic brethren do at times; in fact, I have heard stronger criticisms from some of the majority Members of this Chamber than I have made myself, although some may not think so; but in the ultimate analysis, taking the words and their natural effect and the inference to be drawn, the results of the criticisms of majority Senators are even more caustic than anything I have said. These criticisms of certain policies are intended to be and are of a constructive character; they are of the kind that suggest improvements; to the end that those who are in the field and the camp may be better prepared, sustained, and strengthened by the resources of this country. No criticisms are made with any other object; it was the object of the criticism made by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], a very powerful appeal leading to most helpful results; but no one would question his loyalty. It is equal to that of any citizen of the United States or any other Member of this body. Nor would those who criticize other features and suggest improvements, such as the more rapid conduct of the manufacture and preparation of war material, be guilty of treason; nor could they be accused of invidious remarks concerning the Government. These are all constructive criticisms, and such are the criticisms made on this side of the Chamber, Mr. President.

I made the criticism that the President had about him certain men whose economic vagaries were too much like the Bolsheviki element in Russia, and that he ought, in all conscience, to rid himself of some of them; that he was making a mistake in permitting them to be about where he could be charged with responsibility for their acts. That was my criticism. Other Senators have made criticisms along other lines. That was what I said and all that I said. I used no such expression referring to the Government of this country as claimed in certain press reports and editorials.

I do not care to advertise these newspapers and the conduct of the various editors who make these charges; running from one State to another, one repeats the charge after the other; but I wish to say that there is absolutely no truth in the statement. The editors may have been misled and some may prefer to have it so. I have read the paragraph in which the phrase occurs, and it relates entirely to the Industrial Workers of the World and similar organizations in this country; similar bodies of misguided men are engaged in inciting civil commotion in our country, very like the commotion and the overthrow of all the established rules that protect person and property in Russia. It was under those conditions and with reference to that particular element, against which even this bill which is pending now in the conference report is directed, and which it is intended in large part to suppress, and criticism of that same element, that this comment was made and this phrase was used. Under no conditions was any language of that character used as applying to the Government of the United States. I would be as far from saying that as I would be from an act of overt treason, and I do not think any Senator here would think for an instant that the phrase was used by me with reference to the Government of the United States. It was applied to this quasi-mob government that is attempted to be set up here by the lawless, to the destruction of all human rights protected in civil society.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 236), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed, during the Sixty-fifth Congress, to thoroughly inquire into the expenditure of appropriations already made for war purposes. The committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page. Such committee shall make report to the Senate at the earliest practicable day, with such recommendations as the facts may warrant, and in the discharge of its duties the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE—AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution amending the rules of the Senate. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 235) was referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That during the period of the present war the rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto, in lieu of the rule adopted by the Senate for the limitation of debate on March 8, 1917, the following:

1. After there has been debate for two calendar days on a pending bill or resolution, a motion for the previous question shall be entertained, which, being ordered by a majority of Senators voting, if a quorum be present, shall have the effect to cut off all debate, except as hereinafter provided, and bring the Senate to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for, or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the presiding officer to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

2. All motions for the previous question shall, before being submitted to the Senate, be seconded by a majority by tellers, if demanded.

REPORT OF AERONAUTICAL SOCIETY OF AMERICA.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Aeronautical Society of America, which was printed in the RECORD on Thursday last, be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the report of the Aeronautical Society, which was printed in the RECORD on Thursday last, be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the chairman of the Committee on Printing should be present when that request is considered. Personally, I have no objection to it, but I think it ought to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the request; I will renew it at some future time.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have just come in, and do not know what the document is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has withdrawn his request.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a moment ago I made a request that the report of the Aeronautical Society of America be printed as a Senate document. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] made the suggestion that the request be referred to the Committee on Printing. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution, for reference to the Committee on Printing, in connection with that matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 237) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Aeronautical Society of America, as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Thursday, May 2, be published as a Senate Document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, when the Overman bill was before the Senate the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] took issue with the statement I made that ex-President Taft was favorable to the Overman bill, and so did the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I argued that the messages he sent to Congress showed him to be in favor of the bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Ohio took the position that I was wrong and that President Taft did not favor such legislation. I ask leave to put in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Overman bill means better work for war," by William Howard Taft, in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, showing that my contention was correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OVERMAN BILL MEANS BETTER WORK FOR WAR.

[By William Howard Taft.]

The passage of the Overman bill in the Senate secures its passage in the House because the chief opposition to its terms was manifested in the Senate. It is a bill which puts into Mr. Wilson's hands powers of coordination of various governmental agencies for conduct of the war greater than ever before exercised by any predecessor of his in the Presidency.

For national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective administration of his powers as Commander in Chief, the President may, under this bill, redistribute among executive agencies functions now by law conferred upon any department, commission, bureau, or officer. He is to do this by regulation to be filed with the head of the department affected and to remain in force during the war and for six months thereafter. Then the status quo ante is to be restored by operation of law.

The act specifically limits the exercise of the authority granted to matters relating to the conduct of the war. The President has power to transfer with the functions distributed from one department or bureau the personnel and records. Moneys appropriated now or in the future for any department or bureau are to be expended only for the function for which appropriated by the agency to which the President may assign such function. If the President confers all the functions of a bureau upon some other agency, with the view that such bureau ought to be abolished, he is to report this to Congress.

By an amendment of Senator WADSWORTH, the President is given specific authority to create an agency to have jurisdiction over production of airplanes, airplane engines, and aircraft equipment, and to expend all moneys appropriated heretofore for such production. This is the whole of the bill.

The provision of the bill, as introduced, by which the President was given power to create additional agencies and to vest in them performance of such functions as he might deem appropriate was wisely stricken out. This would have given a latitude of power unprecedented and dangerous. He could have made over the Government and created officers with wide powers and appointed men to fill them in the same decree without limitation. The only new agency he can create is that in which complete control of airplane production may be vested.

The bill will undoubtedly give to the President an elasticity of action which can make greatly for proper coordination. It enlarges his power, so it increases his responsibility for a lack of coordination in the future. There is duplication, indeed quadruplication, of functions that might well be put under one head. Take the matter of secret service—there is now a Secret Service in the State Department, in the Department of Justice, in the Treasury Department, and in the War Department. Clearly it would make for both economy and efficiency to have all the agencies engaged in the highly important work of ferreting out treason and spying in our vast and varied population of 100,000,000 and in 48 different States under one responsible head. Nothing is so vital to success in the Secret Service as the concentration of all the details concerning criminal conspiracies and acts in one office and under one control, where they may be compared, conclusions reached, and action taken. The Government has been criticized for failure to convict spies and traitors. Popular imagination on the subject has doubtless been stirred without facts to justify it. Still it is likely that more spies and traitors could have been caught had there been one Secret Service.

Another great field for improvement is in the matter of production and purchase for war purposes. Another is the matter of transportation. There are others. In some of these fields action has been taken, but its effect has been limited because of the lack of power in the President. The authority conferred by the President on Mr. Baruch it might be hard to sustain as legal until this bill becomes law.

Under this bill the President may not abolish departments. He may not create new offices and fill them. He may take a bureau out of one department and put it in another and then unite it with a bureau or office there. He can not spend money for any function not expressly authorized by Congress. On the passage of this bill, however, nothing will prevent complete correlation and union of functions directed toward one specific end. This should make greatly for a successful conduct of the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I shall take but a brief part of the time of the Senate. The conference report has been fully discussed and the minds of Senators have been fully made up. In addition to what I said, however, on the very day the conference report was presented there are one or two very brief observations that I wish to make.

The remarkable part of the discussion is that those who ask the passage of this sort of legislation do so substantially upon the ground of those who oppose the passage of this kind of legislation.

Mr. President, the design—at least the design expressed on the floor of the Senate—of the proponents of the very drastic legislation proposed is the design which actuates many of us in its opposition. The purpose of the legislation is apparently, on the part of those who speak in its behalf, to strengthen the Nation, to aid in the prosecution of the war, and by legislative enactment behind the lines of those who are fighting the Nation's battles in France to render the aid here of the civic population. The purpose of those of us who oppose this legislation is to prevent, if we can, disunion among our people, discontent among those behind the lines, to unite, if we are able, all our people in a homogeneous entity for the success of the war, and thus render best our aid to the men who are doing the actual fighting across the sea.

Measures such as this are not new to nations facing peril and crisis and engaged in conflict. They ever emanate and they become more drastic in terms when the crisis is nearest and the peril greatest. They are the result, indeed, of a sort of psychological effect which war produces upon human kind, and they are the result of a peculiar sort of mental hysteria that comes when people are forced to face great struggles and great attacks. If, in moments such as this, we can keep our heads and maintain our equilibrium, if we can keep our feet upon the ground and remember that the best service, after all, is the service to all of our people and the service which will best unite them, we will have performed in the highest degree the patriotism that is, of course, the characteristic of all upon this floor.

Measures such as this do not unite a people; they breed discontent; they cause suspicion to stalk all through the land; they make the one man the spy upon the other; they take a great, virile, brave people and make that people timid and fearful. Measures such as this do not unite a great democracy such as ours. No matter how you may repress and suppress by legislation, no matter how apparently there may be union among all your people, with the repression, suppression, and oppression of such measures as this, deep down in the hearts of all will be found distrust of neighbors, insidious suspicion skulking all over the land, and finally the very discontent that every one of us would avoid.

The purpose that actuates me in opposing this bill, and which has actuated me in opposing every effort that has been made from the time that this war began to gag the press or to stifle free speech, is because, in my opinion, deep ingrained, just as strongly as I may express it, is the idea that it is absolutely essential in fighting this war that we maintain the morale at home as well as the morale abroad, and we can maintain that morale at home best by doing those things that bring our people together; bring them together in that attitude which shall make for concert of action—trustful, decent, loyal action—in behalf of those who are abroad.

I can not tell you how I feel about the young men who are beyond the seas. In story and in song we have told and sung the deeds of valor and heroism since men have fought at all. We have told of Thermopylæ, where a brave 300 withstood the myriads of Persians; we have sung through our poets of battles of the past wherever freedom was at stake. The valor at Ivry, the courage of Fontenoy, the stubborn and invincible bravery of Naseby have roused our admiration and fired our imagination. But there never was a charge in all history that equals in bravery or heroism the everyday foray of the men in khaki of ours, who "go over the top," men who have had a scant six months' training, men who go against a lifetime of preparation, men who, coming from the bowels of the earth into an unknown land, go to unseen dangers against implements of destruction of which the world never before dreamed.

Anything that we might do of any character that would aid those boys across the sea is a thing that all of us wish to do; and anything that will detract from the morale at home or spread disunion among our people or discontent or suspicion is the thing we do not want to do, and that we ought not to do, else we shall injure those fighting abroad.

So it is that those of us who oppose such measures as this do it upon the very broadest ground, that by such bills we not only injure our people at home, we not only strike a blow at democracy here, at free speech, and at the liberty of the press, that are necessary in time of war as well as in time of peace, but we strike a blow against those who are fighting our battles in foreign fields.

I have had one or two instances of late that would indicate the possibilities of a measure such as this. You recall that under this measure a man may be subjected to 20 years' imprisonment if he "shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States or the military or naval forces of the United States." Two days ago a young man, who was as a son to me, was killed at Fort Worth, Tex. He was killed there in one of the first flights that he endeavored to make in the Aviation Corps. I can describe to you something of the character of this young man and his enthusiasm when I say to you that he was 32 years old, over the draft age; he enlisted as what he termed a "buck private" in the Aviation Corps, because it was his desire to serve his country and to do his duty in this time of stress. I have his letters written before his death, describing a situation which ought not to exist. I read last night in one of the New York papers the statement of the father of the man who was killed with him, and that statement I will read to you. The young man to whom I refer, who was very dear to me, was Paul Herriott, a graduate of the University of California, a man of ability, a man of standing, who had made his mark in California, and who, in order that he might do his duty in this time of dire stress, went, as I have said, as a private in the Aviation Corps, passed his examination at San Antonio, and was on his road to become a pilot, because it was only as a pilot that he desired to be in the Aviation Corps at Fort Worth.

His untimely death, of course, has aroused in every one of us a feeling of the utmost grief. Beyond that it has seemed to some of us—though we may do injustice in that regard—that his death was unnecessary and that it might have been prevented. When I read last night in a New York paper a statement of the father of the man who accompanied him and was killed at the same time, I thought what must be the feelings of the parents of these young men whose lives were thus snuffed out before they had even the poor consolation of attaining their ambition of fighting upon the battle line in France. I now read:

Lieut. Ennis, who was killed in Texas, was the son of Dr. James Seferen Ennis, of No. 165 West Seventy-ninth Street. Dr. Ennis received word from the War Department of his son's death yesterday afternoon.

Lieut. Ennis was a graduate of Yale (academic) in 1915. He was a post-graduate student at Toulouse, France, until the United States entered the war, when he came home and volunteered. He was graduated from the ground school of the aviation section on October 20, 1917, with a standing so high that he was one of 20 to receive a supplementary training with the Royal Flying Corps at Camp Borden, in Canada. Since April 1 he has been instructing cadets.

Dr. Ennis said last night:

"There have been a good many deaths at Fort Worth lately. I have nothing to say in the way of blaming anyone, but it does seem to me that the engines at Taliaferro Fields, where my son was killed, should be better inspected.

"I have several letters from my son lately, and he told me of having to make several forced landings because of his engines failing."

I read only what appears in the paper. I impress upon you that, personally, I do not know the gentleman who speaks in the article and know but little of the detail of what he states.

I recognize that with Europe a slaughter pen, with the blood of the white race there being poured forth, and with all the myriads of death "over there," perhaps you may be little concerned with the death of Lieut. Ennis or with the death of one who was as a son to me, Paul Herriott, a dear, a brave, an unselfish, and a patriotic boy; but to those who loved these men there is, of course, a feeling that if such things as are indicated by Dr. Ennis be true, the deaths were wholly unnecessary; and if the anguished hearts of those who loved these men should cry out against the part of the Army that permitted that sort of thing, if it were permitted wrongfully—and I make no accusation at this time—if those who cared for them should in abusive or in other language denounce those who were responsible, or insist, in some sort of language that might be determined "scurrilous or abusive," that there was fault on the part of officers of the United States, those who thus cried out from anguished hearts would be liable to 20 years' imprisonment under this bill!

I will cite another instance occurring this morning. I sat at breakfast with a gentleman who is engaged in very large business ventures. I talked with him of a subject that was uppermost in my mind, the bill now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs, which gives to the President of the United States the absolute power to take all the personal and real property in the United States belonging to any man or to any company or to any corporation. That sounds exaggerative, does it not? But that is exactly what the bill is that is pending now before the Military Affairs Committee, and is exactly what the bill is that great departments of the Government have said to that committee should at this time be passed. When I talked to this gentleman this morning concerning that particular measure, he said: "You can not mean that seriously there is any purpose of passing such a law?" I said, "It is so serious that the departments recommend it, and it is only the Congress of the United States that stands between that bill and its enactment and its possible exercise." "Good God," he said, "if you pass such a law we might just as well be in Prussia." I said, "Keep still, because if we adopt the conference report now before us, and you should make such a remark as that, 20 years will be your portion," and under this bill that would be so. Thus I say to you when examples of this sort occur daily, how can it be possible that you should want to put upon our people any such bill as this?

I have confidence in the Department of Justice; I have confidence, indeed, in most of the departments of this Government. I will yield them a ready acquiescence in nearly everything that they desire in this particular time, but I can not yield, under the specious plea that it is for the war, and that if I do not do it then I am not sufficiently loyal, the things that are dearest to me and that ought to be dearest to you and are dearest, I am sure, to all the American people.

A brave man does not have to boast, and a patriot does not have to protest his loyalty. This bill puts a premium upon hypocrisy; this bill makes the man with the loudest vocal vociferation of his own virtues and his own patriotism the greatest man among us; and the man who thinks, the man who strives, the man who wants to do for his country, the man who wants to render real service with the head that God gave him is unable to render that service, unable to think, unable to act, unable to speak. Nothing better illustrates—and I say this in no invidious fashion—the truth of what I indicate now than the attitude of a part of the press of the Nation to-day, which you observe and upon which privately you comment.

One of the greatest of professions that we have ever had is that of journalism. The newspaper correspondents represent in part the profession of journalism, and all of you have read some of their recent effusions, and some of these consist simply of hypocritical subserviency to power. Already by the repressive measures that you have passed in this country you have taken out of the heads of otherwise brave men the real thing that makes men; you have taken from hearts that beat strong that which made them strong, and their hearts are now timid and they fear. I can not blame them. They fear to say what they think; aye, they even fear to tell the truth.

Take this from the press and you take it as well from the ordinary man. Let disloyalty be punished; let anyone who would seek to prevent being done anything which ought to be done, and let any act against the war or that interferes with its prosecution be punished just as condignly as you want; but do not put fear into a brave man's heart; do not padlock his lips when he is trying to do his best; do not instill into him the distrust and suspicion that this kind of a measure will put into human beings; do not set neighbor to watch neighbor; do not let men who have ulterior motives sneak around dark corners and endeavor to fasten something upon others. Leave us in this time of stress the right to talk from our hearts honestly and loyally, even if it be in abuse of any part of the Government of the United States. Leave unto the ordinary American citizen the right still to be an American citizen, and thus you leave behind the line the morale of a brave and homogeneous people, the morale that is necessary for the preservation of the morale abroad, and which is necessary to lead this democracy finally to victory.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I sympathize very strongly with the apprehensions expressed by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] concerning the methods in which the proposed legislation can be utilized for the purpose of punishing or persecuting citizens of the United States for expressions that are not designed to produce ulterior consequences. When the bill to which this measure is an amendment was before the Senate for discussion something like a year ago, I joined with others in opposing legislation so extensive as to suppress the utterance of truth and criticisms of a needful character which otherwise might be made unlawful should the legislation then proposed become effective. I felt then, and I feel now, that legitimate criticism of governmental affairs, telling the truth about them under certain circumstances, is as essential to the successful prosecution of the war as it is to suppress disloyal utterances whenever and wherever they are designed—and they generally are designed—to produce untoward consequences.

If I had my way about this measure, I would attempt to very materially modify the phraseology of the proposed substitute for section 3, while at the same time recognizing the difficulty of drawing a line of demarcation between that which is and that which is not seditious. We can easily, by illustrations, determine whether a given statement or situation is or is not proper, but we can not—and I think the poverty of language is such that no man can—define the limitations, the boundaries, between sedition and truth and honest criticism.

The one saving grace about the proposed amendment is the insertion of the word "willfully" as to all of the things designed to be prohibited. In other words, the intent is carefully safeguarded, or safeguarded as far as the use of a term long since legally defined can make it. That, however, does not protect the citizen from the attempts which may be made to assail his integrity as a citizen by those interested in causing him trouble or in securing his conviction, and therein, to my mind, is the chief objection to the section.

No man of any consequence can carry on his daily affairs and come in contact with his fellow citizens without incurring opposition and enmity; and many of the enemies confronting the individual are not straightforward in their animosity or courageous in their efforts to secure satisfaction. They sneak behind statutes of this sort and become self-constituted emissaries of misinformation, thus setting the machinery of justice in operation and subjecting their opponents and their enemies to unjust and expensive and humiliating prosecution. That, I fear, is the inevitable consequence of this provision if it should be enacted into law.

We are told by the departments that the present statute is inefficient and practically inoperative, and that unless something of this kind is added to the espionage law it will fail to produce the consequences intended. We have had our attention called to the inefficacy of the existing section 3, not only in a general way but by way of specific instance. That statute seemed to me, at the time it was accepted by the Senate, to be sufficient for the purpose. It may be, however, that experience has demonstrated that we were wrong. I do not know. I will read it:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

Mr. President, the condition of the country, due in large part to the fact that we are not a homogeneous people, and that one section, or a part of one section, of our population is avowedly disloyal and engaged in active enemy propaganda, is the only possible excuse, in my judgment, for this legislation. We should be sensible of the requirements of our institutions and constantly on guard for their protection in times of war, when, of all times, free institutions need safeguarding. There are, however, exceptions to all general rules, and this may be one of them. I am not prepared to say that it is, but I must recognize the existence of a situation that is both unique and dangerous.

Mr. President, I have had occasion to say at a previous time that the enemy known as pan-Germanism is far more dangerous to the allied forces than the troops of the Kaiser upon the western front. I have had occasion to illustrate that statement by referring to the fate of Russia and to the terrible disaster to the Italian arms last October, and also to the seething mass of dissatisfaction which is being carefully and constantly fomented in all allied countries. Germany, now conceded to have been the aggressor in this war, aims, as Bernhardi declared she should aim back in 1911, at world dominion; and Germany has prepared herself for her attempt at world dominion by nearly a half century of careful, constant, and meticulous preparation. There is nothing of which mankind is capable, no great advance sociologically, economically, industrially, politically, or commercially, which Germany has not long ago drafted into her general scheme of world dominion and military preparation therefor.

Forty years ago pan-Germanism began its pernicious course, with the result that every German, and as far as possible every descendant of every German, in every country in the world, has been utilized or sought to be utilized in the general scheme of Germanic world conquest. The Machiavellian philosophy, so called, has, ever since the time of Frederick the Great, been the accepted scheme of German activity; and it has been improved upon by Bismarck and by the present Kaiser to a degree that would astonish the author of that policy if he could be made aware of that development.

I happened to be in the city of Washington a few years ago when Prince Henry of Prussia, representing his imperial brother, visited the United States. It was my good fortune to sit in yonder gallery when he was ushered into this Hall by a committee of which the then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations was the leader, and to listen to his words of amity and good will toward the United States—a speech the earnestness and sincerity of which was at the time never doubted, and which, of course, contributed almost entirely to the cordial reception which he received, both at the hands of public functionaries and at the hands of private citizens everywhere. And yet we now know, we long since have known, that the visit of Prince Henry to this country was not for the purposes ostensibly announced, but for the purpose of clinching and making more effective that American section of pan-Germanism that owes its allegiance first to the Kaiser and second, if any allegiance be left, to the United States of America. We now know why he visited the principal cities of the United States where German population is in the aggregate far greater than in other sections, and why his visit and its purposes have been followed up and stimulated ever since. We did not suspect it then. Indeed, one of the marvels in which posterity will indulge will be the utter indifference with which the people of other countries, without exception, permitted pan-Germanism to continue and to develop, all in the interest of the Fatherland; and that wonder, Mr. President, will be perhaps more complete when the statements, which should have been warnings, made long before the war, were available to all thinking and reading people.

Gen. Bernhardi, in his now famous work, "Germany in the Next War," published in 1911, referring to the Germans beyond the Empire, said:

The further duty of supporting the Germans in foreign countries in their struggle for existence, and of thus keeping them loyal to their nationality, is one from which, in our indirect interests, we can not withdraw. The isolated groups of Germans abroad greatly benefit our trade, since by preference they obtain their goods from Germany; but they may also be useful to us politically, as we discover in America. The American Germans have formed a political alliance with the Irish, and, thus united, constitute a power in the State with which the Government must reckon.

The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] can speak much more intelligently and forcefully than can I regarding the activities of the German-American Alliance in the United States; and we do know that in the interval between the general declaration of war and our entry into it, the activities of certain Irishmen and of certain Germans in the great cities of the country, particularly during the last political campaign, confirm the assertion of Bernhardi almost to the letter.

Of course, Mr. President, I must always be understood as exempting those patriotic and liberty-loving Germans and Irishmen and the descendants of Germans and of Irishmen from the general indictment of pan-Germanism; but after that exception is made there is too much of it, far too much of it, perniciously active at all times.

I was told a day or two ago that between the letting of the first contract for airplanes and the time when Mr. Ryan was placed in charge of that division of the military service 1,100 changes were made in the designs of one plane alone. I do not say that that was due to pan-German activity, but I say that it is an excellent illustration of the way in which these forces are constantly interfering to prevent the United States throwing its whole force into this struggle, and to prevent unity of American citizenship at home. I have not the time to refer to the many incidents, the many terrible events, crowding each upon the heels of the other since the debacle of August, 1914, began; but I do know, and every observing man in America knows, that the poison of quiet and sometimes of vociferous criticism of men and of measures, the dissemination of views regarding the operation of the draft law, the power of the Government to use its military forces outside of the jurisdiction of the United States, the spread of rumors of all sorts regarding the condition of our soldiery, the sanitary situation in their camps, and the thousand and one things which the devilish activities of a great section of our people suggest to others go further in a country like this to diffuse and to weaken our energies than in a country like Great Britain, whose population is largely homogeneous.

In America we have people from every section and every country on the earth, and we have been so indifferent to our own duties of citizenship as to permit them to remain segregated, to use their language and not our language, and to conduct themselves practically as foreign communities within our midst. That is the ripest soil that can be imagined for the dissemination of treasonable and semitreasonable utterances and propaganda.

If I understand the purpose of section 3, as presented by the conference report, it is to meet and if possible overcome that situation as far as the present legislation can overcome it, and therefore this report has been agreed upon.

Mr. President, we do not enact laws against murder and make crimes of larceny in order to interfere with the rights but rather to protect the rights of the law-abiding, tax-paying citizens. Those laws are necessarily general. They must be comprehensive else they would consist of class legislation and be both unjust and ineffective. So with legislation of this character. It must be made sufficiently comprehensive to include everybody—the white, the black, the rich, the poor, the Jew, the Gentile. It will probably bear, it may bear, heavily upon those who with the best of intentions express their opinions concerning government and governmental functions. It may go too far; I am afraid it does; but I sympathize, in view of the experiences of the past year, very strongly with that condition which has prompted the Government to ask legislation of this sort.

However, Mr. President, I rose more for the purpose of referring to a clause of section 3 which was eliminated by the committee of conference and which resulted in the recommittal of the bill when the first conference report was before the Senate.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. KING. I should like to suggest to the Senator that legislation of this character has been enacted in a number of States. Indeed, the draft of the section which the Senator is now discussing is largely copied from the law of Montana.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, Mr. President, I am aware of that fact. The senior Senator from Montana——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Utah tell us what other States? He says it has been enacted in a number of States.

Mr. KING. The State of Idaho has a similar law, and I am told two or three other States, although I have not had an opportunity to verify the information which I have received.

Mr. GALLINGER. Scarcely a number.

Mr. THOMAS. The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] the other day congratulated himself upon being the author of the Montana statute and upon its acceptance by Congress as the basis of this proposed amendment.

Mr. President, the fact that the States have adopted a similar statute I do not think is an argument in favor of or against this measure. I know there are a great many statutes in my State that had much better be left unenacted, and I am inclined to think that inasmuch as the State has taken the plunge it mighty possibly have been better to have allowed the judiciary of those States to have tried it out before rushing in headlong and adopting it ourselves. I hope it will work all right in Montana and in Idaho and in the other States. I do not for a moment question the patriotism or the good intention of the functionaries of States which have enacted such legislation, and I am aware, from a great deal of personal knowledge, of the necessity of something of the sort in the State of Montana.

Mr. President, when this bill was passed by the Senate section 3 contained the following proviso:

That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true with good motives and for justifiable ends.

That is an amendment which was presented, if I recollect rightly, by the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and it was accepted by the Senator having charge of the bill, in consequence of which I do not think it attracted much attention or much criticism. I remember that I favored it mentally and at the time regarded it as a beneficial addition to the section. But since it has become a pivot of active controversy I have taken occasion to look into the phraseology of it a little more closely, and my conclusion is that it should have been eliminated.

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true with good motives and for justifiable ends.

Mr. President, intent is essential to the constitution of all crimes, great and small. Motive may be important as determining intent or it may not. The ideas, however, conveyed by the two words are by no means identical. A man with the best of motives may commit a serious crime and his purpose may be, in his opinion, justifiable; that is, he may act from pure motives and justifiable ends. I may be a neighbor of the Senator from South Carolina, and I may imagine that his house contains germs of some very infectious disease which unless removed may subject the members of my family to infection and to disease and death. The Senator, however, is indifferent to my appeals for fumigation and also to the apprehensions which I entertain, and since he will not act I set his house on fire. My motive is to protect my family, and that is a justifiable end; yet who will say that under such circumstances the laws of South Carolina would not reach forth and take possession of my person, imprison and try me, and convict me of the crime of arson?

Old Torquemada, the head of the Spanish Inquisition, apprehended and tried and burned heretics by the thousands with the best of motives and for justifiable ends, yet no student of history can now even indirectly justify the horrible cruelties that were perpetrated upon the people of Spain and of adjoining countries by the Inquisition.

A German-American, or a man who is not a German-American but sympathizing with the Germans, may with the best of motives acquire information regarding the state of our munition factories and publish the facts to the world. His motive is perfectly good. He wants to help the cause with which he sympathizes, and the end justifies the means in his instance. He publishes these facts. Could he be convicted under a statute containing such a proviso? I doubt it very much, Mr. President. It is not necessary to multiply instances because they would occur to any thinking man by the thousand.

This is not a new question. Indeed, it is very difficult to encounter any question which has not directly or indirectly met the criticism of the courts during our one hundred and twenty-five and odd years of national life. In the case of Warner v. The Tenth National Bank (29 Fed., 287) the court says:

"Intent" and "motive" are not identical and intent often exists where a motive is wholly wanting. When a man does not act or omits to do an act with knowledge of the consequences he intends the consequences just as truly as he intends to do or to omit the thing done or omitted. (Warner v. Tenth National Bank, 29 Fed., 287.)

The Supreme Court of the United States has also expressed itself upon the subject upon two occasions. I read an extract from the opinion in the case of Johnson v. The United States (157 U. S., 325):

The defendant's counsel asked an instruction that where the evidence shows that the defendant did not commit the actual killing and when it is uncertain whether he did participate in it then the jury may regard the absence of any proof of motive for the killing in finding their verdict. This instruction the court gave, but added to it the observation that the absence or presence of motive is not a necessary requisite to enable the jury to find the guilt of a party, because it is frequently impossible for the Government to find a motive. In thus qualifying the instruction, the learned judge committed no error. The jury were in effect told that they had right to consider the absence of any proof of motive, but that such proof was not essential to enable them to convict.

A case involving a similar question was decided in Williamson v. United States (207 U. S., 425).

The celebrated case of the People against Molineaux involved the question I am now considering. The case was of such importance that it was published in the sixty-second volume of the Lawyers' Reports (Annotated), beginning on page 193, with a most illuminating note covering all the cases involving the entire subject. The court there says:

Motive is the moving power which impels to action for a definite result; intent is the purpose to use a particular means to effect such result. In the popular mind intent and motive are not infrequently regarded as one and the same thing. In law there is a clear distinction between them. When a crime is clearly proven to have been committed by a person charged therewith, the question of motive may be of little or no importance, but criminal intent is always essential to the commission of crime. (People v. Molineaux, 61 N. E., 286; 168 N. Y., 264.)

It is my opinion, therefore, Mr. President, that the committee acted wisely in eliminating this amendment from the section, because it would have destroyed the efficacy of the section utterly. The only defense, if defense be made, under such a provision would be to establish his good motives and the end to be accomplished, which, of course, would follow as being justifiable. So far, then, as that part of the report is concerned, I think the Senate should adopt it.

With the substance of section 3 a far more serious question, as I have suggested, is involved.

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is the Senator from Colorado of the opinion that any citizen can criticize, supposing it to be based upon facts to be ascertained upon an inquiry in the event he be arrested, under the provisions of this bill the conduct of a military or naval officer or any officer in the executive department or any civil officer who is connected with the activities that relate to the war? Could he criticize his conduct? Could he instigate an investigation or could he criticize in the matter we have had here recently, the condition of the Aviation Service, without being sent to the penitentiary?

Mr. THOMAS. That question involves the crux of the whole subject involved in this section. My own belief is that inasmuch as the proposed amendment prohibits the willful doing of those things an honest criticism, a fair criticism, a criticism upon facts would be protected, and yet I am not absolutely positive about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I inquire further whether the person who makes the criticism does not take on himself the character of an insurer of the truth of the charge?

Mr. THOMAS. I think not. I believe that the defendant in every instance would have the benefit of those presumptions which the law always throws around an indicted citizen.

Mr. SHERMAN. So the jury could determine whether he was reasonably justified?

Mr. THOMAS. That is my impression. I do not want the Senator to understand that I am satisfied with this section. I am not, but I think the use of the word "willful," thus requiring the intent to appear, will protect and safeguard the honest man who is trying to help his Government by criticizing it as he ought, if it deserves criticism, and that the presumption of innocence and all the other presumptions which are thrown around every indicted citizen by the laws of the United States will operate to protect him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hardly expected to take part in any discussion on this conference report, but I can not share in the apprehensions expressed by some Senators in regard to the consequences that may flow from this act. As a member of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee that considered the bill I have given it some attention and have taken considerable interest in legislation of this character. Some days ago the Senate had before it the conference report on Senate bill 383, being the bill to provide for the punishment of those charged with the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation by the use of fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid the hostile use of property during the war. The conference report upon Senate bill 383, as it will be recalled, contained section 3. It provided—

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

There was very strong objection to section 3 of the bill, as shown in the conference report, and it was urged here on the floor of the Senate in the discussion of that conference report that section 3 was altogether gratuitous, that no language of the bill found in other sections could possibly be construed to prevent employees from peaceably stopping work in order to better their conditions as to wages or other conditions of employment.

I remember very well that during the course of that discussion the question was asked as to whether or not, if section 3 remained in the bill, it would not invite that very condition which of all others we desired to avoid; that is, a strike in those industries engaged in the manufacture of war materials.

I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that there came to be a sort of consensus of opinion here in the Senate that section 3 was more than gratuitous, that it was mischievous. It not being required by any of the other provisions of the bill in order that the legitimate rights of laboring men might be safeguarded, it would serve to call the attention of employees to that particular thing, and therefore invite a strike and the consequent crippling of war industries. So that conference report was rejected.

Mr. President, my purpose in alluding to the conference report on Senate bill 383 and to section 3 thereof is to point out what I deem an analogy between that bill and the pending bill and the amendment offered to the pending bill and carried here in the Senate by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE]; an amendment which reasserted the law which is recognized as existing in nearly every State in the Union in regard to prosecutions for libel, providing in substance that the truth spoken or written with good motives and for justifiable ends should constitute a defense.

Mr. President, in my judgment that language is just as unnecessary in the pending bill as was the language of section 3 in Senate bill 383, and that a close study of the bill will disclose the fact. I think, that instead of needing these words to guard the rights of the press or to guard the rights of any citizen the language of the bill negatives the idea that the truth spoken with good motives and for justifiable ends could be subject to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if he will explain a little more in detail what he means by "unnecessary"? Does he mean by the word "unnecessary" that the language was immaterial, or does he mean that this is already covered by the statute? Does he mean that it is immaterial whether the language is there or whether it is not there, or does he mean that it is merely not necessary?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I mean that it is not necessary in order to protect the rights of the publishers or the utterers of words. Now, note the language of the bill:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish—any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States or the military or naval forces of the United States or the flag of the United States—

What?—

And so forth.

Mr. President, the individual publishing or uttering disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language in regard to the form of government or the Constitution of the United States is not speaking the truth with good motives and for justifiable ends, and for the simple reason that under the language of the bill the language used must be "disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive."

There has been a good deal of discussion here, Mr. President, about different officials of the Government and different activities of the Government, to which the language of this bill does not apply. It does not prevent any criticism of the War Department, the Navy Department, or of any other department of the Government, for that would not be concerning the form of government itself or concerning the Constitution of the United States. The language must go to the form of government or to the Constitution itself, and it must be disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language. No criticism made of any governmental activity will come within the scope of this bill or the language used in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to inquire of the Senator what he thinks of the language contained in a subsequent portion of the section, "intended to bring the form of government of the United States" into disrepute or into contempt? I am only quoting the language from memory. Would it include a criticism of an officer of the executive department or of a military or naval officer or of one connected with the Military or Naval Department? If I made the criticism in good faith, even though it might turn out, if I were indicted and tried, that the facts asserted would not be sustained by the proof—if I in good faith believed at the time I made the charge that it was true and had good reason to believe that what I said was true—would that tend to bring the Government of the United States into disrepute; for instance, if I had criticized in good faith, believing it to be true at the time, that some one connected with the Aviation Service had been faithless in the expenditure of funds for the Aviation Service?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Illinois, I will say no; he surely would not be indicated under the terms of this bill. It does not refer to an officer of the Government; it does not prevent criticism of any officer of the Government; but it does prevent the use of language intended to bring the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States, and so forth, into disrepute. How the Senator from Illinois can construe a criticism of any official of the Government as tending to bring the very form of our government, which is republican, into disrepute, I can not understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is further language, though I have not the section before me, concerning which I desire to make an inquiry in reference to abusive language about the military or naval forces of the United States. "Abusive" is a very flexible and comprehensive term. If I criticize the military forces of the United States by criticizing one or more of their officers or the heads of bureaus or departments—not in the field, but in the departments at Washington—under the conditions I have heretofore named in the former question, would that constitute an offense under this section?

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not think so. I do not think a criticism of an individual military officer of the United States would come within the provisions of this bill. If the Senator will note all of the language of the section and make the proper connection of that language, he will see that it refers to disloyal language, profane language, scurrilous language, or abusive language about the form of government or—omitting some portions of the text—about the military or naval forces of the United States. I do not think, Mr. President, that it would prevent criticism of the individual soldier or the individual officer or the individual company or, perhaps, an individual regiment of soldiers, so far as that is concerned, who were not obedient to military discipline or to the rules provided for their government. That is not a criticism within the meaning of the bill of the Army and Navy forces of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose abusive language was directed not to an individual or to a company, but to a department which constitutes a large part of the military or naval forces of the United States?

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator mean a department of the military forces or a department of the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Either one.

Mr. STERLING. I do not think the criticism of a department of the Government is prohibited by this bill. I think the language employed in this bill would fall under the general rule of construction, that the mention of the one or of a series will, by implication, exclude the others; and where it is confined to the form of government or the Constitution of the United States as this language is, so far as it relates to governmental activities, so far as it relates to any particular department of the Government, they are by implication excluded from the operations of this bill under the familiar principle of construction, to which I have referred, that the expression of the one excludes the other.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the Senator to say, in answer to the question addressed to him by the Senator from California, that he did not believe that the bill could be construed to embrace criticisms of any department of the Government. Can the Senator from South Dakota call our attention to any language which might possibly be so construed?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Montana that I can not find in all the bill any language that will bear any such construction as that.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator conceive of the particular language the Senator from California might have had in mind?

Mr. STERLING. I can not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of course, I am delighted to know the interest that is evinced by the Senator from Montana in what may be my peculiar mental processes in addressing the Senator from South Dakota. If the Senator will permit me, I might enlighten him respecting the particular matter, or, perhaps, it will be better for me to do so subsequently.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I looked and did not see the Senator from California in his seat and was unaware that he was in the Chamber. I shall be very glad to address the question to him, if the Senator from South Dakota will yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will take the opportunity later to suggest certain examples that have escaped the keen scrutiny of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, that, in the main, is my construction of that particular portion of the bill which relates to disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language. I think the insertion of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland would be fraught with great danger, in that it would to a great extent nullify the provisions of this section, as the question then would largely be one of the motive with which the words were published or uttered, and motive, Mr. President, as very well stated by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, can not be a defense.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator goes to another part of his discussion, if he will permit me, I should like to inquire what his opinion is of the following prohibition—I am reading now from the top of page 2 of the conference report—

> Language intended to bring—
> Omitting certain phrases and summarizing it—> intended to bring the military or naval forces of the United States into disrepute.

Would that include a criticism of military or naval officers or heads of departments in relation to their official conduct or possibly their military conduct, or of the Commander in Chief and his military conduct, as it might subsequently develop in the management of our public defense in waging the war? Would criticisms of officers made in good faith and for the bona fide purposes of improving conditions under which the war is conducted be construed to bring the military or naval forces of the United States into disrepute, and so subject the one using such language to indictment?

Mr. STERLING. In answer to the Senator from Illinois, I will say that I think not. I do not think that this bill is aimed at any just criticism of any individual officer, civil or military; the criticism must relate to the Army or Navy of the United States or the military or naval forces of the United States, and must be disloyal, abusive, or scurrilous in regard to them, or couched in language which would bring them as an armed force or organization into disrepute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have no difference of opinion with any Senator as to language that is scurrilous, or, in ordinary acceptation, abusive, or calculated to incite a spirit of insubordination or civil tumult or to encourage mutiny, or is in the mind of the average man calculated to obstruct enlistments or the procurement of supplies, and so forth, for the military or naval forces; but I wish to make an inquiry concerning a provision five or six lines lower in the bill, covering language willfully uttered, intended to "encourage resistance to the United States." I want to enlarge that. We are thinking of resistance in our own borders, the instigation of domestic discontent. The publication of information about the Aviation Service and the lack of adequate progress made in the last year would have a wider significance than that, because it might well under this provision be construed to encourage resistance of the German Government to the United States, if they found that we have not made more satisfactory progress, and I think it has that signification. I wish to inquire of the Senator if, in his opinion, revelations of that kind, made in good faith, would subject one to prosecution on the ground that it encouraged the German Government in its resistance to the United States?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, Mr. President, I do not think the language will bear any such construction as that. I think it means language which is intended to incite, provoke, or encourage resistance to the United States within the United States, and that the resistance here meant is not the resistance of a government with which we are now at war.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Is it not a fact that the language "resistance to the United States" was a Senate amendment to the committee amendment, placed in the bill here after considerable discussion, and upon motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]? The original language was perfectly clear before the adoption of the Knox amendment, and to me the former language was much clearer. The language was, "resistance to an act of an officer of the United States enforcing the laws of the United States," and so forth. That was the original language; but one or two cases in the Supreme Court of the United States were cited here by various of our learned members of the legal fraternity. The Senate of the United States then, in its wisdom, decided that this language, "resistance to the United States," following the language used by the Supreme Court in the Terry case, would be better, on the whole, than the language of the original committee amendment, providing a penalty for resisting the legal order of an officer of the United States.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I understand the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania and how it came to be enacted. I think it is an improvement upon the original bill, and in itself it serves to do away with a great many of the objections that have been made to the bill, namely, that the criticism of an officer for some of his acts might come within the provisions of the bill. The amendment was offered and adopted with a view of preventing that criticism of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a further inquiry——

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator's opinion of the following language:

> Or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things * * * necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war.

I will ask the Senator whether he thinks that would interfere with a strike in the production of shells or ordnance or fuel, or must it not only be a strike to curtail production, but must the curtailment of production be with the intent on the part of the strikers to cripple the United States? How far would an act have to go, under this language, to stop a strike that is threatened in a munition plant or a coal mine?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think that language uttered or published with the intent to incite a strike for the purpose of curtailing the production of munitions or other material needed in the prosecution of the war would come within the meaning of this act, and that those who incite or provoke such a strike, with the intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States, would come within the meaning of the act.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would the mere fact that a strike ensued in pursuance of a common understanding, resulting in curtailing the output of munitions or fuel, be of itself sufficient, or in the prosecution, would it be necessary for the district attorney to aver in the indictment and to prove that the strike not only curtailed the production of a necessary article, but that it was with intent to cripple the United States? They would probably come in, in defense, and say that the strike was to better working conditions, to increase wages, and not to cripple the United States.

Mr. STERLING. In a case of the kind suggested by the Senator from Illinois, I think, from the plain reading of this bill, the specific intent to curtail production would have to be alleged and would have to be proven, and that the mere curtailment of production as a result of a strike made in good faith for the purpose of improving conditions would not come within the provisions of the act.

Mr. SHERMAN. Must it be alleged further, if I may inquire, that it was with intent to cripple the United States?

Mr. STERLING. I think so; and the offense is not complete unless the act is committed, and with that intent, namely, to cripple or hinder the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. President, this provision, if enacted into law, will do no more than make confusion worse confounded with existing law. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] made an inquiry on this subject yesterday, and I did not have the act at hand to quote; but, with the Senator's permission, I will inquire now if this law, already in force and which has been unused in cases of curtailing production up to this time, is not a better one than the law proposed in the latter part of the section we are now considering? It reads as follows——

Mr. STERLING. From what act is the Senator reading?

Mr. SHERMAN. From section 4 of the food and fuel act. I called the attention of the Attorney General of the United States to this provision, as it seems to have escaped his attention since the approval of the act of August 10, 1917. I quote now the language of section 4, omitting certain phrases which do not refer to the case I have in mind, as I believe:

> That it is hereby made unlawful for any person * * * to conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person (a) to limit the facilities for * * * producing * * * any necessaries; (b) to restrict the supply of any necessaries.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me right there, the word "necessaries," as used in the food-control act, is confined to certain articles, foodstuffs in the main.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is confined to food and fuel.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Coal is a necessary ingredient of fuel. Fuel oil is another.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the matter I have particularly in mind, and which I earnestly hoped in my communications with the Attorney General he would avail himself of, I think does not require any construction, but is the plain language of the act, which prohibits a conspiracy among two or more persons to limit the production of fuel, coming directly within the food and fuel act; and that is stronger, in my judgment, than the language of the bill now under consideration. Now, very lately, on the 25th of April, 1918—showing, I think, that at last some Federal official somewhere has the right view of this law—at Christopher, Ill., where there are a large number of soft-coal shafts, which have been idle since November 20, 1917, they were reopened after 200 miners were told by Federal officials that they could either resume work or face prosecution under this section of the fuel act.

Now, that is covered, and covered adequately, in my judgment. I think any district attorney could indict and could convict, because all he needs to do is to aver in the indictment and prove that the men conspired to quit the operation of the mine, refused to work and to produce fuel, so as to limit the output of a necessary; and without fuel we can not operate munition plants.

Why does not the Attorney General prosecute under this section, or direct his district attorney in the district concerned so to do, instead of saying that the Congress is at fault for not providing new legislation?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I can not explain why the Attorney General has not resorted to prosecutions in certain cases, prosecutions that would be authorized under existing law; and I think the Senator from Illinois has performed a service by calling the attention of the Senate to this particular provision in the food-control bill. It might be said that with that provision in the food-control bill, and with regard to certain productions, we would have the two acts which would apply. One of them is the food-control bill, and there it would apply to fuel, at least fuel used in the prosecution of the war. Here is an act, however, which provides against inciting or provoking acts which will result in the curtailment of the production of war materials, and so forth, with the purpose of crippling or hindering the United States in the prosecution of the war.

I was about to say a word further in regard to the matter of motive, Mr. President, which is involved in the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator have the patience to indulge me again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to a further question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have only made these inquiries because the Supreme Court and inferior trial courts have frequently had recourse to the RECORD of the Senate and the House in the pendency of bills to ascertain what the legislative purpose was in enacting certain measures. I apologize to the Senator for taking his time; but I have made these inquiries with that in view so that it might be in the RECORD to help interpret this act.

Mr. STERLING. I appreciate the motive of the Senator from Illinois in calling attention to these matters, and I thank him for it.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], as I stated a while ago, gave a very clear exposition and definition of motive, and distinguished it from intent. I add this quotation from Wharton in regard to motive:

> No matter what other motives, good or bad, cooperated, if the intent to do the particular unlawful act is either proved or implied, the offense, if committed, is complete.
> If the law were otherwise, there would be few convictions of crime, for there are few crimes in which extraneous motives are not mixed up with the particular evil motive. * * *
> The absence of motive shown for the commission of the crime may be considered by the jury as to the bearing of that fact on whether the defendant committed the crime, and to this point only.

And every lawyer knows how important the matter of motive sometimes is in cases depending upon circumstantial evidence.

Again:

> And the law is that, no matter what may be the motives leading to a particular act, if the act be illegal, it is indictable, notwithstanding that some one or more of these motives may be meritorious.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRANCE. I have a very high opinion of the legal attainments of both the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from South Dakota, but it seems to me that they have both analyzed this particular clause too closely. It seems to me they have disregarded the fact that the question of motive can not be separated from the question of the truth. The clause must be read as a whole; and this amendment, if it is adopted, prevents a man being prosecuted for speaking what is true with good motives. So it seems to me that there is a danger, into which, in my humble opinion, the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from South Dakota have both fallen, of discussing the question of motive by itself, aside from its proper connection with the question of the truth.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in all such cases the question of truth will be a question in dispute, and the defendant will rely for the main part probably on his good motive in publishing the statement or delivering himself of the utterance. Then, further, Mr. President, I may say that in our present situation, considering the peril and the danger and the aid it may give to the enemy, the truth itself, from a military standpoint and from the standpoint of the peril it would occasion us, though stated or published with good motives according to the idea of the defendant himself, should not in some cases be published.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield for a further question to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. The Senator has now reached the logical conclusion of his argument and the argument of all those who are opposed to this amendment. They do not wish the American people to be privileged at this time to speak the truth, with good motives and for justifiable ends. I am not a lawyer; but all of these legal subtleties will not enable those who take a position against this amendment from occupying the position of being opposed to permitting the American people at this time to speak the truth, with good motives and for justifiable ends.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator think it might be always well that the position, the situation, the movement of the land and naval forces of the United States should be published, although the truth might be spoken by the publisher or by the person making any oral statement in reference to them?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Let me call the attention of the Senator to that part of the bill relating to willfully attempting to obstruct or discourage recruiting or enlistment in the service. A man can do that in various ways by telling the truth. He can go on and tell how the poor soldiers suffer there, how they are shot and riddled with bombs, and how they are badly treated if they are prisoners, and be telling the truth, and yet by telling the truth he will be discouraging enlistments.

Mr. WATSON. But would that be a justifiable end according to the language of the amendment?

Mr. NELSON. That might be a question in morals. A man can tell the truth in various ways by which he can discourage enlistment and incite mutiny and other obstructions to the military forces of the United States. If you inject this provision into it, there is not a man who is disloyal and tries to hamper and hinder the Government but will insist on every occasion, "I am telling the truth."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from South Dakota will permit me, I will ask the Senator from Minnesota to state how a man can tell the truth when he discourages enlistments? Can the Senator cite a particular instance?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. He can hold up the horrors of war to a young fellow, telling him how they are apt to suffer in the trenches, how they have to stand in the mud and water, and how they are liable to be hit by a bomb and be crippled; in other words, depicting all the horrors of war, so as to discourage poor fellows from enlisting by taking the heart and nerve out of them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to take the time of the Senator from South Dakota, but that does not answer the question at all.

Mr. NELSON. They may be telling the truth all the time, and yet they may be telling it in such a way as to discourage young men from enlisting.

Mr. SHERMAN. The object is not——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield further to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Illinois to make his statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. The object in such a case is not to tell the truth; it is to discourage enlistments.

Mr. NELSON. He is telling the truth for that purpose. What is the effect of it? It is to discourage enlistments. How can you tell his motive?

Mr. SHERMAN. The very fact that he is discouraging enlistments and could have no other object in view is enough to convict him before a jury. He could not escape under this law.

Mr. STERLING. I might suggest to the Senator from Illinois that he might fall back on the question of motive, and make the plea that his motive was a good motive, and yet a crime had been committed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator another illustration: Suppose a ship is about to leave the port of New York with 2,000 soldiers for France and it is known that it will sail at a certain hour. Suppose that should become known to some energetic pro-German sympathizer, would he be justified in publishing it, because if he did publish it, it would be true? Perhaps he may state the exact truth, but ought that to be published?

Mr. LODGE. That is giving aid and comfort to the enemy, of course. That is a wholly different thing.

Mr. FLETCHER. On the question whether a man can defend himself on the ground of his telling the truth, that is the position.

Mr. LODGE. As the Senator knows very well, that is a military offense covered by another statute.

Mr. FLETCHER. But you put in here a proviso that this law can not be enforced on people for telling the truth, if what is said is for good motives and a justifiable end.

Mr. STERLING. A man may burn a building and commit the crime of arson and yet say his motive was good, since it was to rid the city in which the building stood of what he determined was a nuisance. He committed the crime of arson nevertheless. I remember an example in my own town of action of that kind, where two young men took it upon themselves to rid the town of several buildings, and in the course of their operations burned three buildings before they were detected. Scientific enthusiasm may lead to the commission of a crime.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STERLING. In a moment. Take the case of disinterring a corpse. Some vandal violates the cemetery and says he did it in the interest of science, or some man will say, "Here is a bad man in the community and I will resort to violence; I will take the law into my own hands to rid the community of such a man." He does it through a good motive. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wish to suggest to the Senator that in all those cases and the case suggested by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the case suggested earlier by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the act now under consideration has not the slightest application, nor would the amendment omitted by the conferees have any application to that character of cases, nor does it propose by its terms to have any application.

Mr. STERLING. It is a question of motives, Mr. President, and the case cited by the Senator from Florida brings in the question of motive.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; if the Senator will pardon me, only as to crimes and offenses specified in the last amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to call attention to the charge of a judge to a jury. This is from a great Vermont judge:

> The Government's evidence tends to show that the defendant intended to cause insubordination, disloyalty, and refusal of duty in the military forces of the United States; the defendant's evidence tends to show that the only intention which he had was to serve God.
> You should be careful not to mix motive with intent. Motive is that which leads to the act; intent qualifies it. A crime may be committed with a good motive; it may be committed with an evil motive; or it may be committed with a good and an evil motive. To illustrate: The father of a large family steals bread for his starving children and also to deprive the owner of its value. He has two motives; one is good and one is evil; but he is guilty, notwithstanding he has a good motive as well as an evil motive, for he must not steal at all. So in this case the defendant's intention to serve God does not excuse him if you find that he also intended to cause insubordination, disloyalty, or refusal of duty.

This is a concrete case. At the time of this trial if this amendment had been the law the judge could not have made the charge he did, and the jury could not have convicted, as it did, and the man would have gotten off. That is a concrete case.

Mr. GALLINGER. The man was not released?

Mr. OVERMAN. He was not released, because there was not any amendment like this in the law. He would have been released if this amendment had been the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. The man was convicted and sentenced to 15 years.

Mr. OVERMAN. He was sentenced to 15 years; and the Attorney General says if you had put this amendment in the law he would have been acquitted.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Maryland for a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me to make one further suggestion?

Mr. STERLING. I have already yielded to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was going to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, inasmuch as the conviction was made under an existing law, what is the need of this law to meet cases of this kind?

Mr. OVERMAN. Because we are changing the existing law, and you are proposing to give these spies and bolsheviki a cloak which you do not give to any other American citizen.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not talking about the amendment at all. I am talking about the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am talking about the law. I say, if you put this in the law——

Mr. GALLINGER. I say there is no need of a law at all in a case such as the Senator cites.

Mr. OVERMAN. The judge can not go on in other cases and convict and send to the penitentiary.

Mr. GALLINGER. But they did.

Mr. OVERMAN. Under another statute, but not under this sort of a law; and if the law had had this amendment the man would never have been convicted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to say to the Senator from New Hampshire the law is needed, because all judges would not take the same view of the law expressed by the judge whose opinion has just been read by the Senator from North Carolina. Many of the judges of the country have construed the law quite differently, and therefore we have been obliged to amend it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, answering the Senator from Montana, that might be true of the crime of murder, that all judges would not take the same view of a given case.

Mr. WALSH. That is quite true, and accordingly if the judge takes a view of a murder statute which allows some one to escape who ought to be punished, it, of course, becomes the duty of the legislative body to so amend the statute as that the judge will no longer be allowed to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I apprehend if we are going to legislate so as to make the judges act uniformly in criminal cases we will have a sorry job on our hands as legislators.

Mr. STERLING. Another illustration of what may be done under the plea of good motives arose in my own State of South Dakota. We have two strange religious sects in that State, one called the Mennonites and the other called the Huttrische Brethren. They are in a way allied to each other. Their doctrines are somewhat similar. Neither sect believes in military service, and they do everything possible to avoid it. Delegation after delegation representing these sects have visited me here in Washington. I have used argument, persuasion, and denunciation, all with a view to having them abandon their notions in regard to military service; a service which they should be willing to render the country which has protected them and by its protection enabled them to grow rich and prosperous, but all to no purpose.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Does not the Senator think it is highly important that we protect these Socialists who affect to have these scruples about joining the Army? For instance, we had four Socialists at St. Paul who had religious scruples about enlistment. They quoted the Bible, and, of course, in quoting that they could not quote anything but the truth, and then they set out the utmost good motive in not being willing to serve. They were finally enrolled in spite of their truthful utterances and in spite of the fact that they had such good motives. They were finally forced into the Army. Then, when they got down into the training camp, they refused to put on the uniform and refused to drill, all with conscientious motives. Does not the Senator think it is very important that we should protect that kind of men and see that nothing happens to that class of people? Ought we not to enact such legislation to meet that class of people?

Mr. STERLING. I think it highly important in the very sense in which the Senator from Minnesota uses the expression. I have here a clipping——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator cites two religious organizations. Were they not exempted under the original law?

Mr. STERLING. They obtained relief under the original law from combatant service or service which requires them to bear arms, but they do not want to perform any service. In order that they might not avoid the performance of all military service, the Government assigns them to noncombatant service, although it may be in connection with the Army.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought the exemption was complete. I understood that it did exempt the religious organization known as the Friends—Quakers.

Mr. STERLING. It did not exempt them in terms, but it exempted members of all religious organizations whose creeds were opposed to such service, as I remember the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what puzzles me, that these men were troubling the Senator, because when I voted for that amendment I thought it exempted every religious organization that had conscientious scruples against war.

Mr. STERLING. They are exempted from combatant service, but they may perform military service which is termed noncombatant.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. The bill provides that "whoever shall willfully utter, print, or publish any disloyal, scurrilous, profane language about our form of government." For instance, a man utters profane or scurrilous language about our form of government. Under this proposed amendment he can come in and say "I am speaking the truth. This Government of the United States is not what it ought to be. It is a bad Government. It does not compare favorably with others. It is not such a Government as a Socialist or an anarchist or a Bolshevik ought to have. I am speaking the truth, and I do it with the best of motives, because it is a part of my gospel and my creed, and therefore I ought not to be amenable to the law." Does not the Senator think that we ought to protect those kind of people?

Mr. STERLING. The Senator will remember that the bill provides that the language used must be disloyal, that it must be abusive, that it must be scurrilous language.

Mr. WATSON. In the opinion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; in the terms of the bill itself, not in the opinion of the Postmaster General. The Senator from Indiana refers to another provision of the bill, that giving the Postmaster General the power to intercept mail sent out by persons or concerns believed to be sending out disloyal and seditious matter. Let me read a clipping that I have here taken from the Sioux Falls (S. Dak.) Press. It relates to this question of motive and concerns one of the sects of which I spoke a moment ago:

KANSAS CITY, MO., April 21.

Charges of having attempted to bribe officers of Camp Funston to release 14 members of their religious sect, the Huttrische Brethren, are pending against—

Then follow the names of the individuals against whom the charges are pending. I will not give the names—said to be bankers of Alexandria, S. Dak., who were arrested there Monday, according to an announcement by Fred Robertson, United States attorney for Kansas. The three were indicted by a Federal grand jury at Topeka, Kans., April 9.

One is accused of actual payment of $120 to Lieut. C. C. Ray, and another of having written a letter to Lieut. W. P. Jones offering to pay $1,000. The third is charged with having had knowledge of both transactions.

Hence the charge, and hence the indictment against these men. These men will insist, Mr. President, that they are justified in resorting to bribery even because of the end, the escape from military service to which their creed is opposed. It is to such extremes that this doctrine of motive, or good motive, leads in this class of cases.

Mr. President, when I look at a law, especially a penal statute, the question that naturally comes to my mind is whether or not the acts described ought to be forbidden. For example, ought a man to have the right, the United States being now at war, to willfully write, utter, print, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States? Ought he to be allowed to do those things now in time of war? If he should not, we ought to have a law against it, and that is what this law is.

Further, now in a time of peril, when we are drawing upon all the resources of the Nation, when we want to protect the morale of the men who constitute our fighting force, should one be allowed to use scurrilous, abusive, or contemptuous language against the military or naval forces of the United States or the flag of the United States or the uniform of the Army and Navy of the United States? Ought he to do it? If he ought not to do it, we ought to have a law to prevent.

So we may take the other provisions of the bill, that relating to "any utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken which is meant to urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of anything or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of a war in which the United States may be engaged. Ought a man to be permitted to go about the country, to the different munitions manufactories, and incite a curtailment of the production of those munitions necessary for our use in this war? If he should not be allowed to do it, then there should be a law against it. So I think, Mr. President, with every provision of this bill.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Here is a man who speaks scurrilous or contemptuous language about the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States. He may go on and argue that it is the truth, that that uniform does not compare with the German uniform; that it does not compare with the uniform of the Russians; that it is a very inferior uniform. He may be telling the truth. Then he comes in and says he is not only telling the truth but that it is very good motives; he wants the Government to get a different and a better uniform for the Army of the United States, and it is a justifiable end. He says that is the end he is seeking; that he wants the Government to give the soldiers a better uniform. Does not the Senator think we ought to protect those kind of men by our legislation? Does he not think we ought to deal tenderly with that class of men?

Mr. STERLING. Notwithstanding the fact, Mr. President, that he may be speaking the truth, if he did it in an abusive, scurrilous, contemptuous way so as to bring the Army and Navy into disrepute, if that is the effect of the language, he ought to be punished.

Mr. President, I think Senators in opposing this amendment and in opposing striking out the amendment of the Senator from Maryland have fears in regard to the operation of the law which are quite groundless. No loyal, patriotic citizen need fear the operation of this law, because he will not utter abusive or scurrilous or contemptuous language about the form of our Government or the Army or Navy of the United States or indulge in any of the other things prohibited by the terms of the bill. No loyal, patriotic editor or publisher of a paper need fear the operations of the bill, because he, as a loyal, patriotic citizen, will not publish abusive, scurrilous, or contemptuous language in regard to the form of Government or the Constitution or the Army or the Navy of the United States.

No more, Mr. President, need such a man or such an editor fear the operation of this law than the average good moral citizen need fear the operation of a law against murder or arson or larceny or embezzlement or any other crime in the calendar of crimes, and that for the simple reason that the law, made necessary for the peace and good order of society, will not affect him. He will not violate the law, and the law is made only for the disloyal, the treasonable, and the seditious.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator has noticed that there have been in this country frequent manifestations of mob law among the people.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. We had a noted case in Illinois the other day of a poor German miner. Now, such mob violence and breach of the peace comes from such unpatriotic and disloyal and scurrilous language. Do we not need this legislation not only for the purpose of suppressing disloyalty but for the purpose of preserving peace and order in this country and to avoid having any lynching? The other day when we had this question up about the aeroplanes there was talk about mob law and lynch law. If there is to be any mob law or lynch law in this country, I pray to God it will be diverted into the channel of the aeroplane board and the men who manipulated that scheme. They are more deserving of mob law than this poor German miner in Illinois.

But I am opposed to mob law, and for our own protection, to maintain peace and order in our country, and to avoid a breach of the peace we need this legislation. We need it for our own protection as much as we need it to repress disloyalty in this country.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator is absolutely correct in his statement and conclusions. Treason against the United States is defined as levying war against the United States or adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort, and beyond and outside the constitutional provision in regard to treason and the statutes enacted in pursuance of the constitutional provision come these acts, seditious and disloyal, which can not be prosecuted under a charge of treason because they fall just a little short of treason. And yet they do all the injury which treason itself would do. The loyal people realize this and grow impatient because there is no adequate law. There has come a demand from my own State, from every part of my State, that some such law as this shall be passed to make seditious and disloyal utterances impossible.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. What I was going to ask the Senator's permission to interrupt him about was in regard to the matter of lynching. I like to see the Senator's confidence in the language of the statute book. We pile up laws, and we do not enforce them. We do not enforce them against people who most need their enforcement.

The other day it was stated in the newspapers—I have nothing but the newspaper account of it—that a man had enlisted in our Army, had deserted because he was suspected of giving information, had enlisted again, had deserted again, and was found to have plans on his person, and in short to be a spy within the military meaning of the word. According to the newspaper account, he twice deserted from the Army, and he was a German, and he has been interned. Now, that is what brings on the lynchings. There was abundant law to punish that man, and he should have been punished. If the facts as I have stated them are correct, there has been abundant law, and he was interned.

Mr. STERLING. But the type or class of cases probably to which the Senator from Massachusetts has alluded——

Mr. LODGE. He was within the military zone.

Mr. STERLING. He was interned when, of course, he ought to have been prosecuted as a spy.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely; and tried by court-martial.

Mr. STERLING. And hung or shot as the result of his activities.

Mr. LODGE. That is what brings about lynching.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. In view of the statement just made by the Senator from Massachusetts, I want to state that I have made some inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining whether the reports to which the Senator has referred are false or true. Up to this hour I have not been satisfied that such reports are accurate. If they prove to be true then unquestionably the man was a spy and he ought to be dealt with according to the accepted rule of dealing with spies in time of war.

I feel sure that the War Department will take the necessary steps to punish the person referred to as a spy, if the proof warrants such course. Certainly if it fails in its duty the Senate will by resolution or otherwise see that appropriate action is taken. However, we are not in possession of any facts to justify condemnation of the reported action of the officials of the War Department.

Mr. LODGE. That will not punish him. When you get the laws which are in existence rigidly enforced by an effective prosecution you will accomplish more than by all the laws you may pile on the statute books.

Mr. STERLING. But, Mr. President, here is a class of cases that has been brought to my attention again and again. Some have arisen in my State. There are men who are at heart disloyal, who make certain utterances in derision of the Red Cross work, of subscriptions to the liberty loan, of the cause for which we are fighting, and so forth; they are absolutely disloyal. Now, in an otherwise thoroughly loyal community, what is the disposition with regard to characters of that kind? Seeing that there is no law on the statute books to punish these seditious and disloyal utterances, citizens are tempted, in order that the community may be rid of an evil of that kind, to take the law into their own hands.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. That is just the point I want to make. It is not the laws on the statute books——

Mr. STERLING. It is the absence of such laws.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, the fact that there is a law on the statute books is not what prevents lynching. What prevents lynching is the public confidence that the law on the statute books will be enforced. If the law is not enforced, people lose all faith in the courts; they lose all faith in the prosecuting officers, and they take the law into their own hands. This, however, is all part of the general idea that seems to run through this war that we can fight it with language.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that in my opinion the Attorney General has been doing all within his power to enforce existing statutes. I know that he has been keenly alive to the situation and has invoked the criminal statutes and all the machinery at his command to deal with disloyalists and those who have violated Federal statutes. Perhaps in some of the States the district attorneys, either through inexperience in dealing with this class of cases or because of their belief that the law was inadequate—and my own opinion is that in many instances it has been inadequate—to deal with existing conditions, have failed to effectively deal with all cases brought to their attention. I am satisfied, as a result of an exhaustive examination of the activities of the I. W. W. and other disloyal organizations and persons, and existing laws under which efforts to reach these organizations and individuals, that additional statutes are needed. Unfortunately there are some enemies in our midst. They work in secret and in every possible way to oppose our Government and to cripple it in the prosecution of the war. The conditions existing call for legislation to supplement present criminal statutes. This legislation, in my opinion, goes a long way toward meeting the situation. It is not perfect, and does not meet my views in all respects, but it will prove effective and be a necessary and powerful weapon in the hands of the Government to enable it to prosecute individuals who are spreading sedition and trying to undermine the faith of the people in the integrity of our Nation and aid our enemies in this mighty conflict.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has just stated that in his own State there are men uttering seditious words and committing crimes against the Government along that line. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] undertook to illustrate his position and the necessity for the passage of this bill by citing a case in the State of Vermont, where a preacher made seditious utterances from his pulpit; but the laws of the State of Vermont took care of him, and a judge in the State of Vermont took care of him, and he went to prison for at least 15 years—I am not sure whether it was 15 or 20 years. Why can not the officials of the State of South Dakota take care of such men if they are uttering seditious language?

Mr. STERLING. I think we can take care of them in my State in time, but I understand there is no such law on the statute books now. They can enact a statute that would meet, to a great extent, this class of cases. It seems to me, however, since the offense is primarily against the Federal Government—although a State itself might punish one uttering such language as having committed a crime against the State—it is highly appropriate that the Federal Government itself should enact a law for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, I feel quite sure that the Vermont prosecution was under a Federal statute.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was under an existing Federal statute, and a conviction was reached.

Mr. STERLING. Some two or three States have enacted laws in terms very similar, I understand, to this proposed law. Montana is one such State, and I think Idaho is another. I have heard of one other, but I do not now recall the State.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Supplemental to what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] have said, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] in regard to this matter. It will interest the Senator from Utah, I know, because he is in charge of the bill to forfeit the charter of the German-American Alliance. I call attention to an article appearing in the Post-Dispatch, of St. Louis, of date April 13, 1918, in which Charles H. Weinsberg, president of Missouri branch of the German-American Alliance, submits to an interview. He is quite loyal and bought a $1,000 liberty bond; but, in my judgment, Postmaster General Burleson ought to have excluded the whole issue of the Post-Dispatch containing that article from the mails of the United States. It is an article that preaches sedition; it is an article that predicts that the Hindenburg drive will break through the lines and go through to the coast, that the allied line will be broken, that Italy will be destroyed by the legions of Germany, and that this country will make the best peace it can, because Germany will have conquered all Europe, and we must get out of it the best way we can; that we are not in it in earnest anyway, except possibly to make as good a showing as we can, but that we shall make peace. This whole article is most seditious, and Mr. Burleson never saw it, and we never heard a word from him.

Mr. LODGE. What are the politics of the paper?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is independent, with Democratic proclivities.

Mr. LODGE. And has a large circulation?

Mr. SHERMAN. And has a large circulation in St. Louis and vicinity.

Mr. LODGE. That is not the sort of sedition they are after.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me?

Mr. SHERMAN. The face is almost seditious, Mr. President, if it could be transferred into the record.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is suspicious, to say the least.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has a pan-Germanic look.

Mr. KING. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts intended his last remark other than as playfully humorous, because, certainly, with the effort that has been made in good faith by the Post Office Department to exclude from the mails treasonable and disloyal publications, it can not be charged that it has failed in its duty. Indeed, if we are to believe the eminent Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the activities of the Post Office Department in its denial of the privileges of the mails to publications have been too rigorous; another criticism has been made by some that the Post Office Department has excluded from the mails publications with which no fault could be found. I know that the greatest caution is exercised by Judge Lamar and the legal advisers of the Postmaster General in Washington as to what shall be excluded from the mails. There can be no legitimate criticism of their actions. Frequently their decisions have been reviewed by the courts; but, as I am informed, the courts have uniformly supported them.

The Postmaster General acts only upon legal advice in excluding from the mails publications, literature, fraud orders, letters, and other objectionable matter, which the law clearly points out. His action is subject to review by the court; and under this bill no different power is conferred upon him than that granted in statutes enacted in years gone by. It would seem that if the newspaper to which the Senator alludes contains the statements referred to, that it ought to have been excluded from the mails. If it is only an interview appearing in a loyal American paper, a different question would arise. But even then the wisdom of publishing such an interview could be seriously questioned. I am informed that Dr. Weinsberg has been prosecuted for this interview. If he entertains and publishes the sentiments credited to him, he should be prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary. I have no doubt but what this newspaper, or any other newspaper, if they publish seditious matter, or anything which brings them within the condemnation of the statute, will be dealt with effectively by the Postmaster General as soon as his attention is called to them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the paper is owned by the same estate, by the same person, as the New York World; it is Mr. Pulitzer's paper, the St. Louis end of it. I am astonished that a paper of that prominence and with a managerial staff of that kind would permit an article of that character to appear. It directly tends to discourage enlistments and to cast doubts upon the justice of our cause by the soldiers that are now in the service. I can not think of a more damaging article that could appear in a camp than an article of that kind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I entirely agree with my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] as to the character of this article or interview. I think he and I agree as to the causes which have brought our country into this world conflict, and we agree that we must prosecute this war until Prussian autocracy is brought to its knees. This world of ours, big as it is, is not big enough for American democracy and Prussian autocracy. This war will continue until Prussian autocracy is destroyed. Our Nation is not safe until Prussian militarism is crushed. There can be no peace in the world until the mad ambitions of Germany are destroyed and until she and her people return to reason and submit to the laws of justice and righteousness. Our course is clear. There is only one path to follow, and that we must and will follow to the end, no matter the cost in blood and treasure. All that we have and all that we are we freely dedicate to the cause of liberty and justice. We will never lay down our arms until Germany is defeated and the cause which we represent is triumphant and our country's liberties made secure.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if I may trespass further on the good nature of the Senator from South Dakota, when a publication of that character escapes attention, although the vigilant scrutiny of the department gets the smallest and most inconsequential papers that falls under its ban, it creates in my mind a doubt about the wisdom of a law that will permit such a wide stretch of discretion as is contained in certain features of this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota permit me a word more?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Illinois will remember that in the United States to-day there are between 1,500 and 1,600 foreign-language newspapers. In addition, there are hundreds of papers published in the English language. It is impossible, with the limited resources at the command of the Postmaster General, to scrutinize with that care that perhaps the situation demands every issue of every paper as soon as it is deposited in the mails. The Senator will remember that in St. Louis there are a large number of newspapers. The Postmaster General is not there, and obviously there must be devolved upon subordinates the work of examination.

The Senator, therefore, must expect that now and then, indeed frequently, newspapers that ought to be excluded will get into the mails, one issue or perhaps two or three issues.

The Senator, I think, ought to credit to the Post Office Department a desire to do their duty; certainly this should be done until the contrary appears. It is quite likely, as stated, that some issues have been admitted to the mails that should have been excluded. It is better, perhaps, to err in this direction than to be too severe and to exclude publications wrongfully. It is a fact that at the present time very few complaints have been made that exclusions have been made that were improper, and very few complaints have been made, to my knowledge, that papers have been permitted to circulate that ought to have been excluded. I should like to ask the Senator does he know that this paper has not been excluded from the mails?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it has not been; the daily issues of it are still coming to Washington. I agree with all that the Senator has said, practically; but the Metropolitan Magazine, with which I have no sympathy whatever, because it is largely socialistic, and I have no sympathy with the tenor of its general course, although its circulation is comparatively small, and its influence compared with this newspaper is insignificant, was held up for some time, a whole issue at one time was suspended, as the Senator will remember.

It is not on many features of the pending conference report that I have criticism. As to those matters which relate to the uniform, to the flag, to the Army and the Navy, to the military and naval forces of the United States, to the form of government, and the Constitution of the United States I have no scruples whatever; I would protect them. The provisions of the bill about which I have scruples are those concerning which I have inquired of the Senator from South Dakota, which inquiries he has very candidly, as I think, and conscientiously, displaying his usual acumen, answered so that the purpose of my inquiries has been served, and he has enlightened me as to many things. But I wish to inquire further if the Senator from Utah will, with all due expedition, push his bill for the revocation of the charter of this concern? What I particularly object to is that the editor or the person who passes upon the admission of printed matter into the columns of the paper, knowing that Weinsberg was the president of the Missouri branch of the German-American Alliance, which I regard as a treasonable body in the United States, would permit a thing like that to happen and then be permitted to escape scot-free.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield further?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. KING. As to the inquiry of the Senator from Illinois, I am glad to state that the Judiciary Committee has reported favorably the bill for the revocation of the charter of the German-American National Alliance, and at the earliest possible moment I shall ask the attention of the Senate to the consideration of that bill, with a view to having it passed.

If I may trespass further upon the time of my friend from South Dakota, I should like to say, in connection with the observations just made by the Senator from Illinois, that in a number of States since the German-American Alliance voluntarily attempted to suspend—and of course Senators will realize that it can not do that, because it exists in virtue of a congressional charter, and a mere voluntary meeting of some of the members and agreeing to dissolve would not effectuate a dissolution of the organization; that could only be done by legislative declaration, or possibly by judicial decree, although I doubt that it could be thus dissolved—some of the subordinate organizations, State organizations, and some of the local organizations, have determined to continue their activities. In some few instances, I am told, local societies have changed their names with the idea of proceeding along the same lines under some other name.

In Pennsylvania the name of one of the local organizations was changed to some historical association or an association for the purpose of studying the relation of nations to each other. It would seem that there are a number of members of the parent or affiliated organizations who are determined to preserve the spirit of the old organization under a different form and a different name. I sincerely hope that the States and the loyal Americans of German birth and ancestry will see to it that no organization shall be permitted for the purpose of spreading Pan Germanism or waging a propaganda for the destruction of this Nation and the superimposition upon this country and the world of the policies, the tyranny, and the military despotism which find expression in the rule of the present German Kaiser. The German-American National Alliance should be dissolved. Its work in our Nation was distructive and disintegrating. It stood not for America and American ideals, but represented rather the spirit and kultur of modern Germany.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if I may be allowed to proceed, I sympathize quite thoroughly with the sentiment expressed, and implied, too, in the statement of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], and also with what has been said by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I have the honor of being a member of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee which has had under investigation the German-American National Alliance. You have but to take the charter and read the glowing purposes for which that association was organized under the terms of the charter, and then compare that with their deeds and their influence, to be convinced that it is an instrument of activities wholly prejudicial to our Government and to our institutions. Not one dollar has ever been spent in the furtherance of any one of the purposes set forth in the charter; that, I think, clearly appears from the testimony; but thousands, running into hundreds of thousands, of dollars have been collected for purposes wholly foreign to the interests of this country, and in many instances adverse to the interests of this country.

Just a word in conclusion, Mr. President. I simply rose in the first place to discuss the first section of this conference report and the connection of the first section with the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE]. I think perhaps the portion of the bill relating to the power of the Postmaster General over the mails has been already sufficiently discussed, and I shall not say anything further with regard to that; but, as I said a while ago, these offenses fall short of treason; they are just outside the line; a man guilty of them may not be prosecuted for levying war against the United States or adhering to their enemies and giving them aid and comfort, and yet they are highly prejudicial to the public welfare; as I said a while ago, they are in many instances as much so as overt acts of treason themselves.

The only question is, Shall such acts be permitted? I ask Senators to read the bill and ask themselves whether or not they ought to be permitted. If not, and that is the answer to the inquiry, then we should have the law in about the terms of the bill as it is here written to punish and prevent them.

Mr. President, the great value of the act will probably not lie so much in actual prosecutions under it, although there may be now and then a case, but it will be in the great deterrent effect it will have in preventing the commission of these offenses, thus bringing the Government of the United States in time of war or the Constitution of the United States or the Army and Navy of the United States into disrepute, when, indeed, we should be in our full vigor, with the morale and the physical and, I may say, mental strength of the Army at the maximum rather than to have either injured in any way whatever by utterances and publications such as this bill would prohibit.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the debate upon this conference report, but I desire to make a very brief statement with reference to it, in order that the RECORD may very clearly show the exact status of this report and the brief history of it since the 9th day of April, when I offered an amendment to this bill, which is now before us as the conference report.

On the 9th day of April, realizing that this was a most drastic measure—far more drastic, as has been shown by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] during the course of the debate, than the old sedition law—realizing that this was a far more drastic measure than that, I desired to see incorporated in the bill language which in a definite and specific way would assure the people of the country that this legislation was not intended to deprive them of those rights which are clearly guaranteed to them under the first amendment to the Constitution. Upon the 9th of April the Senate, after a sufficient discussion, for a prolonged discussion was unnecessary, rejected the amendment under discussion by a vote of 31 to 33. On the following day, however, after the Senate had been given an opportunity to consider the matter further, this amendment, numbered 6, was adopted by the Senate without a dissenting vote. The debate prior to its adoption was very brief, but during the course of that debate—if I may call the very brief discussion of this amendment a debate—the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] said:

> Mr. President, before the vote is taken I think it quite appropriate to say that the language of this amendment is substantially in accord with the provision of the constitutions of many States defining the liberty of speech and of the press. Similar provisions are found in the constitutions of Florida, Kansas, Nevada, South Dakota, West Virginia, Wyoming, Arkansas, California, Illinois, Michigan, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Utah, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. It is a principle of the American Constitution that is very generally recognized. I think it is very unfortunate that the Senate should have rejected the amendment as originally proposed.

The bill as amended was sent to a conference committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRANCE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is not in the Chamber. With the permission of the Senator from Maryland, I should like to say, and I think it is only fair to the Senator from Montana to say, that the Senator from Montana a day or two ago analyzed the provisions of this bill, having in mind the amendment tendered by the Senator from Maryland, and reached the conclusion that that amendment had no application to the provisions of this bill, and after mature consideration he reached the conclusion that it ought not to be a part of this measure.

Mr. FRANCE. I thank the Senator, and in reply I will say that I have no desire to place the Senator from Montana in a false light, and that I had intended to advert to that fact a little later in my very brief remarks.

The bill as amended was sent to the conference committee. Now, it is to be remembered that this bill as it came from the House of Representatives was a much more moderate bill than it was after it had been amended and after it had passed the Senate. In other words, no man reading this bill as it passed the House and comparing the bill as it passed the House with the bill as it passed the Senate could come to any other conclusion than that when this bill was sent to conference the House of Representatives, through its conferees, would naturally insist upon the elimination of some of the more drastic amendments which had been added in the Senate. It was to be presumed that upon a measure of this importance there would be a prolonged conference and that the conferees of the House would insist upon the elimination of some of the amendments added in the Senate. But what happened? Not only did the conferees appointed on the part of the House not insist upon the elimination of some of the drastic amendments added in the Senate, but apparently they insisted upon the elimination of the only moderating amendment which had been added in the Senate.

I wish the RECORD to show that the Senate rejected this amendment; that it then unanimously adopted it; and then, through its conferees, it receded from the amendment, and that now the Senate is about to adopt the conference report with this amendment omitted from it.

The Senator from Montana did say, on the 2d day of May, that he would not vote against this conference report, and he gave his reasons, among which was the reason which has been advanced by a number of others, that this amendment was not at all material to the bill; that it did not affect the bill one way or the other, an opinion, however, which is quite contrary to the opinion of the Department of Justice, and the opinion which was the controlling factor, without doubt, which led to the elimination of this amendment from the bill.

I think it would be very unfortunate, after the adoption of this amendment, whether it was material in the first place or not, if the Senate should now go on record as being against preserving the right of the American people to "speak what is true, with good motives and for justifiable ends." Not only would it be unfortunate if the Senate should be placed in such a position, but I think the effect of such action would be most unfortunate so far as the prosecution of the war is concerned; and in giving my reasons for that I desire to quote what was quoted on April 19 of last year by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in a masterly address on this subject on the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press. I desire to quote it, because I think it is pertinent in this connection, for it indicates very clearly one reason why I feel that the adoption of this conference report with this amendment eliminated would be most unfortunate as far as the prosecution of the war is concerned:

Sir James McIntosh, in the Peltier case, observed as follows:

"To inform the public on the conduct of those who administer public affairs requires courage and conscious security. It is always an invidious and obnoxious office, but it is often the most necessary of all public duties. If it is not done boldly, it can not be done effectually, and it is not from writers trembling under the uplifted scourge that we are to hope for it."

There seems to be a very great misunderstanding on the part of some of the learned Senators, particularly those learned in the law, as to the meaning of this amendment. They have insisted on discussing the subject of motive apart from the subject of the truth, which, of course, results in a failure to grasp the meaning of this amendment, which, to be properly understood must be taken as a whole. In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the meaning of this amendment, I desire to quote this language of Chief Justice Story, language which he uses with reference to the first amendment of the Constitution, which explains clearly this amendment, and, indeed, you will note that the language of my amendment was borrowed from this statement of the Chief Justice:

It is plain, then, that the language of this amendment imports no more than that every man shall have a right to speak, write, and print his opinions upon any subject whatsoever, without any prior restraint, so always that he does not injure any other person in his rights, person, property, or reputation; and so always that he does not thereby disturb the public peace, or attempt to subvert the Government. It is neither more nor less than an expansion of the great doctrine recently brought into operation in the law of libel, that every man shall be at liberty to publish what is true, with good motives, and for justifiable ends. And with this reasonable limitation it is not only right in itself, but it is an inestimable privilege in a free government. Without such a limitation it might become the scourge of the Republic, first denouncing the principles of liberty, and then, by rendering the most virtuous patriots odious through the terrors of the press, introducing despotism in its worst form.

Referring, of course, to the freedom-of-speech section of the first amendment to the Constitution.

He goes on to say:

A little attention to the history of other countries in other ages will teach us the vast importance of this right. It is notorious that even to this day in some foreign countries it is a crime to speak on any subject, religious, philosophical, or political, what is contrary to the received opinions of the Government or the institutions of the country, however laudable may be the design and however virtuous may be the motive.

Mr. President, I had not expected to occupy even this much time, but I desire to say just this word further:

We have fallen into the habit of using this sort of logic in the Congress: "We are at war. We all wish to win the war. This measure will help win the war. Therefore we must adopt this measure"; and the corollary: That any man who is not in favor of this measure is against winning the war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FRANCE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator has just quoted from Judge Story with respect to the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech. Would it be displeasing to the Senator for me at this point to call his attention to another statement of Judge Story in the second volume of his work on constitutional law?

Mr. FRANCE. Not at all. I shall be pleased to have it added to the RECORD.

Mr. KING. Judge Story uses this language:

There is a good deal of loose reasoning on the subject of the liberty of the press, as if its inviolability were constitutionally such that, like the King of England, it could do no wrong and was free from every inquiry and afforded a perfect sanctuary for every abuse; that, in short, it implied a despotic sovereignty to do every sort of wrong without the slightest accountability to private or public justice. Such a notion is too extravagant to be held by any sound constitutional lawyer—

And, I may say in parenthesis, by any good, loyal American citizen.

Such a notion is too extravagant to be held by any sound constitutional lawyer with regard to the rights and duties belonging to governments generally or to the State governments in particular. If it were admitted to be correct, it might be justly affirmed that the liberty of the press was incompatible with the permanent existence of any free government. * * * In short, is it contended that the liberty of the press is so much more valuable than all other rights in society that the public safety—nay, the existence of the Government itself—is to yield to it? It would be difficult to answer these questions in favor of the liberty of the press without at the same time declaring that such a license belonged, and could only belong, to a despotism, and was utterly incompatible with the principles of a free government.

I thank the Senator for permitting me to put that into the RECORD.

Mr. FRANCE. I thank the Senator from Utah; and I will say in reply that I am familiar with that language, which is merely an extension of what I read. I should have been very glad to have read the more extended quotation, but it was not necessary for my purpose. That was the position occupied by the Chief Justice; and, taking that very position, he also took the position that this right must be preserved—the right of every citizen to "publish or speak what is true, from good motives and for justifiable ends." That is what the Chief Justice insisted upon in connection with the very language quoted by the Senator from Utah.

I shall not go into the subject of the constitutionality of this measure.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FRANCE. With pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. Inasmuch as the Senator from Maryland is the author of this clause that has been so much discussed, I I should like to ask him if he will kindly give the Senate a concrete case in which one who is entitled to do so would be embarrassed in making a just defense with this language not in the act.

Mr. FRANCE. It would give me pleasure to do so. I do not care, however, to do so with any degree of explicitness, for reasons which I need not go into now. I will say, however, that if an editorial which was read the other day from the New York Times—which to my mind clearly indicated possible misconduct on the part of certain officials of this Government, and which closed with the statement to the effect that if these suspicions were justified these men should be dealt with criminally—if that editorial had gone further, and had mentioned the names of these gentlemen, I do not believe that the writer of it could have claimed exemption from the operation of this law, if under this proposed law he had been subjected to prosecution.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the instance the Senator has in mind, I should like to inquire of him under what particular provision of this bill the editor of the New York Times stands in any peril?

Mr. FRANCE. I did not care to go into this subject any more fully, because specific instances——

Mr. WALSH. Of course, these are very practical questions that we are dealing with.

Mr. FRANCE. This is a very practical question; but the Senator is well aware that I do not care to bring to the bar of the Senate any paper or any official at this time; and, for that reason, it is unfair for me to enter into any extended discussion of any particular case. The Senator from Montana will realize the justice of that.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator referred to the editorial appearing in the New York Times——

Mr. FRANCE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. A very proper criticism, it seems to me, of some of the officers of the Government connected with the prosecution of the war; but, as I asked a moment ago, under what provision of the bill does the editor of that paper stand in any peril?

Mr. FRANCE. I will read the language to the Senator, eliminating what is not relevant:

> Whoever * * * shall * * * * publish * * * abusive language about the * * * military * * * forces of the United States.

It seems to me that it is somewhat abusive, to say the least, to indicate that certain members of the military forces—if that is a fair interpretation of the editorial—should be subjected to criminal prosecution for their acts.

Mr. WALSH. Why, Mr. President, that idea could be expressed in the most refined and unexceptionable language. There is no fault to be found with the language in which it is charged.

Mr. FRANCE. I am not saying that in my judgment there has been any abusive language.

Mr. WALSH. I was going to say, if it were abusive, it would not be permitted to be read here in the Senate. There was nothing abusive about the language, however severe it may have been.

Mr. FRANCE. I have the very highest regard for the legal opinion of the Senator from Montana and I had not expected to occupy so much time. I realize that opinions may well differ with reference to particular phraseology. I was about to say that I do not care to go into any constitutional discussion of this subject. I think it is very clear, however, that under the Constitution of the United States the States did not delegate to the Federal Government the right to pass laws limiting the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press. Upon this both Hamilton and Jefferson, who rarely agreed, were in complete agreement.

At a time like this, Mr. President, we are in grave danger of forgetting that we are not a sovereign Senate. We are a Senate representing sovereign States and those States are nothing but the creation of a sovereign people. Such legislation as this, to my mind, can only be possible when that great truth has been forgotten. Our sovereigns lie out yonder, and it is their sovereign will, as voiced by them, which we must express in legislation, by such legislation giving direction to executive action. Neither the legislative nor the executive departments of this Government are sovereign, but the sovereigns whose will we are here expressing in legislation are the people of the United States.

I hesitate to pass any legislation by which we would place a rough hand upon that sovereign people and say to them, "Be still. This is the Senate's war; this is the Executive's war. This is a Washington war." Senators, what a fallacy! This proposed legislation arises from a total misconception of the very nature of modern war, a misconception which in my opinion has been responsible for many of the mistakes which have been made.

War is no longer a matter of armies, it is a matter of whole nations, and we can not win this war with one, two, three, or four million men in France. We can only win it by calling into the combat all the great resources of the American people. We can only win it by a great organized and united Nation. I am opposed to this legislation, because I believe it makes not for unity but for disorganization and for disintegration.

I wish to refer briefly to the history of the old sedition law of 1798 and to quote the words of Hamilton, which completely express my views upon the pending legislation. Hamilton no sooner saw the sedition law which had been introduced into Congress than he wrote:

> Let us not establish tyranny. Energy is a very different thing from violence. If we make no false step, we shall be essentially united, but if we push things to extremes we shall then give to faction body and solidity.

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate to trace all of the disintegrating influences which followed the enactment of the old alien and sedition law; to tell you how it then almost resulted in the dissolution of the Republic and how, because of the enactment of that law, there was born that doctrine of nullification and secession which so many years later almost destroyed the Union. It was the opposition of Thomas Jefferson to that law which led to the first sowing of the seeds of the pernicious doctrine that the States could nullify the action of the Federal Government. It is important, however, to remember that the old sedition law was much less drastic than the law which we are now enacting for Bayard in the House of Representatives proposed an amendment, which was adopted, allowing the truth to be offered in evidence. My dear friend, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], for whose motives I have the highest regard, one of the men who did not hesitate to offer his breast to the enemy when the perpetuity of the Union was threatened, has said that the evil of sedition exists and that we must find a remedy.

Physicians know that there is a remedy for every ill, but they must constantly decide the problem as to whether the application of that remedy will improve the condition of the patient, or whether the remedy will be worse than the disease. This proposed remedy, I believe, Mr. President, would do harm, for it is intended to eliminate certain evils, while it would indeed extirpate, at the same time, the necessary function of free discussion by word of mouth and by the press, which is so indispensable at this time.

In this connection I desire to read a statement of Franklin:

> Freedom of speech is a principal pillar of a free government; when this support is taken away, the constitution of a free society is dissolved and tyranny is erected on its ruins. Republics and limited monarchies derive their strength and vigor from a popular examination into the action of the magistrates; this privilege in all ages has been and always will be abused. The best of men could not escape the censure and envy of the times they lived in. Yet this evil is not so great as it might appear at first sight. A magistrate who sincerely aims at the good of society will always have the inclinations of a great majority on his side, and an impartial posterity will not fail to render him justice. Those abuses of the freedom of speech are the excesses of liberty. They ought to be repressed—

This is the point—these abuses ought to be repressed—

> but to whom dare we commit the care of doing it? An evil magistrate, entrusted with power to punish for words, would be armed with a weapon the most destructive and terrible. Under pretense of pruning off the exuberant branches he would be apt to destroy the tree. (Franklin, Works by Sparks, Vol. II, p. 285.)

Mr. President, on my files dealing with this subject I have a valued quotation from the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], for whose opinion I entertain a very high regard. He said on April 18 of last year:

> It is only in time of war that these great constitutional limitations upon despotism are put to the test. It is precisely then that they are useful. They have no particular moment in times of quiet, when the minds of men are diverted to the pursuits of peace, when prosperity and happiness smile over the land. It is only on occasions like this when they become effective and their value is priceless. Consequently it is at such times that we must see to it that they are preserved, lest when peace does return we shall realize that some of the most important safeguards of liberty have been swept away in the torrent of the conflict.

Mr. President, I think the issue is clear. I think it is perfectly clear that he who votes for this measure as altered at the behest and under the direction, as it seems to me, of Mr. John Lord O'Brian, of the Department of Justice, every man who votes for this conference report, in my judgment, votes for it because he has come to the conclusion, after careful deliberation, that at this time of national peril it is not safe to allow the American people to "speak what is true from good motives and for justifiable ends." I do not set my judgment against theirs, but I do desire to say for myself that I do not think that the voice of the people, of the sovereign people of this Republic, should be silenced at this time when the winning of the war depends not upon Congress, not upon the Executive, not upon Washington, but upon the masses of the sovereign people all over the Republic. I am thankful that I do not entertain such an opinion of that sovereign people that I dare in this hour to cast my vote to deprive them of that inalienable right to "speak the truth from good motives and for justifiable ends."

If the great party of Thomas Jefferson desires to place itself upon record as denying the people their inalienable right to speak "what is true for good motives and for justifiable ends," then they will adopt this conference report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, every Senator who votes against this conference report can have the satisfaction of knowing that he has voted for an amendment that will throw a cloak of protection around every spy in this country and every traitor and every Bolshevik and every I. W. W. that is denied to a loyal American citizen.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does the Senator really want to go upon record in that way?

Mr. OVERMAN. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not need to enlarge upon it. I presume the Senator does not desire to be understood, as he said to the Senate, that every man who votes against the conference report might go to his constituents and say he is proud that he has thrown a cloak of protection around German spies. I will say to the Senator in all friendliness——

Mr. OVERMAN. I will strike out the word "proud," as I mean no disrespect to any Senator or intent to impeach in any way his patriotism. I say any Senator who votes for that will be heard to admit that he has voted for an amendment to a criminal statute that does not appear in any other criminal statute in the world and which gives the defense to a disloyal citizen that we heretofore in all our criminal statutes have never given to a loyal citizen. Does anyone deny that? Is not that the truth?

Mr. FRANCE and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. There is no Senator on the floor whose purposes at this time more nearly coincide with mine than the Senator from North Carolina. We are looking at this thing merely from different angles.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not criticizing any Senator's loyalty, or that any Senator has not as much loyalty as I have myself. I credit that to every Senator on this floor, but I ask the Senator if there is any criminal statute in the world that has ever been enacted containing such an amendment as this? Can he cite me one? Can the Senator cite me, and I will ask the Senator from New York——

Mr. FRANCE. I can cite the Senator to a clause——

Mr. OVERMAN. Can the Senator cite me to any criminal statute of the United States that has this provision?

Mr. FRANCE. I can cite the Senator, of course, to the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, as I said before, has been interpreted by Chief Justice Story as embodying the principles of this amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not yield to the Senator for a speech.

Mr. FRANCE. It has guaranteed this very thing.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask again any Senator on this floor to cite me to a single criminal statute that has any such amendment as this. I will ask any Senator here if this is not a fact that this amendment does not give a defense never given in addition to the usual provisions expressed in a statute as to criminal intent?

Mr. FRANCE. I will say in answer to the Senator that I do not believe there has been enacted in any country since the dark ages any criminal statute so framed as to make such an amendment necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that may be so in the Senator's opinion, and I am not criticizing him or any other Senator, but I say this, and I repeat it, that there is no criminal statute that was ever passed that has any such provision in it, and it is giving an additional burden to the Government that ought not to be given, and it is requiring proof that is not required in any other criminal statute in the world. Therefore I say the Senator may not be proud to do it, but he will have to admit that I am correct. I take back the word "proud" and say he will have to say that if he voted for such an amendment it gives a cloak to disloyal people never given in any other criminal statute.

What is this statute for? It is a criminal statute. It is a statute that we have been trying to pass here for the benefit of the Army and to preserve our country. We have been trying to pass it for 12 long months, and we have had to fight it out in the Senate for weeks and weeks. It went to the House of Representatives and comes back here and then goes into conference, and here we have the same old fight again. There is delay, delay, delay, and the war is going on and the Kaiser at work in this country with his pernicious propaganda.

Let us look at the history of this amendment. When the Senator introduced it in the Senate it was defeated in the Committee of the Whole by a good majority on a roll call. Then the Senator introduced it in the Senate. I let it go in. It went to conference and was stricken out.

Why do you want to put an additional provision in here to throw additional burdens on the prosecuting officer of the Government and give a new defense to all these men as to motives who are indicted, these German spies, the Bolsheviki, and these I. W. W.'s? Why do you not let us have the same criminal statutes we have for everybody else?

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has made one of the most lucid arguments that have been made in the Senate on the subject. He showed clearly that nobody has been able to contend against him as to his argument that if this amendment is included in the bill it will work harm. I want to reinforce his argument by an additional letter sent here by the Attorney General. The Senator from Colorado made a great argument, and I want to reinforce that argument by putting in the RECORD the argument of the Attorney General on this subject. He gives concrete cases to show the harm it will work and how difficult it will be to convict these men. This criminal statute is for the purpose of convicting guilty men, not innocent men. No loyal citizen can be convicted under it, and under the amendment it is believed by many that guilty men will escape. Therefore there is no reason for putting such an amendment in the statute.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] just now said that outside of the Dark Ages there could not be found such a statute as this. I should like to put into the RECORD, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina, the statute which was passed in Canada dealing with this question and cognate ones, and the statute in England is very much the same:

Whereas the ultimate constitutional authority the people of Canada have determined that the present war in which Canada with Great Britain and her allies is engaged is a just war and entered upon for just cause and from the highest motives, and on that should be prosecuted without faltering to a conclusion which shall insure the attainment of the purposes for which it was so entered upon; and

Whereas the mind of the entire people should be centered upon the proper carrying out in the most effective manner of that final decision, and that all questioning in the press or otherwise of the causes of that war, the motives of Canada, Great Britain, or the allies in entering upon and carrying on the same, and the policies by them adopted for its prosecution, must necessarily divert attention from the one great object on which it should be so centered, and tend to defeat or impede the effective carrying out of that decision; and

Whereas the day for consideration and discussion has passed, and the day for united action in execution of an unchangeable decision has come, and it is therefore necessary to remove every obstacle and hindrance to such united action; and

Whereas it is desirable to prohibit the publication of secret and confidential information as hereinafter set forth:

Therefore His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the minister of justice, under and in virtue of the powers conferred upon the governor in council by the war-measures act, 1914, is pleased to order and enact an order and regulation, and the same is hereby ordered and enacted in the terms following, to wit:

ORDER AND REGULATION.

1. It shall be an offense—

(a) To print, publish, or publicly express any adverse or unfavorable statement, report, or opinion concerning the causes of the present war or the motives or purposes for which Canada or the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or any of the allied nations entered upon or prosecutes the same, which may tend to arouse hostile feeling, create unrest, or unsettle or inflame public opinion.

(b) To print, publish, or publicly express any adverse or unfavorable statement, report, or opinion concerning the action of Canada, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any allied nation in prosecuting the war.

(c) To print or give public expression or circulation to any false statement or report respecting the work or activities of any department, branch, or officer of the public service or the service or activities of Canada's military or naval forces which may tend to inflame public opinion and thereby hamper the Government of Canada or prejudicially affect its military or naval forces in the prosecution of the war.

(d) To print, publish, or publicly express any statement, report, or opinion which may tend to weaken or in any way detract from the united effort of the people of Canada in the prosecution of the war.

(e) To print, publish, or publicly express any report of or to purport to describe or to refer to the proceedings at any secret session of the House of Commons or Senate held in pursuance of a resolution passed by the said House or Senate, except such report thereof as may be officially communicated through the Director of Public Information.

(f) Without lawful authority, to publish the contents of any confidential document belonging to, or any confidential information obtained from, any Government department or any person in the service of His Majesty.

2. Any person found guilty of an offense hereunder shall, upon summary conviction, be liable to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than five years, or to both fine and imprisonment.

The Senator will see this goes much further in many respects than the measure which is now under consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, Mr. President, much further. I do not impugn the loyalty of any Senator, because I think every Senator on this floor is as loyal and as true to his country as I am. I am saying, as an argument, that if this bill contains the France amendment it will be the only criminal statute in the world that has such a provision in it. I say that without fear of contradiction; and I say you are putting this amendment upon a statute that is intended only to catch spies and I. W. W.'s and disloyal citizens in this country, and if we do not put it on other criminal statutes referring to our entire citizenship, why should we put it on a statute which applies only to disloyal citizens? That is the argument I make, and I think it is a just argument, because you can not dispute the fact.

Now, as to the other amendment that was agreed to in conference, known as section 4, it is not in disagreement. Of course, Senators may differ about that matter. I want to say to the Senate that we discussed it over and over again on another occasion, not at the time the amendment was adopted, and it was adopted by the Senate by a large majority. Some Senators I know were not present, but that was not my fault. We had a time limit to vote and it was put on the bill.

We have to trust somebody, Senators, to administer the law. There has been too much of a tendency here in the Senate to oppose good measures on account of men. Is not that true? Senators have stood here and fought excellent measures because of the men who had to administer them. We have to trust somebody. That is not the way Senators should consider a great measure which is to be passed for the benefit of the citizens of this entire country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator let me ask him this question? Are the amendments on page 2 and page 3 in the same language that the Senate passed, or have they been changed?

Mr. OVERMAN. In what line?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On line 18, page 2.

Mr. OVERMAN. The conferees did not change anything material except as to the France amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And everything else is in the same language the Senate adopted?

Mr. OVERMAN. Exactly the same language, except that it must be limited to the war. We agreed that this statute should be limited to the war. That is the only material change which was made in conference—striking out the France amendment. All the other amendments are as they were passed by the Senate, except that we left out the word "contemptuous" and we put in the word "willfully"; that not only must it be done with an intent, but it must be willfully done. That was suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. Those were the only changes in the conference report, except some words which were not material.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, we made one other small change in line 16. We struck out the word "discourage."

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. It occurs in two places. We struck out the word "discourage" in both cases, so that it reads "obstruct or willfully attempt to obstruct."

Mr. OVERMAN. I said that there was no material change except limiting it to the time of the war and striking out the France amendment. I said that there had been some changes in language. We left out the word "contemptuous," as the House objected to those words.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That lessened, instead of increased, the force of the Senate bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the insertion in section 4, "when the United States is at war," lessened the time of the duration of the proposed statute rather than increased it?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; as it passed the Senate the fourth section, giving the Postmaster General this power, was general, and we thought it ought to be confined simply to the war. That was the only material change in it. The Senate had passed it making it absolutely a general power.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the conferees accepted it, provided that it were limited to the duration of the war?

Mr. OVERMAN. Provided it were limited to the war?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the conferees of the House also agreed to strike out the word "discourage," which was put into the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So that the only thing on which the Senate yielded that increased the vigor of the bill is amendment numbered 6 on page 3?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the question now is whether we are willing to leave out amendment numbered 6, on page 3, as applied really to amendment numbered 5, on pages 2 and 3?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all. That is the question now as to the adoption of the report.

Mr. President, I understand that some Senator—I think the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]—desires to make a motion to send the report back to conference with instructions to leave out section 4, which I hope will not be done. The whole argument here has ranged around that; that question has been argued here for months. I am not going further into the argument, except to say that I have a mass of literature before me—and if I had more time I should like to put some of it in the RECORD—showing that there is a German propaganda going on in this country through religious societies. I have seen letters in which it is stated they are trying to employ what are called colporteurs to distribute what they term religious tracts and quotations from the Bible among the employees in all our manufacturing institutions, telling them it is wrong to make munitions, and sending out literature of every kind and character. I wish I could put this matter in the RECORD, but there is too much of it, and I am not going to consume any more time of the Senate.

I hope the Senate will vote down the motion, if it is made, to recommit the report with instructions, and I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it would not be in order for us to vote to refer the report back with instructions as to something which we had ourselves adopted?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think so, but I am willing to have the Senate act.

Now, Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary read the letter addressed to me from the Department of Justice. I wish I could also have the memorandum attached thereto read, but it is somewhat long, and I will ask that it be put into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none. If the Senator from North Carolina in charge of the bill will allow the Chair to inquire, does the Senator ask to have the letter to which he refers read or merely to be put in the RECORD?

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the letter be read, and that the memorandum be inserted into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1918.

Senator LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR OVERMAN: Judging from the debate in the Senate yesterday the purport of the letter addressed to Mr. WEBB on April 16 does not seem to have been clear. This is the situation:

As already pointed out, the greatest danger to the country, internally, to-day is the use of different sorts of seditious propaganda, particularly the false pacifist propaganda. As section 3 now stands, without the proviso as to good motives and justifiable ends, the accused when brought to trial already has surrounding him all the protection afforded by the Constitution of the United States guaranteeing the right of free speech, etc. Further, to secure his conviction the Government must prove that he did willfully the act complained of, and it is also necessary, as the courts have invariably pointed out to the juries, for the jury to be satisfied that the acts were done or the utterances made with intent to obstruct enlistment or to cause insubordination, etc. About 250 defendants have either plead guilty or have been convicted by juries under this section. There has been no general complaint that the law has not been impartially administered or that individual liberties have been improperly interfered with.

It is quite unnecessary to say that the Department of Justice, even in war time, believes that the fullest measure of constitutional protection should be given to every defendant. That is already accomplished without the addition of the proposed proviso. In this connection I respectfully call your attention to the opinion recently expressed by ex-President William H. Taft, who has been recently quoted in the newspapers as stating:

"The statutes should never require proof that the uttering of disloyal sentiment is with the intent to stop the draft or to accomplish some other treasonable purpose. This is often difficult to show, and when it can be shown the crime should be regarded as of a higher order and should have severe punishment. The ground for penalizing such words without regard to the intention of the speaker is that they have one or two pernicious tendencies; they either stir those who hear to violence, and so produce a breach of the peace, or they influence others to share in the sentiment, and thus retard support of the war."

A few days ago one Clarence H. Waldron, convicted at Burlington, Vt., under section 3, was sentenced to serve a term of 15 years for attempts to cause insubordination in the military forces, etc. In his charge to the jury in this case United States District Judge Howe used the following language:

"The Government's evidence tends to show that the defendant intended to cause insubordination, disloyalty, and refusal of duty in the military forces of the United States; the defendant's evidence tends to show that the only intention which he had was to serve God.

"You should be careful not to mix motive with intent. Motive is that which leads to the act; intent qualifies it. A crime may be committed with a good motive, it may be committed with an evil motive, or it may be committed with a good and an evil motive. To illustrate: The father of a large family steals bread for his starving children and also to deprive the owner of its value. He has two motives; one is good and one is evil; but he is guilty, notwithstanding he has a good motive as well as an evil motive, for he must not steal at all. So in this case the defendant's intention to serve God does not excuse him, if you find that he also intended to cause insubordination, disloyalty, or refusal of duty."

This is an accurate statement of the law; but if at the time of this trial the proviso as to good motives, justifiable ends, etc., had been written in at the end of the statute, the court could not properly have made the statement of the law above set forth.

As a lawyer, you will readily understand what a cloud of confusing legal technicalities can be stirred up by introducing collateral questions as to what are justifiable ends, the personal motives of the defendant, etc., especially in cases where the real issue should be the question whether the defendant has willfully crippled his country in war time.

The position of this department is this: This section is effective only during the period of war. For nearly a year the original section 3 has existed without the proviso, and no wrong has been done under it. There is no necessity now for inserting such a proviso. Without it the defendant will have the full measure of protection guaranteed him by the Constitution, and the Government will be, as now, required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt both intent and willful action. To insert such a proviso in the statute will place an additional and unnecessary burden on the prosecution which will seriously hamper the prosecution of the most dangerous forms of German propaganda. This is not a statement of opinion, but a statement of fact based on the actual experience of the past year.

Respectfully,

JOHN LORD O'BRIAN,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General for War Work
(For the Attorney General).

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 25, 1918.

MEMORANDUM ON PENDING AMENDMENT OF ESPIONAGE ACT.

In the pending bill to amend section 3, Title I of the espionage act, a clause was inserted in the Senate reading:

"Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motives and for justifiable ends."

At the suggestion of this department said clause was eliminated by the conference committee, and the pending discussion in the Senate relates to that clause.

This clause might be interpreted as governing all cases under section 3, whether arising under the section as originally enacted or as amended by the new act. At the very least it would govern cases brought for attempting to obstruct or discourage the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, which will be the provision under which most cases against propaganda will be brought.

The said clause relating to motives and justifiable ends will, as a practical matter, make the espionage act either entirely useless or materially decrease its usefulness as a weapon against pro-German or antiwar propaganda.

Most of the amendments inserted in the bill in the Senate do not concern that which may be properly termed "propaganda." They are concerned with disloyal, contemptuous, etc., language about the form of government or the flag or the uniform. These disloyal remarks or outbursts, against which these amendments are mainly directed, have seldom any effectiveness as propaganda. In fact, the debate in the Senate showed that these provisions were treated as police provisions made necessary because the disloyal remarks of the type indicated in the bill, instead of causing disloyalty, tend to cause a passionate loyalty which expresses itself in outrages and disorders. Consequently in dealing with these disloyal remarks which are brought within the scope of the espionage act by these amendments we are not dealing with propaganda; that is, effective propaganda which obstructs the prosecution of the war by obstructing the participation of the citizens in military service or other form of war service.

The dangerous propaganda seldom takes the shape of open and frank abuse of the United States or praise of Germany. It practically never takes the shape of advocacy of the cause of Germany or opposition to the cause of the United States in the war. It is seldom if ever possible to prove a German source of propaganda; that is, to prove that the financing of it or the instigation of it has a German source. On its face the propaganda generally shows a motive other than opposition to the cause of the United States in the war or the promotion of the cause of Germany; and it is seldom if ever possible to prove that there is a concealed motive to promote the cause of Germany. Despite its defects the espionage act has proved a fairly effective weapon against propaganda and if amended as suggested by this department there is every reason to believe that it will prove an exceedingly effective weapon against propaganda. Its effectiveness, however, for this purpose has come and must necessarily come from the principle that the motive prompting the propaganda is irrelevant and that the criminal nature of the propaganda is dependent either upon the intent of it or upon the natural or necessary effects of it. To make the question of motive relevant, as the said clause proposes, would be introducing an element which would enormously increase the difficulty of successful prosecution and enormously decrease the value of the espionage act as a deterrent of propaganda. Let me illustrate this by referring briefly to four or five of the current types of dangerous and effective propaganda.

One of these types may be classed as religious or Christian pacifism; that is, opposition to participation in the war on the ground that such participation is opposed to the tenets of Christianity and the word of God. As we know from authoritative information, it was this type of propaganda which was extensively effective in the weakening of the Italian Army which caused the great Italian retreat. It would, if permitted to spread, tend to weaken the fighting effectiveness of any nation. On its face this type of propaganda has the highest possible motive, namely the purely religious motive, and that is often the real motive. Even where not the real motive, any other motive would be generally impossible to prove. The statements made in this propaganda consist generally of quotations from the Bible and interpretations thereof, so that the statements of fact therein contained are generally true or at least can not be shown to be untrue. Convictions against this type of propaganda are only possible where the motive is irrelevant and the intent of the propaganda or the natural effect of the propaganda is the determining factor. Another class of effective propaganda, by which I mean propaganda which has an effectiveness in diminishing the fighting force of the Nation and contains the dangers of actually disintegrating the fighting force of the Nation, is that which is engaged in promoting the proletariat revolution. Its cardinal principle is that hostility between nations is due to commercial and capitalistic rivalry; that the real hostility is between the proletariat of all nations and the capitalists of all nations. We know that this type of propaganda has had serious results in weakening the fighting effectiveness of Russia. It contains few assertions of facts, at any rate; assertions of facts can easily be avoided without reducing the effectiveness of the propaganda. On its face its motive is not treasonable; that is, on its face its motive is not to assist the enemy. Where a treasonable motive exists, this motive is concealed and seldom discoverable. To introduce the element of motive is to render the statute practically useless against this type of propaganda.

Another type analogous to the previous type is that which promotes the theory that international socialism is opposed in principle to this war. The promotion of international socialism can not, when representing genuine convictions, be attributed to bad motives. It represents one theory as to the best way of promoting human happiness, and the promotion of human happiness is a good motive. Yet this propaganda sometimes takes a shape which might have great effectiveness in obstructing war preparation and the conduct of the war.

Another type is that which is engaged in the promotion of greater equality of treatment of the negro, and proclaims that the requirement of military service on the part of the negro entitles him to be free from lynchings and various social and political discriminations. The statements of fact used in this propaganda are frequently true. The promotion of better conditions for the negro often is and may be based upon good motives; yet this propaganda often shows the intent and more often shows the tendency or natural effect of obstructing the war.

Many other types of dangerous or effective propaganda based on good motives, or at least where proof of disloyal motive is practically never available could be added. In short, the well-known distinction in criminal law between motive and intent is a distinction upon which the effectiveness of the espionage act as a weapon against dangerous antiwar propaganda largely depends.

To make the question of motive relevant in these cases, as would be done if the said clause were retained, would most seriously impair, if not totally destroy, the effectiveness of the espionage act against those types of propaganda which are really the most dangerous or effective types.

The recent trial in the district of Vermont of Clarance H. Waldron may furnish an illustration. The charge of the court in that case has been incorporated in Bulletin No. 79 of the Interpretation of War Statutes, a copy of which is hereto attached. On page 6 it will be noted that the court told the jury to be careful and not mix motive with intent, as a crime may be committed with a good motive. If the proposed clause were inserted in the bill not only would the court have been forced to omit all reference to this well-known distinction between motive and intent, but, on the contrary, would have felt it necessary to inform the jury that it could take the motive of the defendant into account and would have to acquit him if it felt that the utterances made by him had been made with a good motive.

The prevalence in the country of certain kinds of disloyal expressions bearing some analogy to the old types of libel of the Government has quite naturally caused the Senate to insert a clause taken from the history of the law of libel. This clause has no appropriate place, however, in a statute or part of a statute dealing with modern war propaganda. If it is to be retained in the act at all, it should be most carefully limited to those portions of the act which are analogous to the law of libel, as, for instance, those provisions directed against disloyal or abusive language about the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States or the military forces of the United States, etc.

All question of motive should be most carefully excluded from those provisions of the statute under which the more subtle, dangerous, and effective types of antiwar propaganda will have to be fought.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire also to put in the RECORD another memorandum which has been sent to me by the Attorney General, showing how the France amendment would impose such a burden on him that he doubts whether in many cases he could convict guilty men if the amendment is left in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO SECTION 3, TITLE I, OF THE ESPIONAGE LAW.

The opinion of the Military Intelligence Branch is entirely adverse to the amendment to the espionage law to the effect that section 3, Title I, shall not apply to those who utter, "what is true, with good motives and for justifiable ends."

Experience teaches that such an amendment would to a large degree nullify the value of the law and turn every trial into an academic debate on insoluble riddles as to what is true. Human motives are too complicated to be discussed, and the word "justifiable" is too elastic for practical use.

There could hardly be less harm in a law saying that a soldier shall not be punished for disobedience, provided he bases his refusal to serve on grounds that are true and justifiable, and proves that his motives are pure. Our soldiers temporarily surrender their liberties of thought and speech and action in order that they may save them for the future. The whole Nation must subject itself to discipline until after the war. Otherwise in defending liberties in detail, we may lose liberty altogether.

In every division camp there are so-called "conscientious objectors" who refuse to do any military duty whatsoever. They endeavor to spread their policy throughout the camps. They are stimulated by numerous publishers and orators. The Intelligence Service has in its files great quantities of books, periodicals, circulars, and letters intercepted and confiscated. The truth of these documents depends on the point of view of the reader. The motives alleged are the highest, and yet their unrestricted dissemination could only serve to stir men up to mutiny and tend to disintegrate our entire Army.

One of the most dangerous examples of this sort of propaganda is the book called "The Finished Mystery," a work written in extremely religious language and distributed in enormous numbers. The only effect of it is to lead soldiers to discredit our cause and to inspire a feeling at home of resistance to the draft.

The Kingdom News, of Brooklyn, prints a petition demanding that restrictions on "The Finished Mystery" and similar works should be removed, "so that people may be permitted, without interference or molestation, to buy, sell, have, and read this aid to Bible study." The passage of this amendment would reopen our camps to this poisonous influence.

The International Bible Students' Association pretends to the most religious motives, yet we have found that its headquarters have long been reported as the resort of German agents.

Shakespeare wisely said that "the devil may quote Scripture to his own purposes," and the Germans are peculiarly fond of abusing the religious spirit. The Kaiser appeals for obedience to his every behest on the claim that he is the divine representative and spokesman. The German clergy has been a unit both at home and throughout this country in denouncing all resistance to the Kaiser as impious.

The collapse of the Italian Army last year was largely due to the religious literature printed in Italian and dropped among the troops by Austrian airships. The Germans have recently dropped among the British troops thousands of copies of a sermon by the Rev. John Haynes Holmes with a view to stirring up mutiny. This preacher resides in America and is linked with the Finished Mystery group. His motives are fanatically sincere, and he thinks his ends justifiable, yet it is evident that if his sermons appeal to the Germans as ammunition, they must be dangerous in our country. The amendment proposed would leave such preachers to unrestricted sedition.

The gospel of sabotage is preached by many eminent professors in eloquent terms. Destruction of property, ruination of sawmills, burning of crops, sinking of ships, are all advocated as acts of high principle looking toward the betterment of labor. The result is the hampering of military success and it is the result, not the motive, that must be guarded against. The damage to life, property, and efficiency already done by these doctrines is great, and they threaten greater damage.

The motives of a negro preaching the elevation of his race could hardly be attacked as bad, yet the result may be equivalent to the prevention of reinforcements. G. H. Mason, a negro pastor of Jackson, Miss., preached resistance to the draft, with the result that only 31 out of 63 negro registrants in that country responded to the call.

There is no more dangerous element in this country than that which conscientiously battles for unlimited individual freedom of act and speech at this time. The persons assume the highest ethical and philosophical grounds, but their influences is as paralyzing as that of the fanatics whose motives are so earnest that they will commit arson, murder, or suicide to register their beliefs.

The motives of the Bolsheviki in Russia were good, their ends justifiable in their eyes, and their criticisms of the administrations were true, but they overlooked the military danger of such discussions, with the result that the soldiers shot nobody but their own officers and their fellow citizens, and the Germans are still marching almost unresisted across the prostrate nation in spite of a treaty of peace.

The only ones who have profited by the Russian excess of liberty are the Germans who do not believe in personal freedom except in the countries they wish to conquer.

The passage of this amendment would greatly weaken American efficiency and help none but the enemy. Results, not motives, count in war, therefore the law and its executors should be concerned with procuring desirable and preventing dangerous results, leaving motives to the mercy of the judges or to the perspective of historians.

Mr. FLETCHER obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH. I want to say a word concerning the letter which has just been read, if the Senator from Florida will permit me.

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield for that purpose, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida yields, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Montana for the purpose expressed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not want, even by remaining silent, to have it supposed that I at least accept at all the reasoning either of the Assistant Attorney General or of the district judge whose opinion he quotes. I do not recognize that in the application of the very well-understood clause, "with good motives and for justifiable ends," anybody can excuse himself for a plain violation of law. That is not "a justifiable end" which is a violation of law. So, Mr. President, if one under the statutes has the intent to obstruct enlistment, he can not say that he was actuated by good motives, and there are no justifiable ends. So, in respect to the case cited by the judge of the man who steals bread to save his child from starvation, he can not claim that he is actuated by good motives and for justifiable ends, because the law will not recognize the stealing of bread as excusable, even though it be done for the purpose of saving a child from starvation. That is not a "justifiable end" in the contemplation of the law.

So, Mr. President, with reference to the people who teach the evil of bearing arms and the evil of participation in military activities of the Government, if their teaching is done with the intent to obstruct enlistment or to incite insubordination in the Army, they can not escape responsibility for their act by saying that they were actuated by a desire to serve God.

Mr. President, that was all tried out in the Mormon cases. The Mormons, formerly at least—and I assume that the thing has been abandoned—taught—at least, as it is generally understood—that plural marriage was not only countenanced by Holy Writ but was a highly commendable thing. Doubtless they believed what they taught, and they taught it with the best of motives; but the law forbids plural marriages. They could not say that they were actuated by good motives or for justifiable ends.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Both the motives and the ends must be justifiable.

Mr. WALSH. Of course. The end must be one which the law recognizes as justifiable. Therefore, Mr. President, in all of these cases, if the man actually is guilty of the criminal intent contemplated by the statute, if he does really intend to block our armies in any way or to incite insubordination or mutiny among our soldiers, or if he intends in any way to obstruct the draft, he can not escape condemnation under this act as it now stands or as it will be if it goes into force without the France amendment. He can not escape responsibility in that way.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The other day during the discussion of one phase of this conference report, particularly that to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] addressed himself, attention was called to the fraud statute and to the holdings of the court in respect to that statute. I have received a letter from the Solicitor of the Post Office Department and I should like to have it read at this time as a part of the discussion upon this phase of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the letter referred to by the Senator from Utah will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 4, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KING: I read in the RECORD this morning the speeches in the Senate of yesterday and your remarks in the course of the debate.

The language of section 4 under discussion is identical with that of the fraud statute, and it is impossible to make any distinction between the practical operation of the two measures. The fraud statute itself does not provide for a hearing, nor does it provide that a fraud order shall only be issued against persons who have been convicted of the fraud, as one might assume from the remarks of Senators.

The Postmaster General would at the present time have as much power to issue fraud orders against newspapers for political purposes or in order to accomplish any of the purposes suggested by Senators in furtherance of political interests under the existing fraud statute as he would have to issue orders for the return of such mail under section 4 of the bill. The fraud statute itself does not even provide for a hearing. As a matter of practice and in order to administer absolute justice, full hearings are held in fraud cases; that is, where conclusive evidence of the fraud does not appear upon the face of the papers before the department. This practice would undoubtedly be extended to cover seditious cases, but in the latter class much of the illegal matter under the espionage act would appear on the very face of the literature being circulated, which would make a hearing unnecessary in some cases. In fact, the public interests might seriously suffer by permitting the continued use of the mails to one sending literature manifestly in violation of the espionage act pending such hearing.

Nor does the analogy between the fraud statute and the proposed law stop at what has been said. The fraud statute does not provide in terms for a review by the courts, but it is settled law that the equity courts have jurisdiction to restrain orders of the Postmaster General where they are issued contrary to law or where for any reason it appears the Postmaster General has acted in an arbitrary or capricious manner.

This is a war measure and is intended to prevent this great governmental instrumentality—the mails—from being used against the interest of the Government in the prosecution of this war. The equity courts would have the same jurisdiction to restrain improper orders of the Postmaster General under section 4 of this proposed bill that they now have under the fraud statute. If the Postmaster General should attempt to use this power for other purposes, political or otherwise, such as has been suggested in the course of the debate, he would not only violate the law himself, a remedy for which would immediately be available in injunction proceedings, but make himself the object of ridicule and contempt of the American people, with the result that instead of accomplishing any political advantage such action would be a political boomerang.

There is a further analogy between this class of legislation and fraud legislation. Not only has Congress provided for the issuance of fraud orders by the Post Office Department, upon evidence satisfactory to the Postmaster General, but, as in the matter under consideration, there is a companion criminal statute making it a penal offense to use the mails for fraudulent purposes. The delays incident and the technicalities resorted to in criminal proceedings have demonstrated beyond any doubt that the preventive measure employed by the Post Office Department is infinitely more effective in preventing frauds than the criminal provision. The fact is that the action of the Post Office Department in detecting frauds has furnished the information upon which criminal prosecutions have followed.

The recent case of the Masses Publishing Co., where the magazine has been barred from the mails since last July, and where the courts have sustained the action of the department, but where the criminal proceedings are still pending after one mistrial, is an example of the relative efficiency of the two methods in handling seditious matter. The Masses case is merely typical. In many such cases it takes years to bring offenders to trial in fraud cases.

Much of the seditious matter that is now being circulated is distributed by persons or concerns throughout the country in circular form and and is accompanied by urgent solicitations for funds to continue the propaganda work, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are being sent through the mails to the distributors of such literature. The proposed section 4 would enable the Post Office Department to promptly reach and suppress this evil. The propagandists now engaged in this work in most cases are willing to serve prison sentences if they are only permitted to conduct the propaganda. They are largely of a class who have nothing to lose by a prison sentence, and, in fact, such sentence simply brings the martyrdom they seek in the eyes of those whom they endeavor to mislead.

I may add, in conclusion, that the practice in the department in all cases where fraud orders or similar orders of the Postmaster General are made is that a finding of the facts before the department is made up by the solicitor for the department and form a part of the record of the case and are made a part of the order of the Postmaster General, all of which are available to the interested parties for use in the courts or otherwise.

The theory underlying fraud, lottery, and other similar statutes is that the matter prevented from being carried in the mails is against public policy. If the practice of a fraud which only affects a few individuals is against public policy, how much more against public policy is the circulation of matter which in time of war strikes at the very heart of the Republic? And why should not all use of the mails be prohibited to one engaged in such undertaking?

Very truly, yours,

W. H. LAMAR, Solicitor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there need be no further argument in respect to the provision in the bill which was inserted here in the Senate; that really is not up for discussion, as I view the matter. Of course, we have a perfect right to discuss it, but it is not involved in the question before the Senate at this time. The sole question is, Shall the Senate agree to this conference report? The conference report has not changed that provision in the bill to which the letter just read is addressed, and to which a good deal of discussion has been directed. It does not change that in any respect whatever, except to insert at the beginning of that clause, section 4, the words "when the United States is at war"; in other words, it limits the application of this post-office provision to the period of the war. That is the only thing the conferees did with respect to that provision of the bill, otherwise it remains precisely as the Senate adopted it, and I have not heard anywhere any objection to the language inserted by the conferees. I take it that all those who were opposed to the original provisions of the bill prefer it with that language, and all those who favored the original provisions certainly have no objection to that language.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I agree with the Senator that that is so; but, at the same time, when it comes to the adoption of the conference report in its final form, Senators who are opposed to any part of the bill as originally passed may still oppose the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. FLETCHER. I concede that.

Mr. HARDWICK. That, of course, involves no reflection upon the action of the conferees.

Mr. FLETCHER. I concede that. I say we have the right to thrash this all out again; we have a perfect right to do that and object to the whole bill; and the discussion has for two days and a half very largely been directed against the bill as a whole, rather than against any action by the conferees. We have gone over and over here in the last two days and a half precisely what we undertook to settle when we passed the bill and sent it to conference. We have a right to do that, of course; but I am not going into that field, because I supposed it had been settled and concluded, and, so far as I am concerned, it was settled right. All I propose to deal with is the conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator that the words the conferees placed in the bill, limiting the operation of this proposed statute to the period of the war, improve it. At the same time the conferees openly violated a rule of the Senate, and if any Senator wished to make the point of order that the conferees had inserted matter that neither House had considered, the conference report would go back to conference. I have no disposition, however, to raise that point, and I apprehend that no other Senator will do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. I appreciate what the Senator has said; but at the same time I differ with him as to a violation of any rule of the Senate, because that amendment was in conference as a whole; the House said, "We will agree to it, provided you amend it so and so."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator will remember that we amended the rules only two or three weeks ago, and in the new rule it is specifically stated that the conferees shall not insert any matter that has not been agreed upon by either House, nor shall they strike out anything that both Houses have agreed to. I simply call attention to that, without any intention of raising the point at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am very glad to have the Senator mention it. I will try to keep it in mind in any future work of that kind, but I was not under that impression; my judgment is that the Senator is in error about it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator from New Hampshire, usually so accurate on questions regarding the rules, is not right about this matter. The Senate passed this provision with reference to the Postmaster General and made it apply for all time. The House came in and said, "We will not accept that, but we will yield if you make it apply only for a limited time." To yield for a limited time what has been made applicable for all time is a legitimate conference agreement. The question was, Shall it be for all time? The House said, "No; but we will agree to it for a limited time." To say that the provision shall apply for a limited time is to accept part of what the Senate has done. All that the Senate did was in conference, and the House accepted part of what the Senate did. If we can not in conference under our new rule make an agreement of that sort, our new rule has cut us practically out of bringing the two Houses together.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator probably is familiar with the amendment to the rule.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was on the subcommittee of the Committee on Rules of the Senate when it was prepared.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Secretary has it at hand, I wish it might be read now. However, I do not wish to prolong the controversy at all, and I will not ask that it be read; it is very explicit.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as I was saying, the arguments which have been advanced during the discussion of this whole question as to whether or not we will agree to the conference report have been arguments directed against the entire bill.

There is need of this legislation, Mr. President. It began, if I may be permitted to trace briefly its history, in a very innocent sort of way. It was suggested by the Department of Justice, because we had inadvertently overlooked in the original act, approved June 15, 1917, the language found in section 3 of the pending measure, which applies to "causing or attempting to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty."

In the next portion of that section we use the language—or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States to the injury of the service of the United States—

Omitting the words "or attempt to obstruct."

Cases arose where it was difficult to prove an actual obstruction to the recruiting or enlistment, but there was an effort made to obstruct. Attempts were made. The intention was there. The purpose was there. The motive was there. Everything which the law condemned was there, but it did not actually result in preventing or obstructing the enlistment or the recruiting. Now, we had overlooked the use of those words, "or attempt" to do these things. We used them in the first part of section 3 of the original act, and omitted them in this part of the section. They are absolutely necessary words. So that this measure was proposed in the House in order to cure that defect; and you will find, referring now to section 3, that about all that was added in the original bill was this language in line 15:

Or shall willfully obstruct or willfully attempt to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States.

That was primarily the purpose of the bill when it was introduced. It came to the Senate, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and there certain amendments were offered; and the amendment reported by the committee, which is numbered 5, and some others were agreed to in the Senate. There was an added amendment, numbered 6, offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] in the Senate.

The House disagreed to these amendments, and asked for a conference. We agreed to the conference, and the conferees then took up the measure. The House conferees were willing to accept the Senate amendment numbered 4, provided we struck out the useless words—I regard them as useless—"or discourage" as they appear in lines 15 and 16, so as to leave the act:

Or shall willfully obstruct or willfully attempt to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States.

There is no use in using the words "discourage or attempt to discourage," as we conceived; and we agreed with the House conferees upon that proposition. They agreed to the other amendments proposed and adopted in the Senate, with the addition in line 23 of page 4 of the words I have just mentioned:

When the United States is at war the Postmaster General may—

And so forth. They insisted upon disagreeing to amendment numbered 6, which is the matter offered by the Senator from Maryland, in this language:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motives, and for justifiable ends.

The Senate conferees were obliged to yield on that amendment; and the report comes here practically with that the only change made in the action of the Senate—the omission of that proviso from the bill—if the conference report is agreed to.

The effect of such a proviso in this measure would be to place upon the Government the burden of proving what? Either one of these offenses mentioned in amendment numbered 5, for instance, that the defendant did—willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States.

You not only must prove that as a fact beyond a reasonable doubt in order to secure a conviction, but, if the defendant is permitted to set up as a defense that what he said was true, and was said with good motives and for justifiable ends, then the Government must meet that, and carry the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt not only that these things were uttered which the language of the law condemns, but that they were not true, that they were not uttered with good motives, nor were they uttered for justifiable ends. Therefore, in order to secure a conviction under this act, the Government would have to establish not only that the defendant did or said the things that are condemned by the act, but, in addition, beyond a reasonable doubt, that those things were not true that he said or did, that they were not said or done with good motives, and that they were not said or done for justifiable ends.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator think that is purely a matter of defense, and that the instruction of the court would be that if the defendant had uttered the words, and if those words had the effect condemned by the bill, they could find him guilty unless the jury further found that the words uttered were true, and that they were uttered for justifiable purposes? Would not that be the instruction?

Mr. FLETCHER. That might possibly be the form of the instruction; it might be put in that form; but I believe that the court would be obliged to instruct the jury, if requested by the defendant—as of course it would be—that the burden was on the Government to establish not only the fact that the defendant uttered this contemptuous, abusive, or profane language regarding the Government or the flag or the military or naval forces of the United States, but that what he said was not true, and was not uttered with good motives or for justifiable ends. I think if you put this provision in the law you will impose upon the Government the additional burden not only of proving the facts denounced in the bill but of proving that they were not true, and that they were not uttered with good motives and for justifiable ends. It hampers the Government. It gives the defendant the opportunity of coming into court with a plea under which he can exploit his views, under which he can read extracts from various authors by way of establishing the truth of what he has said, and by way of undertaking to justify the ends which he aimed to accomplish and the motives which prompted him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator on the matter he has just commented upon?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do I understand that according to the Senator's view this provision would impose upon the Government the burden of proof to show that the defendant did not make the statement objected to with good motives and for justifiable ends?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that would be the effect of this provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. I never have seen, in any jurisdiction, or in any State or Federal prosecution for criminal libel or similar offenses, a case where the Government or the State in the first instance assumed the burden of proof, and was obliged to make it out as a part of the case for the prosecution. That is a matter to be set up by the defendant in defense.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; and if this were limited to civil trials the rule to which the Senator refers would undoubtedly hold good. But a different principle controls the proof in civil cases than that which controls in criminal cases. In all criminal cases the case must be made out beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden is on the Government to establish beyond a reasonable doubt the charges laid in the indictment or complaint, and the charge laid in this indictment and complaint must include not only the facts stated in the language of the bill but the averment that the things charged were not true and were not for justifiable ends and with good motives. That must be the charge in the indictment if you insert a provision like this, and the Government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt every one of these charges.

I concede that if the burden is on the plaintiff in a civil suit, it may be shifted to the defendant by his setting up a defense justifying his act. Then the burden is upon him to establish that. But that is not the rule governing the prosecution in criminal cases. The Government must establish the averments set forth in the indictment, and each and every one of them beyond a reasonable doubt. I believe the effect of such a proviso in this bill would be to impose upon the Government the burden of proving the averments in the indictment which would conform to the description of any offense that might be outlined in the language of the act itself, and, in addition to that, overcoming this which is allowed to be set up as a matter of defense.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. The very terms of the bill itself say that when the statement is made with good motives and for justifiable ends that shall be a complete defense. I think I give the substance of it. That is a matter of defense. In drawing an indictment the district attorney would not make averments negativing the facts that constitute the matter of defense. It is enough for the Government simply to charge that by the utterance or printing of a certain series of words the offense is committed. Then the Government does not go further in the indictment and aver negatively that it was not for these purposes that might be set up in defense.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will not the Senator admit that this would destroy the usual rule that the defendant is presumed to intend the consequences of his act? If he is permitted to set up as a matter of defense that what he said or uttered was true, or that what he said or published was true, then the usual rule, after proving that what he had said or what he had published was in violation of the language of the act, would be overcome merely by the statement that what he said was true or what he published was true.

Mr. SHERMAN. But undoubtedly the district judge of a Federal court, in charging the jury, would instruct them that unless they were satisfied from all of the evidence that the defendant had brought himself within the provisions of the act, they must convict the defendant. That is the general rule, and I do not think this changes it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. Now, without dwelling upon that any longer—because the time is very limited—I conceive that this provision is sound in the law of libel, that it reaches the situation in the case of publications in newspapers and that sort of thing; but this is a criminal statute, which is not directed merely to what may be published in some newspaper. It is not a libel at all. It is a criminal law intended to reach offenses against the United States; and, in my judgment, that provision has no place in a criminal statute.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. FALL. May I ask the Senator if it is not his opinion that this entire statute is intended to reach what is really an assault against the United States—an assault by words?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. FALL. It is not a libel nor a slander statute——

Mr. FLETCHER. Exactly.

Mr. FALL. But it is a statute designed to cover an assault. This is an assault upon the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I claim, Mr. President. That is what I mean to say; and in that view the provision is misconceived as applicable to this kind of a statute. It does not impinge upon the right of free speech and free press, and that sort of thing, to enact provisions such as we propose to enact in this bill. This proviso, as I say, might be perfectly sound if we were enacting a statute on libel or slander; but this statute is not at all of that nature. It is in some respects similar to a statute dealing with criminal libel, but it covers a vast number of other things to which this proviso can not apply at all; and, as I say, it would practically mean that it would be impossible to convict a defendant charged with a violation of what we admit ought to be declared a breach of order or a violation of law. It gives him the opportunity to exploit his doctrines and his beliefs and his contentions in the courthouse, and to get better advertising and publicity, and to do more harm with those views. It imposes upon the Government a burden which it would be impossible for the Government to bear successfully in the prosecution of many cases that ought to be prosecuted under the law.

I submit that we ought to adopt this conference report, which would, in effect, omit that provision from the bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to speak about two minutes before the vote is taken; and I simply wanted to say to the Senator that I hope he will not take all the time. I have not taken a minute on the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would have been through long ago if Senators had not interrupted me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know.

Mr. FLETCHER. I realize that the time is short.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want to hurry the Senator, but I want him to fix it so that I can have two minutes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. I am not going to take longer time, Mr. President. I realize the situation.

I wish to insert in the RECORD a clipping from the Washington Post of May 2, which refers to the case mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] this morning. Of course, I do not know what the facts are about that case; but I think there are other things in this editorial which are quite material, and that it ought to go into the RECORD. I think that a provision of this sort would encourage spies and people who are disposed to hamper and interfere with the proper prosecution of the war by the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the editorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TENDERNESS TO SPIES.

A somewhat remarkable story is contained in the news dispatches. An individual held at Leavenworth prison acknowledges himself a deserter from the American Army. According to the statement, he was a spy before the entrance of the United States into the war. Working under the direction of one of the attachés of the German Embassy here, he spread German propaganda in various communities. Arrested later, he was released on promising to become an American citizen. He then joined the Army and further aided the German Embassy by forwarding important information. Desertion "by orders" from the same source followed. He is now to be interned for the duration of the war.

This story, if true, should be most encouraging to spies of all classes. Count Luxburg, if he has any sane moments remaining, must feel that Argentina has been unwarrantedly severe in her treatment of one who would merely sink a few boats without a trace instead of plotting against a whole nation. Von Bernstorff and the gallant Boy-Ed will doubtless regret the passing burst of passion which dictated their abrupt departure for other climes. As for the lesser fry among the spies and traitors still in our midst, a marked increase of plotting and crime may be looked for.

They do things better in France. The Teuton in any guise is given very brief time to read his title clear. It behooves him to have credentials close at hand of the most convincing character. Should he fail, French courtesy still stretches to the extent of making a note of future condolences to his widow. So it is in Great Britain and Italy. Russia still embraces the Teuton propagandist in what is left of her once ample bosom, but the spectacle is not attractive, nor is it seemly that the United States should be as idiotic as the Bolsheviki in trusting the perfidious enemy.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, speaking of the spy question and the espionage question and the censorship question, I received this morning a letter signed by Irving Washburn, written upon the official stationery of the Assistant Attorney General at 641 Washington Street, New York City, with this statement upon it:

Address all communications to "The Assistant Attorney General."

Then there is the seal of the Department of Justice, with the American eagle, the symbol of freedom, flying above this notation:

In replying refer to I. W.

Which are the initials of the signer of the letter, Mr. Irving Washburn, whatever he may be.

I send the letter to the desk and ask that the Secretary read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Address all communications to "The Assistant Attorney General." (Seal of Department of Justice.) Customs Division. In replying refer to I. W.]

OFFICE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL,
641 WASHINGTON STREET,
New York, May 3, 1918.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In the New York World of yesterday morning you are quoted as saying of some one recently appointed by President Wilson, in substance, as follows:

"I only know that he was appointed by the President, and I take it from that that he has no qualifications."

Remembering you very well personally in connection with my visits to New London years ago in the matter of Anna W. Ferris, in which I was associated with your firm, I am solicitous to know if you are correctly quoted by the World.

I trust that you will look upon this as a desire to test the World rather than yourself, and shall be grateful to you for any reply you may wish to make.

Yours, fa thfully, IRVING WASHBURN.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, we have not passed any test act yet in this country, and I do not propose that that gentleman shall test me. He can test the New York World if he wants to, or any other newspaper, but he can not test me.

On page 5741 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, under date of April 29, 1918, this colloquy ensued between the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and me:

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. May I address a question to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. You may.

Mr. PHELAN. What is the business or profession of Mr. Borglum?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He is a sculptor.

Mr. PHELAN. An artist?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He is a great sculptor, like St. Gaudens.

Mr. PHELAN. Has he any qualifications to judge of flying machines?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know. The President selected him, and, therefore, I think probably he did not have any qualifications. [Laughter.] I do not know. Let the Senator from California go to his President and find out. I can not find out anything.

Now, I get a letter from an Assistant Attorney General, or somebody who has access to his stationery. I do not remember ever having met the gentleman, though he claims that he met me on some official business years ago. I have been informed since I came on the floor that he is connected with the customs department over in New York.

I think that is an outrage, Mr. President. If that is the way espionage and censorship is to be conducted in this country—if you can not say that you do not think the President appoints the right men to office, or that you do not think he is a good judge of men, or that you do not think the men he appoints have the proper qualifications—we may as well disband and set up a kind of a czardom in this country.

I read from the Constitution of the United States:

The Senators and Representatives * * * shall * * * be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective Houses and in going to and returning from the same, and for any speech or debate in either House they shall not be questioned in any other place.

And this little "two spot" presumes to question me about whether I made the remark or not, and he says he does not want to test me, but he wants to test the New York World. Well, he is right there in New York. Let him test the New York World; I do not care; but I think it is an outrage, Mr. President.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator that it is; but I want to inquire if this is not an anticipation of the beginning of the reign of terror that is proposed under just such legislation as this; that every person who has a seal, or has sense enough to dictate a letter to a good stenographer who can write it out legibly and grammatically, will be addressing inquiries of that kind, especially when Congress adjourns, to every person who differs from these self-constituted despots?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, we will have George Creel at the head of a firing squad here inside of three months if we pass this kind of legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is it not also true that Senators ought to be rather careful about making statements in their places on the Senate floor about men and about officials?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator must be the judge of his own conduct and I will be the judge of mine. I will make just such statements as I think I ought to make in this free democracy, and I will hold myself responsible for them to the full extent of the law.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not saying this so much with regard to what the Senator from Connecticut has said; but my observation is based upon instances where Senators have stood on this floor and made statements that in my judgment were unfair and unjust to individuals and to officials. I think that is wholly wrong.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I say I do not care what any other Senator has said. If any Senator has made statements that were unwarranted, let him be held responsible. I never have made a statement, and I hope I never shall make a statement—I shall not intentionally do so—that I can not back up with the facts. If it has gotten so that a Senator of the United States can not stand on this floor and give utterance to his honest opinion in respectful language, differ as he may politically or in any other way, without being called down by some Creel bureau or some little, miserable magazine scribbler, all of whom are on the Creel pay roll now—all the muckrakers are there—if it has gotten to that point, why, let us dissolve this Government and set up another boisheviki outfit.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator says he is responsible for all the statements he makes upon the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt that is true; but I wish to ask him what a "two spot" is? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has voted to confirm enough to know. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS. Not enough to know just what that term means.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I regret that the conferees have abandoned this amendment numbered 6. I would rather it had been kept in. I do not agree at all with the views of the Assistant Attorney General as to its effect. I agree with the view of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] on that subject. But, Mr. President, if you will study carefully each one of the paragraphs preceding it, you will find that as to most of them it is necessary that the statements should have been false, and willfully false.

The only one of the paragraphs that I have been worried about is the one that uses the term "Army and Navy." I think there it applies to the entire Army or the entire Navy, and it really means that the language used should have been intended to bring the entire Army or the entire Navy into disrepute; not a fair criticism of an officer, not a criticism of aviation, not a criticism of some fault that is sought to be remedied and corrected whereby the Army as a whole would be brought into additional credit, would be made illegal by the bill.

I really think that the effect of the language is practically the same without amendment numbered 6 as it is with it, and it is very necessary that we should bring the legislation to a close. I voted for amendment numbered six. I am sorry it is not in the bill now, but I do not think the preceding language is dangerous without it.

I do not like section 4, which we put in in the Senate. I voted against it. I am sorry it was put in, but I think it is improved by the provision that it shall only last during the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does anyone desire to occupy two minutes?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to occupy about one. The most important part of the bill, in my opinion, is this part:

> Whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished—

And so forth.

Then there was inserted in the bill, at the instance of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], a proviso to that which I have just read:

> Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motives, and for justifiable ends.

The effect of these words was that if a man goes out and says, "I favor the German Empire in this war; I am going to support it. I think that the cause of Germany is a better cause than the cause of the United States. I am not going to buy any liberty bonds, and I am doing this from high idealistic love of the German people, the greatest people in the world, and the people of the United States ought not to stand in their way"——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement the vote will now be taken. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENYON (when Mr. CUMMINS's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CUMMINS]. He is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I made an arrangement to pair on this vote with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and I am at liberty to transfer the pair. I transfer it to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "nay."

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when Mr. MARTIN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired as has been announced. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], but by an arrangement I am permitted to vote upon this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is absent from the Senate by reason of a death in his family. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. That Senator being necessarily absent upon business of importance, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KIRBY. I announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], who is detained on official business.

I also announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON], who is absent in connection with the liberty-loan campaign. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. REED. I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. By an arrangement with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], who is also paired, a transfer has been effected so that both of us may vote, the pair being between the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BORAH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. NUGENT] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

Mr. FALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I neglected to announce that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] who is unavoidably absent. I have an understanding with him, however, by which I may vote, and I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 26, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. GORE subsequently said: I wish to state that had I been present when the vote was taken on the conference report on the so-called espionage bill, I would have voted "nay."

AMENDMENT OF NATURALIZATION LAWS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HARDWICK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator will not insist on having the conference report disposed of to-day.

Mr. HARDWICK. I shall not insist on having it disposed of to-day, but I want to make it the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

PARITY OF THE AMERICAN DOLLAR ABROAD.

Mr. OWEN. I offer the following resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 238) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to advise the Senate of the amount severally of commercial and financial bills payable in terms of the currency of the neutral nations of Europe which have been bought and sold severally by the member banks of the Federal Reserve System and other banks and banking houses dealing in foreign exchange in the city of New York from January 1 to April 1, 1918, and the amount of profit in such transactions; and to advise the Senate what steps have been taken to protect the par value of the American dollar in the neutral countries of Europe and what is the amount of foreign balances held in the United States at this time by such neutral nations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARDWICK. I did not understand that a request would be made for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; I do not think it will require any discussion at all. No one will, I think, object to the information desired.

Mr. HARDWICK. I would not like to have the matter before the Senate as the unfinished business displaced.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no; I did not intend that.

Mr. HARDWICK. The unfinished business can be laid aside pending the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. OWEN. I supposed it was temporarily laid aside from what the Senator said.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution if it does not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution will go over.

RENTAL OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rental profiteering in the District of Columbia, for which I propose to ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Not to-night?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have been instructed by the committee to ask the Senate for immediate consideration, and I trust that the Senator from Utah will not make an objection under those circumstances. The committee considers it of very great importance. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That until the adjournment sine die of the present session of the Congress no judicial order for the recovery of possession of any real estate now or hereafter held or acquired by oral or written lease, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, and all leases thereof shall continue so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, except on the ground that the tenant has failed to take reasonable care of the premises or has committed waste, or has been guilty of conduct which is a nuisance or amounts to a disturbance of the peace of adjoining or neighboring occupiers or a violation of law, or that the premises are reasonably required by a landlord for occupation by himself or his family while in the employ of or officially connected with the Government; and where such order has been made but not executed before the passage of this resolution the court by which the order was made may, if it is of the opinion that the order would not have been made if this resolution had been in force at the date of the making of the order rescind or modify the order in such manner as the court may deem proper for the purpose of giving effect to this resolution: Provided, That any provision in any oral or written lease that the same shall be determined or forfeited if the premises shall be sold is hereby declared to be void while this resolution shall be in force, and every purchaser shall take the conveyance of any premises subject to the rights of all tenants in possession thereof under the provisions of this resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware what relation this matter has to a general bill dealing with the subject which I think has passed the other House and is now before the committee of which the Senator is a member?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was going to ask an opportunity to explain very briefly why the joint resolution is pressed in this fashion. The District Committee is now considering a bill which came from the House providing for stopping the rent profiteering which we are satisfied has become prevalent in the District of Columbia.

The District Committee of this body, however, has attempted to deal with the subject in a very different way from that provided for in the House bill. The difference is in principle, and a conference committee will of necessity be appointed to consider it, and the deliberations of that conference committee will doubtless be very long extended.

The object of this joint resolution is to preserve the status of landlord and tenant in the District just as it now exists, so that leases may not be terminated during the time we are endeavoring to pass a bill to provide reasonable justice for the short-term tenants in the District of Columbia.

The committee has been informed, it has testimony to the effect that there are rows and rows of houses upon streets in this city which have been heretofore rented to the same tenants for years, and all those tenants have been given notice under a 30-day clause to quit the premises. The effect of the joint resolution will be to hold the status of those tenants in these houses, which would otherwise be determined within the next 30 days under the terms of the lease, until Congress can have an opportunity of dealing fairly with the question, and both Houses can have an opportunity of determining just what sort of a remedy should be applied. It is the sole object of the joint resolution to preserve the status pending the effort of Congress to enact suitable legislation to meet the conditions now in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Suppose that the bill the Senator's committee has in charge does not become a law at this session of Congress, what then? Does the joint resolution simply extend to the end of the present session?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It simply operates during the session of Congress and until Congress adjourns.

I will say to the Senator, Mr. President, that the provisions of this joint resolution, of course, require that the tenants shall comply in regard to the payment of rent, care of the property, and all of the ordinary duties of the tenant, or he may be ousted under the terms of the notice which may be given. His rent must be paid; every provision must be lived up to. The only change that this attempts to make is that he can not be ejected until Congress has an opportunity to deal with this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will venture to ask the Senator from Delaware if the testimony before the committee shows that this so-called profiteering is to any great extent prevailing, or is it in exceptional cases only?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may say that I think from the testimony we have, that every member of the District Committee is satisfied that there has been so much rent profiteering and so much is threatened in this District that it is very necessary that Congress should deal with this subject at as early a day as possible.

This joint resolution is reported, Mr. President, by the unanimous vote of the District Committee, and they instructed me to see that it had just as early consideration as it was possible to obtain

Mr. GALLINGER. If this joint resolution is passed, it will be a most extraordinary form of legislation, inasmuch as it will interfere with the relation of tenant and landlord.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I agree fully with the Senator from New Hampshire; but this is an extraordinary condition which we feel it our duty to try to meet.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say nothing further on the matter now, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Delaware if I understood the meaning of the joint resolution in one particular. If there is no lease held by the tenant, does it prevent the owner of a house from selling that house if there is a tenant in it and the owner wants it vacated?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It applies to no case where there is not a lease, either verbal or written. It provides, in the case of any sale made during the operation of this joint resolution—just as the committee have agreed in the bill to be reported by them—that during a certain time the property shall be conveyed with due regard to the possession of the tenant; and the provision which we intend to insert and which the committee has agreed upon in the bill before it, I will say to the Senator, is that the tenant may continue so long as he pays a fair rental, based on conditions as they existed on October 1, 1917.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Delaware think that any considerable injury would be done to anybody by this joint resolution going over until Monday? It involves a very important matter, and nobody knows what the contents of the joint resolution are except members of the committee. While we have the utmost confidence in the committee, it does seem that there ought to be some consideration of the measure upon the part of this body before it is passed. It will affect every property holder in the city.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Idaho that the contents of this joint resolution should be known and understood; and I have tried to make clear just exactly what it contains. I do not know whether or not the Senator was present when I did so.

Mr. BORAH. I was listening to the Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I simply thought this was a favorable opportunity, upon the explanation of the agreement of the members of the committee and what our conclusions were, to get the joint resolution passed. If there is any objection to its consideration, of course it will not now go through. It requires that I shall have unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, do I understand that this joint resolution provides that if a man has a house which is rented he has got to continue to rent it to the tenant and that he can not sell it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Oh, no; but the committee has deemed it necessary to provide that any sales which may occur in this city, for a limited time, shall be subject to the rights of the tenant as construed and as prescribed by the act which we propose to bring in as soon as it can be reported.

Mr. LODGE. Then a man could not change his tenant?

Mr. SAULSBURY. A man could not change his tenant under the terms of the bill which will be reported to the Senate unless that tenant has failed to pay rent or has committed some act which is a nuisance or which affects the property in some injurious fashion.

Mr. LODGE. While I suppose some legislation in reference to this matter may be necessary, it seems to me this is very extraordinary legislation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is very unusual legislation. If it is thought necessary to go into all the reasons and the testimony which shows that this legislation is necessary in this District, that would doubtless consume more time than we shall have at our disposal this afternoon.

Mr. LODGE. It is not merely that the right of sale is limited, but the tenant is given a right in a house to which he has no title whatever.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The tenant's possession will be continued, provided he remains a good tenant under the terms of the lease with which he entered into possession, that he pays his rent, and properly conducts himself as a tenant with respect to the property.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Delaware to say that unanimous consent had been given for the consideration of this joint resolution. I did not so understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; unanimous consent has not been given for the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I said that it was necessary for me to obtain unanimous consent in order to have the joint resolution considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I want to look into this matter, and I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as the conference report on the immigration bill is the unfinished business, I want to take just a moment of the time of the Senate to make a brief statement. Ever since February 8, 1918, the pension bill has been upon the calendar of the Senate. I secured consideration of that bill for about 50 minutes. Evidently I am not going to again get it up unless the Senate will vote to displace some other legislation. I therefore wish now to give notice to Senators who are in favor of that bill that at the earliest opportunity I intend to move for its consideration, even though it may displace some other matter which may then be the unfinished business. I shall not now object if the Senator from Georgia desires to have the conference report laid aside.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to lay the conference report aside. I should like to go on with it, but the Senate has been pretty steadily engaged to-day, and I presume the general desire will be for an adjournment for the afternoon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 35 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PRICE OF COTTON.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a copy of a letter I wrote to Hon. W. L. McKee, relative to the fixing of the price on cotton.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

SHELBY, MISS., April 20, 1918.

Hon. W. L. MCKEE,
Memphis, Tenn.:

I mark with interest that you are taking timely steps to resist at its birth any attempt to legislate a price on cotton. As chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, I desire to assure you that I shall at this juncture oppose by all the means known to parliamentary usage any attempt at such legislation. I shall resist any effort to fix a price on cotton with as much determination, and I trust with more success, than I resisted the fixing of a price on wheat. The fact that an injustice was inflicted upon the wheat farmer would not justify a like injustice upon the cotton farmer. Equal injustice is not a thing to be desired. The farmers are unorganized. They therefore can not be profiteers. No man, no set of men, can be stigmatized as profiteers who do not and who can not exact more for their product than the law of supply and demand awards. They are entitled to that price both in peace and in war. Let business prosper. Prosperity is one of our best aids and assets in this terrific struggle. The expenses of this war should be met by the levy of taxes and the sale of bonds and not by forced loans in the form of reduced prices, a polite name for confiscation. Of course the Government can fix prices, but it can not do so without working incalculable mischief and injustice. Price fixing is one of the oldest blunders known among the sons of men. It runs back as far as the reign of Hammurab in Babylon, 2,250 years before Christ. It is one dreary and invariable tale of disappointment and defeat, and ofttimes of disaster. In 1770 the Government of Calcutta fixed too low a price on wheat. The people lived sumptuously every day. They mistook cheapness for plenty. Famine followed fast upon their feasting. Our Government has fixed a price on wheat less than the law of supply and demand would award; that discourages production and encourages consumption. That is the reverse of a sound policy. We should not repeat this blunder as to cotton. I doubt if a law fixing the price of cotton can be passed, although the meeting held in Washington on April 10 between the representatives of the cotton manufacturers and the price-fixing committee of the War Purchasing Board may excite the fear that the price of cotton can be arranged or stabilized, which is the current camouflage synonym for reduction. I do not think that Congress itself will fix the price of cotton, notwithstanding the attitude of certain southern Congressmen toward wheat, and notwithstanding the fact that a portion of the southern press has stigmatized the wheat farmers and their friends as profiteers and has wantonly accused them of an attempt to extort blood money from their suffering countrymen. Such criticism, intemperate, intolerant, untrue, and unprovoked as it is, would not justify an appeal to the law of retaliation, for such an appeal would inevitably sin against the fundamental laws of economics, if not against the principles of justice itself.

T. P. GORE,
United States Senator.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5 o'clock p. m. (Saturday, May 4, 1918) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 6, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 4, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Source of light, life, and love, we seek Thee in prayer, that by Thy grace we may be able to resist evil and cleave to that which is good and with persistent energy and untiring zeal go forward with the work Thou hast appointed us to do, without the fear or favor of men; in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, my State and district have made such remarkable records in the matter of the third liberty loan that I desire to insert a few figures in respect to it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in respect to the liberty loan in Arkansas. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in this connection that my State has gone far over the top in the third liberty loan, and the third district, which I have the honor to represent, has likewise far exceeded its quota. My home town and county have exceeded its quota by 50 per cent; every county and practically every township in my district has more than met the requirement as to subscriptions for liberty loans and war-savings stamps. My people are 100 per cent Americans.

I publish a letter on this subject from my home town, and also give a few facts about my State, the best and most progressive State in the Union:

LIBERTY LOAN ORGANIZATION OF WASHINGTON COUNTY,
Fayetteville, Ark., April 29, 1918.

Washington County, Ark., is 50 per cent oversubscribed.

In the first week of the third liberty loan campaign, this county bought its entire quota of bonds, $416,750; at the end of the second week (beginning of the third) our county chairman notified both the State chairman and the district manager that we were then 25 per cent oversubscribed. It is now 50 per cent over, and we have a large enough number to entitle us to an honor flag. The messages mentioned above seem to have been overlooked, and the object of this letter is to correct the misrepresentations being made in Arkansas Legion bulletins.

Respectfully,

BRUCE HOLCOMB, Chairman.
W. J. HAMILTON,
Director Publicity.

The State of Arkansas has few millionaires, no poorhouses, possesses the only diamond mines on this continent, the hottest springs in the world, and the greatest pearl fisheries in the country.

A truly remarkable State and a highly prosperous one is Arkansas.

From her bauxite mines is made 90 per cent of the aluminum used in the United States.

From her coal mines comes smokeless coal used by the United States Navy.

In Pike County is the largest Elberta peach orchard in the world—3,500 acres under one management. Benton and Washington Counties have a larger acreage in apple orchards than any other two counties in the United States—10,000,000 trees. In rice production Arkansas ranks third in the country, with a yield of 6,312,000 bushels in 1916—worth $6,110,000 to the farmer and an increase in production over 1915 of 1,470,000 bushels.

Arkansas's cotton crop alone brought $73.54 to every man, woman, and child in the State.

After supplying a good part of the food for its 1,750,000 people, the farmers of Arkansas in 1916 received $272,351,500 from their surplus crops.

"FOR GOD'S SAKE, HURRY UP!"

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for not to exceed 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the House for not to exceed 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss the post-card offensive launched against the membership of this House telling us to hurry up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, during the last few days Members of this House have been subjected to a post-card offensive bringing to us the last words of a distinguished American statesman and diplomat, "For God's sake, hurry up!" "The tongues of dying men enforce attention like deep harmony," and anything spoken by the eminent Joseph H. Choate will always receive the utmost respect and consideration from the American people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this offensive were launched to impress upon us the seriousness of the hour, the danger, the horror of German domination, we submit without protest, just as every patriotic man who is doing all he knows how to do for his country welcomes any suggestion which shows him how he may do a little better. But if this hurry-up offensive is intended to imply that the House of Representatives has failed in a prompt, patriotic, and vigorous performance of its duty to the American people, I for one repudiate such implication utterly. Why should this House of Representatives be told to hurry up? Let any man name one demand which has had the solid backing of the American people which we have put aside. Surely there have been times when it seemed we might have acted with less debate, but it must be remembered we are laboring under responsibilities, larger by far than the wildest dream of any American before this war broke upon the world. Our predecessors in this Chamber were called upon to raise revenues counted in millions. We must provide for the raising of billions. Is it surprising, indeed, is it not natural, that a note of warning is heard as we proceed in the performance of these unprecedented duties?

What does the record show? It shows that this Congress has enacted by far more legislation than any Congress since the Civil War, and yet we are told to "hurry up." [Applause.] The Committee on Rules since we organized have authorized 26 favorable reports. Of course, a few of these reports—perhaps half a dozen—were not presented to the House, but the time consumed in debating all reports which have been presented is not equal to one legislative day [applause], and yet members of the Committee on Rules are told by the signers of these post cards to "hurry up." Oh, no, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to urge this House of Representatives to hurry up.

If I may be pardoned for speaking of the committee of which I am a member, I will say here and now that every one of the 12 members of the Committee on Rules is ready every minute to unite in instant and unanimous report to bring before the House any measure necessary to aid in winning the war. We have with the utmost determination and promptness responded to every proper demand. No man need tell us to hurry up, but God bless any man who can tell us how we can make better time.

Mr. Speaker, there were differences among us in the beginning of this war. But there is one proposition about which there is now no division in this Chamber. Germany may as well understand that America will never submit to a peace dictated by Berlin. Oh, it wrings the heart to think of the horrors of a prolonged war. May the good God be moved to look down with pity and put an end to the bloody work. We do not wish to kill; we would not destroy anything needful or useful to our fellow man. But Americans know now, if they have not realized heretofore, that free America can not survive if Germany wins. And we will not submit to German domination or to any foreign domination. We will not be slaves if the war lasts for a generation and consumes all of our wealth. Our wealth is not worth having if we are not free. I do not believe there is a man in this Chamber who would hesitate to give all he has, if it shall become necessary to give all, in order to win; and I will say something more. It is much easier to talk than to act. When I see these boys getting ready to go to the front, cheerful and smiling, I can not help wondering if I, too, could go cheerful and smiling if I were called upon to do so; but, as God is my judge, I do not believe there is a Member of this body, from the Speaker down, who has a son wearing the khaki who would not, if he could, take the place of his boy if by doing so he could save that boy. I say no man knows for certain what his conduct would be until he is called upon to act; but I am just as firm in the conviction that every father in this Chamber would, if he could, take the place of his boy at the front as I am that I am living here and now.

Mr. Speaker, I do not trespass very often upon the time of the House, but when I see a body of 435 men ready, anxious, eager to do their full duty with a common purpose in view, who up to this good hour have acted promptly and with singular unanimity, I can not help feeling it is strangely out of place for some organization to put in motion a post-card chain addressed to the membership of the House of Representatives telling us, "For God's sake, hurry up!"

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent of the House to proceed for another five minutes, in view of the interruptions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. NEELY. Regular order!

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FLOOD. That is all right, if the gentleman chooses to delay an important bill, such as the passport bill, in order to get five minutes, he can raise that question.

The SPEAKER. This is not debatable. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman withdraw his point. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). Two hundred and seventy-eight Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

PASSPORT REQUIREMENTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill H. R. 10264. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] is recognized, and has 25 minutes remaining of his time.

Mr. FLOOD. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin wanted five minutes. I can yield to him now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. As I understand it, I am not required to confine myself to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the rules of the House when there is a discussion in the House, if the point of order is made the discussion has to be confined to the bill. The Chair is not going to make the point.

Mr. BLAND. I understood there was such an agreement between the two gentlemen.

Mr. FLOOD. No point will be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not going to make any.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the understanding was between the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] and myself that the gentleman from Indiana might speak out of order for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes, the discussion not to be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD]. I have received requests aggregating 20 minutes for general debate. That is all I will ask. One gentleman wants three minutes, and the others make the aggregate 20 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that his time be extended 30 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman yield any of that time?

Mr. FLOOD. I am going to yield, amongst others, 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already put the question and has stated that there was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not see the gentleman, and the gentleman did not address the Chair.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think I did, but in such a modest way that the Chair did not hear it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again. Did the gentleman object?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I rose to reserve the right to object, and I wanted to inquire if I could not arrange to offer an amendment. I understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] intends to move the previous question at the end of his time, and I want to have an agreement that I can offer an amendment during the 15 minutes he gives me.

Mr. FLOOD. I think the gentleman will have that right. I will offer no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended 30 minutes, that he proposes to yield 20 minutes of his time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], and that the gentleman from Alabama be permitted to offer an amendment and have it pending?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. May I ask whether the gentleman from Alabama may not offer his amendment in his 15 minutes, whether anybody objects or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules, when time is yielded to a person for debate he does not have the right to offer an amendment. If he is recognized in his own right, he has the right to offer an amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman from Virginia mean by that that he does not intend any other amendment shall be offered?

Mr. FLOOD. There are a number of committee amendments. My purpose was, when we got through with the debate, to call for the previous question on the bill and amendments, and I would suggest to the gentleman that if there are any more amendments to be offered that we arrange that now.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to see an amendment offered here to except Canada from the operations of this bill.

Mr. FLOOD. I will say to the gentleman I could not offer that amendment. The gentleman made that suggestion yesterday, and I took it up with officials of the State Department this morning, and they are very much opposed to passing a rule excepting anybody. As I stated yesterday, there are no passports required to go to Canada. It is not the expectation that passports will be required, but conditions might develop in the summer or during the recess of Congress or some time during the progress of the war that would make application for passports to Canada just as desirable as to any other country.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and the moon might turn into green cheese.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask for 40 minutes extension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now, the Chair understands the gentleman from Virginia has 20 minutes. He has yielded to the gentleman from Indiana 5 minutes, leaving him 15 minutes, and he asks that his time be extended 40 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Twenty minutes of which time is to be yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty minutes of which is to be yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin and 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], and during the occupancy of the floor by the gentleman from Alabama he is to be permitted to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like five minutes and would like the privilege of presenting an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia modify his request?

Mr. FLOOD. Make it 45 minutes, then, and I will yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get 10 minutes to speak. I am not sure whether the gentleman from Wisconsin will give me that or not.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman want to speak on the bill?

Mr. LITTLE. No. We have carte blanche for general debate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask for that time in part to accommodate the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia modify his request? The gentleman from Wisconsin has asked that the time be extended and that 10 minutes of the time be given to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE]. Does the gentleman from Virginia modify his request?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not.

Mr. LITTLE. I object, then.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was to give the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Then I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state again the request of the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to 45 minutes, 30 minutes to be controlled by himself and 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], to be divided as follows: Five minutes to go to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], 15 minutes to be yielded to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER]; and the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Alabama shall be permitted to offer amendments.

Mr. BLAND. Does that include the time allotted to me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes. The time has been allotted to the gentleman. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to discuss the matter, which I want to discuss briefly at this time, were it not for the agreement made here by gentlemen who control the time that I should speak on a matter foreign to the bill.

I want to call attention to the splendid record that is being made by the great State of Indiana in this war. The conduct of the Representatives of that State in this war Congress is pretty well known here and properly reflects, in part, the attitude of our constituents at home. We are thoroughly in this war in Indiana. Our people realize our serious position and are united in a common cause. The Council of National Defense in Indiana was one of the first State councils of defense to have a real organization. Our county councils are, almost without exception, alive and wide awake, and permit me to digress long enough to say that we should extend to them the mail franking privilege. Our councils of defense are characterized by the elimination of politics. The present national chairman of the Republican national committee, Will H. Hays, was the first chairman of the State council, and on that same council was the Hon. Thomas Taggart, the ex-national chairman of the Democratic Party, and they worked hand in hand, and are still working that way, on war matters.

In Indiana we have obliterated party lines. We are foremost in carrying out the rules adopted by the Fuel and Food Administrations, and while at times they have been burdensome to our people, they have submitted with but very little complaint, and I feel justified in calling attention with special pride to the manner in which our people are making numerous sacrifices in this war. In emphasis of the nonpartisan sentiment in my State I would like to have the Clerk read in my time an article recently published in a Washington City newspaper containing an interview by the Hon. Thomas Taggart, who at one time was chairman of the national Democratic committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"PRESENT NOT THE TIME FOR POLITICS," TAGGART—POSITION ON WAR MAIN THING, SAYS HOOSIER—WISHES BEST MEN ELECTED.

WASHINGTON, April 13.

Thomas Taggart, former United States Senator from Indiana, who has been here for several days renewing friendships, prepared the following statement for the Washington Post:

"This is no time for politics. If I had my way, I would nominate and elect the best men to Congress, regardless of their politics. We need in the Congress the best men. There are just as good men in the Republican Party as there are in the Democratic Party; men as patriotic and as able, and there are Democrats who are just as well equipped to serve as any Republicans. I would rather vote for the election of a Republican whom I knew to be all right on the war than to vote for a Democrat whom I knew to be all wrong on the war. There is a time, perhaps, to play politics, but this is not the time. What we need is a Congress that will back up the President and the Government.

"This is war and the people are coming to realize it. Politics should be put aside and only men whose loyalty is undoubted and who are fitted to serve should be elected. That's the view our people out in Indiana are taking. Everybody is for supporting the Government. Of course, there are some Republicans who think they will win in the congressional elections this year and some Democrats who think they will win. For my part, I don't much care.

"What I want is to see the best man elected. Hoosiers—men, women, and money—are behind the war in earnest, with a full realization now, if never before, that it is up to the United States to bear the burden of the struggle."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, a large number of the Members of the Massachusetts delegation in this House take pride in the fact that they saw service originally in the Massachusetts House of Representatives. There were interesting exercises there day before yesterday, when a service flag for the members who had gone from the house of representatives in Massachusetts was dedicated appropriately. I desire to call the attention of this House to those exercises, and ask that we follow here the very worthy example set by the house in Massachusetts, namely, to dedicate a flag in this body to the Members who have gone from it in the service of their country, one of whom has given the supreme sacrifice of his life. [Applause.]

And in this connection, Mr. Speaker, I also wish to call attention to the fact that the flag back of the Speaker's rostrum is not the official flag of the United States. The stars in that flag are of gilt and should be of plain white. There is no authority for the use of gilt stars in the official flag of this country.

On June 14, 1777, Congress passed an act designating the Stars and Stripes as the national flag of the United States. The Federal law read:

Resolved, That the flag of the United States be 13 stripes, alternate red and white; that the Union be 13 white stars in a blue field, representing a new constellation.

Thus, it is noted, the thirteen original States designated the national colors and commemorated themselves in the 13 stars and 13 stripes. Later an act was passed authorizing the addition of a new star for each State admitted to the Union. The number of stars has grown until to-day there are 48 in the flag

In commemoration of the act of Congress in 1777, June 14 each year is now celebrated as Flag Day throughout the United States.

If there ever was a time when this House ought to sit under the proper Stars and Stripes it is when we are in this great contest across the sea. I therefore most earnestly wish to suggest to those having in charge the ornamentation of this room that a proper and appropriate flag be hung in this body. Gold stars look pretty, but they are not found in the official flag of the United States, and it seems to me that that correction ought to be made.

I ask leave to extend my remarks by inserting the article describing the exercises in the house of representatives in Boston.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the article referred to:

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Union, May 3, 1918.]

HOUSE DEDICATES SERVICE FLAG FOR FORMER MEMBERS.

A service flag with 11 stars, for members of last year's house who have gone into the military service, presented by Mrs. John H. Sherburne, of Brookline, wife of Col. Sherburne, of the One hundred and first Field Artillery, formerly the First Massachusetts Field Artillery, was dedicated this afternoon in the house.

Representative William Foster, of Springfield, was on a committee that escorted Mrs. Sherburne into the chamber. Standing under the flag, she made a brief speech, telling of the entry of the 11 members into the war "for country, civilization, humanity, and Christianity."

Accepting the flag, Speaker Cox said:

"They have gone to service worthily and gloriously in a great cause. We honor them. While they are away this service flag shall remain not merely as a silent reminder of the splendid associations which we have lost for a time, but as a mighty inspiration for us who sit where they served to do nobly the work left undone at home, an inspiration for us to stand ready to do all and make any sacrifice, even as they, for the cause of civilization and liberty."

Chaplain Daniel W. Waldron offered a prayer of dedication, with patriotic reference to the significance of the flag and the circumstances of its presentation.

The men for whom the flag is in honor are: Capt. James Tracy Potter, of North Adams; Col. Sherburne, Daniel W. Casey, Alfred J. Moore, and Daniel J. Young, of Boston; Kenneth P Hill, of Cambridge; Daniel W. Lincoln, of Worcester; Ward M. Parker, of New Bedford; Charles H. Slowey, of Lowell; and Maj. Roger Wolcott, of Milton.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Page 3, line 12, strike out the word "enter."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDDLESTON: Page 3, line 12, strike out the word "enter."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, there is a certain aspect of this bill that seems to me to be worthy of very careful consideration on the part of this House, and that is the effect of section 2 as proposed by committee amendment. That section reads as follows:

After such proclamation—

Referring to the President's proclamation—

as is provided for by the preceding section has been made and published, and while said proclamation is in force it shall, except as otherwise provided by the President, be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States unless he bears a valid passport.

It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that the freedom of a citizen is very substantially affected by that section. He can not go out of the United States, and if out of the United States he can not return home except with permission of the President.

The act provides that he must have a passport, or he must obey such other regulations as may be adopted. The regulations, of course, are subject to change at will, and the substance of that provision is that without a passport he can not return without the President's permission.

Now, a passport can not be claimed by a citizen as a matter of right. Passports are granted only at the will of an administrative officer. No court will force that officer to grant a passport. Also, passports have no continuing effect. They may be canceled at any time. Under a statute now in effect passports may be canceled whenever the officer charged with that duty sees proper to cancel them. So that if this section is adopted as written a citizen of the United States going out of this country in possession of a valid passport may have his passport canceled and may be forbidden to come back to this country. And from that order canceling his passport and exiling him from the country in which he was born and to which he may be altogether loyal and devoted there is no appeal. There is no recourse to a court, there is no due process of law, there is no right of trial by jury.

The Constitution of the United States is a very interesting document. It is still in force, although we are at war. I have grave doubts that this section of the bill is constitutional. It may be technically so, but undoubtedly it is violative of the spirit of the Constitution. Under the Constitution no American citizen can be exiled from his country. Under the Constitution no citizen may be deprived of his liberty without due process of law, which includes a hearing in some court. But under this provision of the bill a citizen temporarily and lawfully absent may be deprived of the right to come back to this country. He may be substantially and in effect put into exile, and without a hearing, without due process of law, without any opportunity to present his side.

It will be admitted by everyone that that is a fearful and a tremendous power to lodge in any authority. If the President could be conceived as exercising this power upon his own discretion, his own initiative, it would still be a fearful and a tremendous power. It would still be of more than doubtful Americanism. But, as we know, it is impossible for him to administer this law personally. The President will not deal with these things himself. He will not deal with them through any member of the Cabinet. He will not deal with them through any important officer of the Government. They will be dealt with through some remote subordinate, through some small clerk, through some one whose zeal may far outrun his judgment. That is absolutely necessary. When we pass this bill we should understand once and for all that we are clothing some little subordinate far down the line, who perhaps has never seen the President, with power to bar an American citizen out of his native country upon a mere suspicion and without a syllable of proof against him.

Are we prepared to go to such lengths? I want to win this war. I believe I want to win this war more than anybody wants to win it, because in addition to the reasons and the considerations that move other men I believe that I hate war worse than anybody else. I want to win so that we may have peace. One of the things for which I hate war is that it brings about just such legislation as this that is proposed. Much of such legislation is inevitable, much of it must be passed and must be submitted to. Democracies find it hard to wage efficient war. When war comes we find that the principles that democracies have long cherished and have bled for are given up one by one, little by little, piece by piece, until at last, if those who concern themselves merely with carrying on the war have their complete will, there will be left no democracy, no liberty, but only autocracy, because autocracy can wage the most efficient war.

I realize that we who love liberty must give up many things that we have cherished, and I am willing to give up mine. I give them up gladly, but I give them up with an awful and sickening fear in my soul that perhaps some of them may never come back to me and to my people. But as we give them up let us see that we give up only so much as is necessary to carry on the war. Let us not go beyond what is reasonable, what is fair, what is proper. Oh, of course, I know that if you take a third assistant prosecuting attorney he would require every man charged with crime to prove that he is innocent. He has dealt only with criminals. He feels that everybody is a criminal, and thereafter he wants all to be required to prove their innocence. Sometimes you find a man higher up, charged with the enforcement of the criminal laws, who does not hold these severe and unreasonable views. It is the same thing when we come to a man who is carrying on any enterprise. It is the same with men who are carrying on war. They want everything subordinated to carrying on war, and if a thing squints at all toward helping the war they think of absolutely nothing else. So it is with men who are chasing down disloyal citizens and who have got spies on the brain. They want everybody to be subjected to the most strenuous rules and tests. They want everybody to have to prove his innocence.

But I have not forgotten, Mr. Speaker, that this is still America. I have not forgotten what it takes to constitute Americanism. I have not forgotten that the recognition of man's right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is what makes this country worth fighting for. I have not forgotten the Constitution, which guarantees to every citizen that he shall not be deprived of life, liberty, or property except by due process of law.

I have given myself to this war. I am fighting, so far as I can, with every nerve and every fiber of my being for America and Americanism. It is for these things and for their preservation that I am committed to this war and that I voted for it, and I mean to carry it through with every ounce of strength and every thought and every emotion that I can command. But as I carry it through I do not lose sight of the glorious things that make this country what it is and worth fighting for—liberty, democracy, the right to be a free American, to come and go, to live under the institutions for which our ancestors died. These are the things that make us willing to fight. If we are to have Prussianism here, with military courts trying citizens on suspicion, as was proposed by a recent foolish bill which the President condemned as unnecessary and unconstitutional, there will be much less for us to fight for. If we are to have men exiled without a trial; if we are to have men denied their liberty without due process of law; if we are to have native-born American citizens whose ancestors perhaps fought the Revolution, who perhaps have themselves bared their breasts to the bullets of the enemy—if we are to have such men as that, accidentally caught outside the country, prevented by some petty official from returning to their homes on a bare suspicion, without a trial or hearing, it seems to me that there will be something less to fight for than there was before.

I think it is a very serious thing to provide that an American can not go out of this country without somebody's permission, but I would be willing to concede that; but when that American is out of this country I say he ought to have the right to come back. If he has been guilty of improper conduct, punish him; if he has been guilty of treason or disloyalty, hang him. No man would be willing to go further in punishing treason or disloyalty than I would. But give him a trial under the forms of law.

Stand by the Constitution; preserve what our ancestors achieved in their struggle; keep this country as they left it, so that it may be handed down to your children as they handed it down to us. No man's liberty should be taken from him without a hearing, without due process of law. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not share the fears entertained by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] with reference to the effect of some of our legislation. However, I agree with him in his contention that the amendment which is before you should be adopted. If I did not believe that the same spirit that is causing us to wage war against Germany and Austria will cause us to return to the usual practices of peace after this war is over, I would not vote for these grants of power, and vote for them now only because we have come to conclude they are necessary for the prosecution of this war.

But while I believe with the majority in this House that it is necessary in order to successfully wage the war to vest in the executive departments wide powers in many respects, at the same time I am not willing to vest any greater or wider powers than may be necessary under the circumstances. While I am perfectly willing that citizens in order to leave the United States shall be required to procure passports, I do not believe that a citizen of the United States, who happens to find himself away from home, should be required to appeal, perhaps vainly, to some subordinate in some department for permission to return to his native country.

Now, it was argued in committee that the reason for this provision was that in some instances American citizens were in foreign countries who were suspected of being disloyal and the department did not want to permit such citizens to return to the United States.

Gentlemen of the House, these are the citizens, if disloyal, that I believe we should have within the jurisdiction of the United States and within the jurisdiction of our courts, so that they may punish them for any treasonable conduct on their part or for acts of disloyalty against the United States Government. The reason given by gentlemen from the departments was that they did not want to be bothered with them over in this country; they did not want to be required to watch them and keep track of them in the United States.

I take it, gentlemen of the House, that if there be such a citizen of the United States in Holland or some foreign country, the agents of this Government could do more to prevent him from or detect him in his disloyal activity and treasonable conduct if he were on American soil, where they would have an opportunity to detect any violation of the law on his part, than if he were in a neutral country like Sweden or Holland, where he would be at liberty to ply the activities of an enemy.

Now, for the reason that I do not believe a citizen who is loyal, a citizen who desires to return home and is faithful and true to the country in this time of war, should be required to obtain a passport to come back into the country, because I believe that if disloyal citizens be permitted to come back the United States can here put its hands on them if they have not been true to our country, I believe the words in line 12, "or enter," should be stricken from the bill, and the same words in line 13, page 3, should be stricken from the bill.

As to the provisions in the bill which propose to restrict the movements of aliens to and from the United States I heartily agree, because I take it in this time of war no alien should have the right to come and go freely over the boundaries of the United States. The proper department of the Government should have the right to control his action. But, my friends, the time has certainly not arrived when a loyal American citizen, already away from home, should not be permitted to return home whenever he may see fit to do so.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Under the terms of section 2 as written, suppose a citizen were in Mexico attending to business at the time the proclamation was made. Would not he be permitted to return under the provisions of the law?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. He would not, unless the President under the provisions of section 2 should make a general regulation concerning such a case, or give special permission in his case, or unless he should obtain a passport.

Mr. SISSON. How would it affect a man on official business in South America, out of the United States?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I take it, of course, that if he were there on official business he would have a passport or be given one.

Mr. SISSON. Suppose he is on official business and they should deny him a passport. Suppose, for instance, the official in Brazil, the consul, should deny him a passport?

Mr. FLOOD. It would be pretty good evidence, then, that he ought not to get back.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will say in reply to the gentleman that, as I understand this bill, it does not mean that he shall have a passport from the Government from which he comes to the United States, but that he shall have a passport or permission from the United States to enter the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, yes. He would not be permitted to take passage on a ship if in a foreign country unless he had a passport. The master of the ship would not take him unless he could land him, and we have provisions that the consuls and various officials of the United States Government at various ports shall issue passports.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understand that.

Mr. SISSON. If I should happen to be in South Africa, would my right to return be finally determined by some little subordinate?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Under the provisions of this bill, unless the President provided by general regulations permitting the return of such individual, or granted permission in that particular case, he could be refused a passport.

Mr. FLOOD. It would go to the State Department, and not be decided by a subordinate official.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Oh, to be sure, it would go to the State Department.

Mr. SISSON. But I might be delayed in getting home.

Mr. FLOOD. Would it not be better to have the gentleman delayed in getting home than to run the risk of having a lot of traitors, who have left this country and gone to Germany, get the chance to come back here and spy on our military operations?

Mr. SISSON. But if a man is a bona fide citizen of the United States, his citizenship ought not to be treated so lightly. I am in sympathy with the bill, but I do not like to have a mistake made by excluding a man who is a bona fide citizen, born and reared here, and who is loyal to the Government.

Mr. FLOOD. There are hundreds of bona fide American citizens to-day in Germany who are not loyal to this country, and our Government knows they are not loyal to this country, and yet the gentleman's idea would be to permit them to come back here and spy on the operations of our Military Establishment and on the other operations of the Government.

Mr. SISSON. If they are not loyal and are in Germany, I agree literally with the gentleman from Texas, that this is the place where we do want them, so we might try them here in our courts and punish them.

Mr. FLOOD. There are others whose loyalty is suspected, but there is not enough evidence to convict them in a court of justice.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to take issue with the distinguished chairman of our committee, but another objection to this requirement is that a citizen who is in South America or any other distant country would necessarily have difficulty in communicating with the State Department here in Washington and presenting the facts necessary to obtain a passport, and if, as stated by the chairman, there be American citizens in Germany who are disloyal to the Government, and whom the Government knows to be disloyal, then with that proof in an American court, within our jurisdiction, we could place them where there would be no danger of their leaving the country with or without a passport, because we would put them in prison or inflict upon them even more severe punishment. They would be guilty of treason. I am not in favor, in the case of a citizen about whom there is merely a suspicion, when there is no proof whatever, of hurling the ban, as it were, against him and preventing his return to the United States. What is suspicion? Unless suspicion is backed up by proof or by facts it becomes the most unjust and oppressive weapon that can possibly be employed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] has five minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 6, after the word "States," insert the words:
"Provided, That the provisions of paragraph (a) of section 1 and sections 2 and 3 of this act shall not apply to citizens of the United States going to and from Canada nor the citizens of Canada going to and from the United States, nor shall it apply to vessels operating between the ports of the United States and the ports of Canada."

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, my district is the city of Seattle, and that country and the people are associated intimately with the development of Alaska. Our investments are enormous, the trade is enormous, and any measure which strikes at the freedom of transportation strikes at the very heart of our industrial and commercial life. Thousands travel to and from Alaska, going through British Columbia, Canadian territory. The Government is at present building an immense railroad system in Alaska. We are getting laborers there from various places in British Columbia, from the United States, from every point they can be secured. If these men all have to have passports, and every time a citizen of my town goes into the Yukon Valley—and I may say there are 60 steamers out of my city plying to various points in Alaska—it would be a great inconvenience to them. Seattle is the gateway into Alaska. It always has been and always will be. Our people go and come as between Baltimore and Washington. It is true we can make application for passports to the district court, but it would take, it is safe to say, a month for our people to get passports. I realize, and no one realizes more than I, the necessity for this law as to all countries of Europe, the neutral countries, Mexico and to Cuba.

But as to our ally on the north, Canada, with whom we have so long remained in a friendly intercourse, I can see nothing that would cause us at this time to require our people to have a passport going to Canada. It would be an extraordinary hardship upon the people of Puget Sound and the city of Seattle, being as they are so far away from the Capital of our country. It would take so much time to secure passports, I can conceive of nothing that would tend to dwarf the development of Alaska as to prohibit the free interchange of our people both Canadians into Alaska and Americans into Canada. I was in hopes that the committee would see fit to adopt an amendment of this character. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin used all his time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin has 12 minutes and the gentleman from Virginia 16 minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. [After a pause.] I notice that the gentleman is not here, and I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the House I desire to say a word or two in regard to the unfortunate sinking of the St. Paul in the harbor of New York a few days ago. Reports have been spread that at the time of the sinking the St. Paul was under the command of Navy officers and manned by naval crews and that the accident was attributable to this cause. I have taken the trouble to investigate the matter, and I find that the St. Paul at the time she went down at her dock had not been repaired at the navy yard, was not officered by Navy officers, was not manned by a naval crew, and was not under naval control or supervision, and that all reports that she was under naval management are erroneous. She had a civilian crew, under civilian officers, and the ship came from a civilian yard after being repaired under civilian supervision.

And I want to say in regard to the president of the American Line, which owns the St. Paul, Mr. Franklin, that he is a man of the greatest ability and experience, a man who is now rendering the most efficient service to the Government in connection with the Shipping Board. While this accident was most lamentable, it was not the fault of the Navy in any way, and in justice to the Navy I desire to make this statement. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can tell us what caused the accident? How was it brought about?

Mr. HICKS. The reports have not been made public, and I can only tell the gentleman what is surmised to be the cause, but I would prefer to tell my colleague in confidence, if he will allow me to do so.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to talk about the bill, but I am going to take five minutes to put in the RECORD some patriotic lines written by one of the employees of the House. I was requested to do this, not by the young man himself but by another Member of Congress, to whom he had shown the lines. The first is entitled "Buy a liberty bond," and is as follows:

BUY A LIBERTY BOND.

Will you respond and buy a bond
And help your Uncle Sam?
This appeals to you and appeals to me,
And should appeal to every man.
Remember the boys that are over the sea;
They are fighting for you and fighting for me.
You may not be able to follow them there,
But you can back them up by doing your share;
So get busy to-day with the liberty loan,
And help those brave soldiers and protect your home.
(James J. Kenah.)

Another poem, of a few lines, he denominates "America," and I will read it:

AMERICA.

America is stripped for action,
She's in this great world's war;
And America will win it,
For she's in it to the core.
America is honest;
She wants no gold nor land;
It's justice that she stands for;
Yes; justice she demands.

Fair Liberty has lit the world
And will continue so,
And when she strikes with all her might
She hits a powerful blow;
And when that blow's delivered
The world will safer be;
America, we wait for thee, to spread democracy.
(James J. Kenah.)

As will be seen, these lines were written by James J. Kenah, who is the chief page in the cloakroom, and I wanted to preserve the patriotism of this young man, an employee of this House, in the RECORD, because it breathes the right sort of spirit and expresses sentiments that find response in every heart here. I believe in encouraging boys to write such lines as this. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a very necessary bill, to fill up an unfortunate gap that now exists in our law. We have no law to prevent the travel to and from this country of American citizens of neutral or friendly nations. Our ports are open, so far as the law is concerned, to alien friends, citizens, and neutrals, to come and go at will and pleasure, and that notwithstanding the Government may suspect the conduct and the intention of the individuals who come and go. No other nation engaged in this war has gone so long without enacting a strict law forbidding people going out and coming into the country.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question or two?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. In reading the bill it appears that some permit or certificate other than a passport is to be given to the persons who desire to travel. That is true, is it not?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. So it will be something in addition to a passport, whenever a passport may be necessary?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; that is true with reference to aliens.

Mr. WALSH. Now, then, will the gentleman state, if he knows, upon what department or official the power to issue permits or certificates will probably be conferred by the President?

Mr. FLOOD. Upon the Department of State, in conjunction with the Department of Justice, as I understand.

Mr. WALSH. It will probably be an official who will represent both those departments?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; or, rather, officials.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman state whether this law would apply to travel between the ports of the United States and the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. FLOOD. As I understand, the purpose of the department is that they will require identification of all persons going to Hawaii and Alaska or to any of the other Territorial possession of this country. Passports will not be required, but some identification of the person will be required, so that our officials at those ports may know that the persons traveling are American citizens and not under suspicion.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am with the gentleman on the general proposition of enforcing strictly a law of this kind; but would the operation of this law be confined to the period of the war?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes. That is on the face of it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The President can issue the proclamation when the Nation is at war, but there is nothing in the bill limiting the time of the operation of the act.

Mr. FLOOD. It was understood that the language was intended to convey that idea, and to my mind it does convey that idea.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. Of course, Alaska is noncontiguous territory with the United States, but the travel from the Pacific ports to Alaska is identically on the same basis as travel between the States, is it not?

Mr. FLOOD. The people of Hawaii have stated the same thing. If we are to whittle away the power that we give to the Government to protect itself from spies coming in from any one section in order to prevent inconvenience to the people who go to Alaska or to Hawaii or from Washington to Canada, then we had better not pass the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes. What is it?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Has the department ever heard of a spy coming into this country from Canada?

Mr. FLOOD. I have never heard of it, and——

Mr. MILLER of Washington. And no one else has.

Mr. FLOOD. And the department never required a passport from a person going into Canada, and they do not expect to require a passport from any person going into Canada. There is no reason for injecting this amendment into this bill, because it is not the purpose to require passports. But if a condition should develop in the future whereby the department would consider that the travel to and from Canada was dangerous to the interests of this country in the prosecution of this war, then the power to protect this country from Canadian travelers would be necessary just as it would be in the case of travelers from Mexico or any other country.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. FARR. If they could not come in from any other country, they would try very hard to come in from Canada, would they not?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes. I think we should pass this bill and give our Government the power that every other government engaged in this war has had to protect itself from spies and informers who come to create trouble for the country or disaster for its interests, even if it does for a time inconvenience our neutral friends or friendly allies, and even if our own citizens are inconvenienced. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] would like to exempt American citizens coming into this country. I can not conceive of any department of this Government intrusted with the enforcement of this law which would so far forget its functions and its duties as to subject citizens needlessly to petty annoyances who happen to be out of the country when this law goes into effect. If there are American citizens in foreign lands who are under suspicion, who have gone into Germany since this war was declared, those are people who ought to be now out of this country and kept out until the war ends. If their conduct subjects them to charges of disloyalty or treason they should be properly dealt with. But many of them have conducted themselves so that the charge of disloyalty or treason could not be sustained in a court of justice, and yet our Government knows that they are not loyal and that their presence here would be dangerous to the country. Some are native American citizens and some are naturalized citizens, and the adoption of the Huddleston amendment would permit them to come back here without submitting themselves to any investigation. It would be dangerous to take down the bars for that class of people. It may subject individuals to inconvenience, but——

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I would like to ask if this bill has been laid before the President and has received the President's approval?

Mr. FLOOD. It has not only received the President's approval, but he has telephoned to Members of this House and advocated its immediate passage.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. As a war measure?

Mr. FLOOD. As a war measure.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Was that before the change was made or afterwards?

Mr. FLOOD. The President telephoned to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] a few days ago.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman know whether the President had ever read the bill or not?

Mr. FLOOD. I presume he has read it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I understand he wants some bill; but is it this particular bill that he wants?

Mr. FLOOD. It is this bill that he wants passed in the very shape it is in and in the very shape that the gentleman from Alabama opposes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman does not know whether this bill has been specifically brought to his attention?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know that the President has read every line in the bill, but I do know that representatives of the Department of State know every word in it; and the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor and the War and Navy Departments have all been trying in one way or another to keep these undesirable people out of this country and they have been unable to do so. I know that the representatives of all of these departments know the bill in all of its details and approve it just as it was reported from the committee. We have no law to protect this country, and the only protection we have now is that when people want to go out a clearance will not be given to the ship unless everybody on board has a passport. The only way to prevent these spies from coming in is through the activities and vigilance of the naturalization agents. We have no way at present of punishing the guilty or preventing them from violating or attempting to violate the regulations of the State Department in reference to passports. Those departments of the Government that I have mentioned have been for a year struggling with this question, and now their representatives and the President ask that Congress pass a law with teeth in it. [Applause.]

I hope this House will pass this bill just as it is reported, and vote down the two amendments, the one offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] and the one offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Washington. My purpose in asking that question was this: The Delegate from Alaska [Mr. SULZER] and myself called at the White House this morning. We failed to see the President personally, but we were advised that so far as they knew the President knew nothing about this measure.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know who gave the gentleman that information. The President has conveyed to me on two occasions his deep interest in this bill. The Postmaster General has talked to me frequently about it and said the President was very much interested in it, and that was after it was reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Two days ago the President talked to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] over the telephone in reference to the passage of this bill, and urged that the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was then pending, be set aside for the time being, and that this bill be put in its place and passed. He urged it on account of the great importance of this measure.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I am in entire sympathy with the purpose of the bill. I do not know how long the proclamation will be in force. What is the technical effect of a proclamation made in time of war? Will it cease automatically with the close of the war?

Mr. FLOOD. When the war ends the regulations will end. There is no necessity of any passport in time of peace. Our law authorizes passports, but they are for the protection of the citizens who get the passports, who ask for them. We are asking for the passage of this law in order to protect the Government and the country.

Mr. Speaker, we have rules and regulations of the Department of State to control the travel to and from the country of American citizens, friendly aliens, and neutrals, but the rules and regulations go beyond the law and if there was a test made of them they could not be upheld.

There is no punishment for the violation of these regulations, and they are only partially enforced by resorting to methods that were not intended to meet a situation that confronts the country at this time and is a very inadequate method of enforcement. Entry into the country can only be controlled through the immigration agencies and departure from the country by denying clearance to vessels unless all of their passengers have passports.

All nations engaged in war have found it necessary to control travel to and from their countries, and when the war began in 1914 all of the belligerent nations adopted a stringent system of regulations in regard to such travel. Germany has from time to time closed her borders entirely.

Our laws are no stronger than they were in times of peace, and it exposes our country to the danger of having military information and other information of a vital character in the conduct of the war conveyed to the enemy through spies and informers, who, under our laws, can come and go without hindrance.

These spies are not only Germans, but in many instances have been neutrals, and in some instances have been renegade American citizens. Our authorities may suspect a man of being a spy, but it is very difficult to prove this fact; especially is this difficult when the man is an American citizen abroad who is desirous of coming home. A broad discretion must be vested in the Government to protect the country against this danger, and it is better to take the chance of keeping out an alien, a neutral, or even an American citizen who is perfectly innocent of any wrongdoing to the country rather than take a chance of having aliens and neutrals who are in the pay of our enemies and renegade citizens coming here and going back and forth to give information to the enemy which might result in having some of our transports sunk and our soldiers murdered, or in having some of our munition plants in this country destroyed, or to insidiously spread German propaganda, or to carry from this country information to the enemy.

The power vested in the President by this bill is broad and comprehensive, but it is essential to meet the situation that the Executive should have wide discretion and wide authority of action. No one can foresee the different means which may be adopted by the German Government and its allies to secure military information or spread propaganda and discontent. It is obviously impracticable to appeal to Congress for legislation for each new emergency. Swift executive action is the only effective remedy for such a situation.

This law is urgently needed and should be passed without delay and without opposition. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to offer that amendment.

There was no objection.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLER of Washington) there were 16 ayes and 44 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11185) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be dispensed with.

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, may I ask for the information of the House if it is expected that after this bill passes any other legislation will be brought up this afternoon?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman, no; that I will then move to adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think there ought to be a little general debate.

Mr. DENT. I will say to the gentleman that I have an understanding with my colleagues on the other side on this committee, as the gentleman from California informs me that he has several requests for time, that I shall not object to extending the time under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. DENT was then agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the time has arrived in this country when we must deal severely with spies, dynamiters of munition factories, and profiteers. I believe the profiteer who defrauds his country in this crisis, especially if he has a contract to furnish war materials, is a traitor to his country, should be stood up against the wall, and taken care of by the firing squad. We are asking people to buy bonds, savings stamps, to conserve food, fuel, and other materials necessary to win this war, and asking them to deny themselves that the country might more effectually prosecute the war to a successful conclusion. If we are to ask the people of this country to save, it is our duty to protect in every way possible the expenditure of every dollar so raised.

A man who would defraud his Government during this crisis is guilty of treason. He is disloyal; he is as bad as a spy. He is as bad a man as one who would blow up a munitions factory, and he should pay the awful penalty. The official who assists him is equally guilty and should suffer the same penalty.

The one who knows of such defrauding and does not disclose it to the proper official should not be handled with gloves. Alongside of the alien enemy, the disloyalist, the blower-up of munitions factories, the destroyer of war materials, the food destroyer, the preacher of disloyalty, the plotter against the country, is the profiteer, and they all should be introduced to the firing squad.

Whoever takes advantage of his country's peril in the hour of its greatest crisis is the meanest man in the country. Such a person would betray his country, would sell his family into bondage, would commit any crime known to man. The time is going to come when we will have to treat severely with spies, dynamiters, and profiteers.

If a few of these traitors were occasionally introduced to the firing squad, it would be better for the country. Let the people of this country know that the profiteer and defrauder of his country is to be severely punished and as soon as possible.

Above all, let the profiteer know that he is going to be punished and branded as a traitor and he will not be so handy in defrauding his country. He should be treated as an armed enemy. This is no hour for trifling. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of officers of the Army on detached service at the Military Academy.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to obtain a parliamentary opportunity to insert in the RECORD information contained in a letter which I have received from The Adjutant General of the Army, written at my request, in which he shows in detail the pay and all the so-called perquisites and emoluments of commissioned officers of the Regular Army. There have been many more or less fantastic ideas in the popular mind that in addition to the statutory pay the commissioned officer is in a position to derive financial benefit from various changes in location of posts or assignments to duty, and that there also inures to him in one way or another some kind of benefit which is hazily and loosely classed as "perquisites and emoluments." Anyone who is familiar with the subject knows that no money is paid out of the Treasury except by authority of law, and that all pay and benefits that go to any officer in the Army are in every detailed item prescribed by law.

It is only fair to say, moreover, that the pay of an officer of the Army is not by any means as substantial compensation as some people probably imagine it to be, taking into consideration the fact that the officer must furnish his own subsistence and buy his own uniforms and equipment, which latter are necessarily expensive and sometimes change in the character and type required by regulations before they are worn out by ordinary use. Besides that, it should be remembered that the Army officer has no permanent home in peace time, but is required to move, with his family, if he has one, every now and then from post to post up and down the country or across the seas, and we all know that "three removes are as bad as a fire."

All in all, his pay as it averages with his years of experience and service is probably not as favorable as the salary generally given to men of corresponding qualifications and responsibilities in civil life. It is small wonder, then, that the average Army officer can not expect to put by much, if anything, for the proverbial "rainy day," as men do in civil occupations, but is compelled, in the very nature of things, to expect that his old age will be supported only by the allowance that he will get by law upon his retirement from active service.

Without taking any further time, I will suggest that it may be to the advantage of some occasional inquirer if he can find in the RECORD a concise, complete, and authoritative statement of the pay and allowances of a commissioned officer of the Army.

Mr. WELLING. I would like to ask the gentleman if the pay of the cadets is in his list.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No; they are not officers of the Army.

Mr. WELLING. What is the pay of a cadet?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Six hundred dollars a year; but the gentleman will appreciate the fact that he does not get that in money; it is a credit allowance against which certain things are charged to him on his account from time to time. If at the end of his period of instruction there is some part left, that small balance, according to long-established practice, it generally employed toward furnishing him his outfit for the service he is to enter as an officer.

Mr. DYER. How much does a young man have to deposit in the Military Academy when he enters?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am not informed as to the present regulation about that.

Mr. DENT. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. DYER. How much money does a young man on entering the Military Academy have to deposit?

Mr. DENT. I think $500.

Mr. McKENZIE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I understand it is $100, for the purpose of buying an outfit, but he gets that back. The purpose is to protect the Government from cadets coming in and only staying a short length of time.

Mr. DYER. Does he get it back after he has been there a certain time or does he have to wait until he graduates?

Mr. McKENZIE. I presume he gets it as soon as he has been there long enough so that the Government is sure that it will not be a loser.

Mr. DYER. According to the present law and practice, I understand that a young man entering the Academy has to deposit sums which run up to $300, and it is not an easy matter for poor boys to get that sum off of poor parents of boys who enter to pay it to start with.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand that whatever may be the situation now—and these regulations may have been changed in regard to these deposits—it is exacted only as an earnest of good faith. It is the practice and it is the law that a cadet shall have his education and equipment during education furnished free, and in the end it amounts to that. He is supposed to be put to no expense in attending the academy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing the document referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

Further, any retired officer who has or shall be detailed on active duty shall receive the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade not above that of major that he would have attained in due course of promotion if he had remained on the active list for a period beyond the date of his retirement equal to the total amount of time during which he has been detailed on active duty since his retirement. (Act approved June 3, 1916.)

The Clerk read as follows:

Four cooks, at $38 each per month (increase $384 submitted), $1,824.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. Ought not the language "(increase $384 submitted)," in lines 19 and 20, be stricken out?

Mr. DENT. They should.

Mr. KAHN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, in lines 19 and 20, page 4, by striking out the language "(increase $384 submitted)."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words "(increase $384 submitted)."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from California what the figures "$1,824" mean at the end of that line 20?

Mr. KAHN. That is the total for the four cooks for the year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of Engineer detachment: One first sergeant, at $51 per month, $612.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a few remarks on the pension question. I understand that it is the present plan of the majority to bring up the House general pension bill on next Monday under suspension of the rules. The bill as reported to the House, as gentlemen will understand, provides for a 30 per cent increase, with a minimum of $25. It also has in section 3 two provisions to which there is a great amount of objection by the old soldiers of the country. That section provides that anyone having an income of $1,000, including the pension, shall not be entitled to any of the increase provided for in the bill. It also provides that the inmate of any soldiers' home shall not be entitled to any increase provided for in the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. What percentage of the old soldiers will the bill apply to if these exceptions are put in?

Mr. BLAND. A very large percentage, because the majority of them, of course, have not a thousand dollar income, and the majority of them are not in the soldiers' homes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, my recollection is that 19,000 of the Union soldiers of the Civil War are in the soldiers' homes, and they would not take any benefits by this increase of pension; and if the gentleman will allow me also in his time, and I think the committee will extend the time for five minutes more if the gentleman desires, these 19,000 in the national homes come from all over the country. I would not undertake to speak accurately as to the number of Union soldier survivors who are not in the homes.

Mr. MAPES. Do the 19,000 include the inmates of State homes as well as the national homes?

Mr. CANNON. I think not.

Mr. BLAND. The bill provides "State or National homes."

Mr. CANNON. We contribute $100 a year to these State homes, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. BLAND. Yes; they are partly supported by the Federal Government. If this matter comes up under suspension of the rules, there will be no opportunity for amendment, and very little chance for debate. I think the majority of the House want to amend the bill. I feel that at this time the old soldier is the man who is hit hardest by the high cost of living. His little pittance of $17 or $22.50, as the case may be, does not go very far. I think it is a serious matter to which consideration ought to be given at this time, and a bill should be passed by this Congress that will give them substantial relief. The bill to be acted upon Monday provides for a $25 minimum. I think the majority of this Congress are in favor of at least a $30 minimum, but unless we have the opportunity of amending it and bringing it up as a privileged report or considering it under a special rule we will have no opportunity of voting for a $30 minimum or of voting to strike out section 3.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Will not the Committee on Rules bring in a rule making it in order to consider the bill so that we can amend it?

Mr. BLAND. I think they would if the matter were presented to them properly and by the proper parties. A number of that committee have signified their disposition to do so, and it is also a privileged matter. It stands to-day on the Calendar as highly privileged as any other matter before this body, and it should be presented now as a privileged matter. I do not think the matter ought to come up under suspension of the rules so as to avoid the opportunity of amendment, but it seems that it is the deliberate purpose of the majority to do so.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman know when it is the intention to bring this before the House?

Mr. BLAND. Next Monday, under suspension of the rules.

Mr. ANTHONY. I agree with the gentleman that it would be unfortunate to have that done.

Mr. BLAND. That is the reason why I am raising the question at this time. I think Members ought to insist that this bill be brought out under special rule or as a privileged matter.

This bill appropriates, as I remember it, and Gen. SHERWOOD will correct me if I am in error, $29,000,000, quite a sum to pass under suspension of the rules without any consideration as to where it shall go and without any opportunity of amendment and very little opportunity for debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In answer to the suggestion made by some gentleman a moment ago touching the matter of a special rule, as one member of the Committee on Rules I have this view of the matter, that where the Pension Committee has under the general rules of the House a day every two weeks that no special rule is necessary.

Mr. BLAND. It is my understanding that that day every two weeks is for omnibus private bills and not general bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is for general pension legislation.

Mr. BLAND. No; I do not think so. I understand that the Committee on Pensions is privileged to make a report the same as the other privileged matters, and I am also informed reliably that there is no other bill on the calendar to which a higher privilege attaches. It may be brought up this afternoon and considered, and I hope amended and passed.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman will permit, in response to what the gentleman from Tennessee said, if it is so that the Committee on Pensions has a right every other week to bring up their bills, would not that be a strong argument against bringing it up on suspension day, because it would show that the only reason for bringing it up was to avoid any amendments?

Mr. BLAND. That seems to me to be self-evident.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, I am not arguing that question. I am merely saying, as one member of the Committee on Rules, I do not think a special rule is necessary or ought to be expected from that committee for a committee that has the power to legislate every two weeks.

Mr. BLAND. As I understand it, under its privileged standing on the calendar the only thing essential is recognition by the Chair—that is, on days not set apart for unanimous consent, suspension of the rules, or other special matters. If you can get recognition of the Chair, you do not need a special rule; if you can not get recognition of the Chair, you ought to have the special rule.

Mr. TILSON. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. BLAND. I will gladly yield to my friend from Connecticut for that purpose.

Mr. TILSON. Do I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that on any Friday known as pension day it would be in order for the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to rise and make a motion that the House go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of pension bills of a general nature?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the provision of the rule.

Mr. TILSON. That it would have a privileged status the same as an appropriation bill on any other day?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why, the general rules of the House provide that general pension legislation is a privileged matter.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is correct as to the rule of privileged matters, but not as to its being privileged by reason of the rule as to private pension bills on Friday.

Mr. BLAND. I do not think the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERWOOD] so understands that, and I know that he has been trying to get this bill up, and I do not think he understood that he had the right to report this bill as a privileged report on pension day, but if it was entitled to be reported at all, it would be as privileged. It could be called up for consideration on pension day; but, if so, it would be because it was privileged under the rules and not because it was pension day.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It is private pension day, not general.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask that the gentleman have an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOUSE BILL AND MR. BLAND'S REPORT.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], chairman of the committee, has just stated that he understands Friday is private pension day and not for general bills, and that is the understanding of the committee, I am sure, and we have been working on that theory. I desire to insert as a part of my remarks a copy of the House bill reported by the honored chairman of our Invalid Pensions Committee, Gen. SHERWOOD, and also a copy of that portion of the report which contains my personal views on the subject:

A bill increasing rates of pensions of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War.

Be it enacted, etc., That the rate of pension of any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged therefrom, and who is now in receipt of a pension or shall hereafter be granted a pension under the provisions of any general law, or is now pensioned under a special act of Congress, and who is entitled to a pension less than $25 per month, shall be $25 per month.

In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 1 year, the rate of pension shall be $26 per month; 1½ years, $28 per month; 2 years, $30 per month; 2½ years, $31 per month; 3 years or over, $32.50 per month.

In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $27 per month; 6 months, $29 per month; 1 year, $31 per month; 1½ years, $35 per month; 2 years or over, $39 per month.

That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty, resulting in his disability, is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the rate of $39 per month, without regard to the length of service or age.

SEC. 2. That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and who was honorably discharged therefrom, and who is now pensioned or shall hereafter be pensioned under any general law, or who is now pensioned under special act of Congress at a rate of $20 per month or more, shall be entitled upon the passage of this act to receive in lieu thereof a rate which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, in multiples of 50 cents, nearest approximately 30 per cent additional to the present rate: Provided, That no rate of pension shall be granted under the provisions of this act in excess of $50 per month: Provided further, That no pension heretofore granted shall be reduced by this act.

SEC. 3. That no pensioner shall be entitled to receive any benefits under the provisions of this act for any period during which he shall be an inmate of any State or national soldiers' home, and the provisions of this act shall not apply to any pensioner whose net annual income from all sources, including his pension, is $1,000 or more.

SEC. 4. That the increased rates of pension provided by this act shall commence from the date of the approval of said act, or in case of original pensions hereafter allowed from the date of commencement of such pensions as provided by existing laws.

SEC. 5. That no attorney shall be recognized and no attorney fees shall be paid for the presentation or prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act.

VIEWS OF HON. OSCAR E. BLAND, OF INDIANA.

I fully concur with the views of the Committee on Invalid Pensions as to the provisions of House bill 9959 in so far as it increases fairly and equitably, though insufficiently, the amount of money to be paid to the pensioned soldiers of the Civil War. A minimum should be established, and an increased amount should be given on account of age and service. With these principles in the bill I also concur. And were it not for the extreme age and general deplorable physical disability of the soldiers of that war I would advocate but little change in this bill, but since about 37 per cent of them now on the pension rolls served more than two years, and since practically all of them are over 72 years of age, necessarily feeble and unable to perform manual labor, and since present war conditions have doubled the price of living, the amounts under the provisions of the bill appear to me to be absolutely inadequate. More than 95 per cent of the soldiers of the Union cause now on the pension roll have no income of consequence in addition to their pension.

I maintain that it is the duty of the Government to provide adequate and liberal means to cover the entire cost of supporting the surviving Civil War pensioned soldiers and their dependent families. I therefore favor a $30 minimum for any soldier of the Civil War now on the pension roll or who may hereafter be placed on the pension roll, and I favor the recognition of age and service to a maximum of $40 per month. And if I were convinced of the existence of a reasonable probability of obtaining a $50 maximum I would heartily advocate it.

The following short paragraph, if enacted into law, would, in my judgment, be the fairest and most practicable bill for enactment, considering the expense and all the valuable experiences derived from the trial of past pension legislation:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico,' approved May 11, 1912.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the general pension act of May 11, 1912, is hereby amended by adding a new section, to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. That from and after the passage of this amendment the rate of pension for any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service in the United States during the Civil War, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than $30 per month, shall be $30 per month.

"'In case such person has reached the age of 72 years and served six months, the rate shall be $32 per month; one year, $36 per month; one and a half years, $38 per month; two years or over, $40 per month: Provided, That this amendment shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.'"

The Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, concerning these identical figures and this paragraph, under date of February 15, 1918, says:

"The roll carries no class of survivors rated upon attained age of 72 years. It was ascertained by running through several thousand roll cards that about 75 per cent of the survivors pensioned upon the basis of attained age of 70 years were not between the ages of 72 and 75 years. The results of addition of this percentage of the 70-year class of the roll at the close of the last fiscal year to the 75-year class then on the roll by periods of service, and computation of the difference in annual rates at that time and the rates proposed by the bill, are shown in the following tabulation:

Age and length of service.	Number.	Increased cost per year.
Less than 72 years and served 90 days and over, and 72 years and over and served less than 6 months	2,171	$10,670,202
72 years and over and served 6 months and less than 1 year	39,163	5,099,178
72 years and over and served 1 year and less than 1½ years	42,083	6,209,772
72 years and over and served 1½ years and less than 2 years	24,785	4,165,542
72 years and over and served 2 years and over	111,739	15,959,268
Total	299,941	42,104,362

"The average annual increase is about $120. Allowance for death losses and other changes may be accepted to reduce the above total to $40,000,000, as representing the approximate cost of the bill for the first year should it become a law."

It will be observed that the number of soldiers who are less than 72 years of age and served 90 days and those who are over 72 years of age and served less than six months is 2,171, and that the total increased cost of paying this class of men $30 per month instead of what they are now receiving would only be $10,670,202, and that the total increase under this proposal would only be $40,000,000. The provisions of this above proposed bill, while not as much as was hoped for by the Grand Army of the Republic officials, who have stated their wishes to the committees of Congress having general pension legislation under consideration, it is declared to be, under the circumstances, satisfactory to them. After considerable investigation I am convinced that if the above provisions are agreed to by the House of Representatives they will soon be placed on the statute books.

If the above is enacted into law, special bills for increase of pension will be few. It will not, of course, change the number of bills for original pensions. The committee bill having a $25 minimum will not relieve the tremendous demand for special increase bills.

I am opposed to section 3 of the bill. There are very few soldiers receiving pensions who have $1,000 incomes. If we give the soldiers enough to live on, there will only be a few who will want to stay in the soldiers' home.

I fear too exacting proof of these two almost immaterial facts will be exacted by some unfriendly and technical departmental official, which will cause endless delay and general dissatisfaction.

The proposed bill I have offered as a substitute is an exact copy of the Smoot bill, introduced by Senator SMOOT in the Senate, and which has been favorably reported by the Senate Pensions Committee.

There are 16 men on the Invalid Pension Committee and while none of them have joined me in a report recommending a $30 minimum for the old Civil War soldier, I know that many of them feel on this question just as I do about the imperative needs of this class of soldier, and I am not attempting to pose as the only member of the committee who would like to see the soldiers affected by this bill get at least that amount of money, but my individual convictions, as well as my personal and party pledges, make it imperative that I not only strive in committee to do what I conceive to be my full duty to the soldier, but that I at least attempt to have my convictions acted upon by all my colleagues in the House.

In considering this bill, which is to increase the pensions of the soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, there are three things which I regard as fundamental:

First. The age of any survivor of the conflicts of the Civil War of itself is such as to disqualify him in almost every instance from performing manual labor. Some may earn a small wage, but, if so, it is usually from dire necessity and with great pain and misery.

Second. Regardless of what those who oppose pensions generally may say, it is a fact that most men on our pension rolls have depended upon their pensions for their support, to the extent that but few of them have any other source of income, and many of them by reason of war-incurred disabilities have never been physically able to accumulate anything for old age.

Third. The enormous increase in the cost of living, due largely to war conditions, has made the pittance received from the Government inadequate to supply the bare necessities of life for the Civil War soldier and his family.

When we are calling on our young men, the sons and grandsons of these honored heroes, to offer their lives in this the most terrible of wars; it would be a blunder and mistake to turn a deaf ear to the cry for help from the men who saved this Republic by the offer of their lives.

The second congressional district of Indiana, which I have the honor to represent, is proud of the fact that during the days of the Rebellion it did its full duty and sent its thousands to battle for the life of the Union. It to-day is honored by having as residents within its confines more old veterans of that terrible struggle than the average congressional district. I am not sure as to the cause of this condition; whether it is wholly due to the number who enlisted from my district or whether the old fellows just love to live down there among our hospitable folks, or whether it is due to both reasons. One of my colleagues, in a spirit of jest, the other day suggested that it was because we nearly always had a Member of Congress from that district on the Invalid Pensions Committee, but I know that this can not be true.

One thing is certain; they know their Congressman's address and they know how to write, and if they are too feeble to write they get some friend to write for them, and you may rest assured that, without regard to politics or formality of long acquaintance, they have been telling me what they expect of this Congress in no uncertain terms.

My heart has ached because of the suffering of some of these men to whom we owe so much. I know they are suffering, and if you have taken time to figure out what a dollar will buy to-day you know many of them are suffering. Seventeen dollars a month, or even a dollar a day, does not go far toward providing shelter, food, and clothing for a man and his family in these days. Some of these old friends have written me what they have to eat, what they wear, what kinds of homes they have to live in, and many of them tell of doctor bills and sickness. Should we neglect these men now, who in the twilight of their honored lives look to the Government they saved for us for help, we would be unworthy of the priceless privileges we now enjoy because of their sacrifices.

Some one says, "Let them go to the soldiers' home." Yes; let them go if they have to; but I hope this great Nation, this powerful Nation they saved, will not by its neglect force them in their feebleness or old age to leave their loved ones and their places of hallowed remembrances to go to a soldiers' home, no matter how well it may be managed or however comfortable it may appear.

They are fast passing away; they will not long honor us with their presence. Every 15 minutes one of these gallant men in blue hears the muffled drum and answers his last roll call. To those who object to the $40,000,000 increase I propose, let me say that practically all of it goes to the men over 70 years of age, and they necessarily can not be with us long. If I advocated this $40,000,000 increase solely on the ground of governmental generosity or solely on the ground of the payment of a just debt the Nation owed to its defenders or on the ground of the value of the example to the present-day generation, in either instance I would have an irresistible and unanswerable argument. But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I present it to you to-day not only as a generosity and a payment, but as a positive necessity, the hour of which must not be delayed.

Most of you men when in your districts back home have proclaimed your love for the soldier and have promised your support for "One dollar a day and more if necessary." Your party platforms, State and National, have slobbered all over the soldier; a very large per cent of you have introduced dollar-a-day bills and many of you have introduced them for larger sums. Now is the time to come to the front. You will never have a better opportunity. Since the close of the Civil War there never was a time when the welfare of the American soldier was nearer the hearts of Members of Congress or the American people in general than it is at this moment. But if you consider this bill under suspension of the rules you know you will not get the $30 minimum.

If, when you consider this bill, you adopt my amendment you will get rid of section 3, which I regard not only as unjust and unfair but as impracticable and very harmful to the purposes of the act. If you will give the old soldier enough to live on he won't want to go to a soldiers' home, and the Government will be relieved of his care there, and he will be a happy, contented, and patriotic citizen and an inspiration to the people of his community.

I have opposed the provision in this section which denies the increase provided for in the bill from a soldier whose income, including his pension, is a thousand dollars or more, for several reasons. One of them is sufficient—who is going to determine how much his income is? If it is a thousand dollars this year, how much will it be next year, and the next, and so on? Do you intend to give some unfriendly administrative officer the opportunity to "split hairs" and investigate and delay and worry these old felows until they die with old age? If you want to give them an increase, give it to them; do not dangle it before their eyes and then withhold it.

Gentlemen, I sincerely hope that this House will give us a chance to consider this bill under a special rule or as a privileged matter so that we can amend it and that you will adopt my amendment, providing for a $30 minimum. I will gladly vote for a $50 maximum, and if I thought my amendment would be passed by this House containing that amount as a maximum I would have so drafted it.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield so as to get this point of order straightened out?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. The rules say:

On Friday of each week, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, it shall be in order to entertain a motion for the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar in the following order—

And so forth.

I understand the bill to which the gentleman refers is on the Union Calendar, and it could not be brought up on Friday.

Mr. BLAND. That is my understanding. It could only be brought up as a privileged report, if you obtained recognition of the Chair, or it could be brought up on a rule from the Committee on Rules. I understand it is on the program to bring it up under suspension of the rules on suspension day next Monday. If that is done, gentlemen, you men who are friends of the soldiers and who feel in this time of war we ought to offer encouragement to the young soldiers by giving what their fathers and grandfathers are entitled to, will be forced into voting for a bill which, it is true, gives an increase, but which is not satisfactory, or you will be forced to vote against the passage of the bill under the suspension of the rules, and then be criticized for your failure to support an increase bill. I am in favor of bringing this matter up this afternoon before we close our labors and thrash this bill out and consider it in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and arrive at some just measure that will give the old soldiers of the country that to which they are so justly entitled. We have plenty of time this afternoon. Why not do it? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. CANNON. I find on examination that my recollection was correct, that under the rules of the House the business of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is privileged the same as any of the other committees.

"The following-named committees shall have the right to report at any time on matters herein stated," and there are a number of committees, including the Committee on Invalid Pensions with general pension bills, and that has been always construed, and uniformly construed, to make it in order at any time the chairman could be recognized to go into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAND. But he would have to have recognition of the Chair, would he not?

Mr. CANNON. He would have to have recognition of the Chair at any time in order to do anything.

Mr. BLAND. I do not think I am misstating a fact when I say that I think the Chair would be more inclined to recognize one who has a privileged report than one with a request for the suspension of the rules. I think, however, that there is a determination here to bring this bill up Monday under suspension of the rules to avoid amendment, and I do not think it ought to be permitted. I am glad to call attention to it at this time, so that you men who feel interested in this proposition will see to it that this House is not forced to swallow whole a bill that does not do justice to the old soldiers, and your mouths be closed from debate and you be denied the privilege of offering an amendment that will give substantial relief to the soldiers. I am calling your attention to it for that reason at this time.

Mr. McKENZIE. It takes a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules and pass the bill, does it not?

Mr. BLAND. Yes. This bill provides a 30 per cent increase. Would you vote against it, even though you knew there was some unjust features in the bill?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would not like——

Mr. BLAND. The House ought not to be put in an unfair position. We are in favor of an increase, and under such rules and regulations as will give speedy relief. For instance, if you vote for the present House bill, you will vote for a provision to prevent those who are getting $1,000 income from getting an increase. That provision in the law will entail long investigation and long delay and an army of employees being employed who will harass these men who are entitled to these increases now while they are alive and while prices are so high.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to address myself to the rule under which the pension bills are considered on every other Friday; that is, under Rule XXIV, clause 6, which provides for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The business of that day is confined to private pension bills and to the removal of political disabilities, and the chairman of the Committee on Pensions would not have the right on that day to call up general pension legislation such as is contemplated in the bill that has been reported by the committee. The rule reads with reference to pensions:

On the second and fourth Fridays of each month preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension claims and bills removing political disabilities and bills removing the charge of desertion. On every Friday, except the second and fourth Fridays, the House shall give preference to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims, alternating between the two committees.

This rule, therefore, does not give the chairman of the Committee on Pensions the right to call up his pension bill, a bill legislating generally on the pension subject, and the committee is confined entirely to bills on the Private Calendar, or what are known as private pension claims. I am sure the gentleman from Tennessee had overlooked the strictness of the rule under which the Pension Committee operates on every other Friday.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman give us his opinion as to whether this bill is a privileged bill and could be called up by the committee at any time without a rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In my judgment, yes.

Mr. TOWNER. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has the right to report at any time, just the same as the Committee on Rules has the right to report at any time a general bill.

Mr. MAPES. It has to be a privileged bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] on any Friday that he has the floor, or on any other day, could move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will permit me, this has the privileged status with regard to pension bills. If a general pension bill is reported it may be reported by the committee at any time under this provision which puts among the privileged reports such as those from the Committee on Rules, and appropriation bills, and also includes reports from the Invalid Pension Committee on general pension bills, so that they may be called up at any time by the chairman of the committee. Now, when it comes to private pension bills, those can not be called up at any time. They can only be called up on every other Friday under the other rule. So that we have those two privileged conditions regarding pension legislation. Now, this bill being a general pension bill, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions may call it at any time for consideration in the House.

Mr. BLAND. Clause 6 of paragraph 857 says "privileged bills reported under the right to report at any time," which includes reporting a motion for the consideration of a general bill from the Invalid Pension Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, upon the necessity for general pension legislation, no one will contend that the amounts now paid to the veterans of the Civil War are sufficient to meet the obligation that rests on Congress to meet the necessities of these veterans.

It is as much our duty to fully provide for their needs now as it was to provide for their needs when they were serving in the field. Mr. Chairman, the conditions have so changed, the prices of everything the veteran buys have increased to such an extent that the amount he receives is not enough to meet the merest necessities. There is no sort of contention that we ought not to keep the pledge that we made with the veterans of the war of the sixties and provide for their necessities in their old days. We are spending billions of dollars for war purposes to-day. We ought, while we are doing this, while we are paying for the war we are now waging, to have some regard for the debt we owe for the greatest war that we ever waged in our history. These men have a claim upon this country. They have a claim upon this Congress. We ought to meet that claim. While we are to-day ready and willing to spend these billions of dollars for waging a war the end of which no one can yet see, we ought at the same time to take a day off and provide for the necessities of the men who made it possible for us to have a country.

A rule is preferable to a motion to suspend the rules to pass a bill if a rule were necessary, but under the privileged character of the bill, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], a motion to suspend the rules ought not to be made on this bill.

There ought to be an opportunity to strike out section 3 of the bill that provides that no pension under it can be paid if the veteran has an income of a thousand dollars a year or is in a soldiers' home, and this section could not be stricken out under a motion to pass the bill under suspension. Every one of the claimants would be subjected to an examination with that section in, and, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], there would be literally hundreds of men in the field investigating every claimant to find out what his income was, whether it was $800 or $900 or $1,000 or $1,500. And if he had no income at all, still his claim would not be allowed until that matter was fully investigated to the satisfaction of the bureau, after an examination by an inspector.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I have perhaps made more of an effort to be recognized to bring up this bill than any Member of this House is aware of. I think I understand the whole situation. I tried to get a rule from the Committee on Rules. I have twice seen the chairman of that committee, and he partly promised to give us a rule.

I am in favor of allowing any amendment that the House wants to offer to this bill, but before I can bring in this bill, notwithstanding its privileged character, I must have recognition, as stated by my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], from the Speaker, and the Speaker has agreed to give me recognition whenever these important war measures are disposed of.

Now, in looking through the RECORD I find that on the 10th day of January, 1911, Mr. Sulloway, through Mr. FULLER, reported what is known as the Sulloway pension bill under a suspension of the rules. The vote on that bill, as I remember, after debate of 20 minutes on a side, was 212 for the bill and 62 against. There was no record vote by roll call. There were over 200,000 more soldiers alive at that time than there are to-day, and several gentlemen on the floor undertook to offer amendments and Mr. FULLER objected, and no amendments were allowed. As I understand the rules, anything can be done by unanimous consent, and so far as I am concerned individually—and I propose to have charge of the bill—I would be willing to give the House a chance to offer amendments if it can be done under the rule.

I do not think I need to say to the Members present that I am, and have been consistently, in favor of liberal pensions to my old comrades. In 1906 my district was Republican at the previous election by 18,642, and the Democrats wanted me to go on the ticket and run for Congress. I did not care to go back to Congress only as I thought I might be of some service to the comrades with whom I stood elbow to elbow for four years of that terrible war. [Applause.] On a vote of 62,000 I was elected by a plurality of 42. I never asked a soldier to vote for me in my life. I never wrote a letter to a soldier asking him to vote for me. I never wrote a letter to an individual asking him to vote for me. I never accepted a dollar from any private individual or any corporation in any of my campaigns. I never had the support of any Democratic daily newspapers, because we did not have any in our district. [Laughter.] On December 7, 1907, two days after I took my seat in the Sixtieth Congress, I introduced what is known as the Sherwood dollar-a-day pension bill, and I worked for that bill through the Sixtieth Congress, the Sixty-first Congress, and the Sixty-second Congress—in all, over four years—and on the 11th day of May, 1912, after a struggle, I think, of three days on the floor of this House, we passed the bill. It went over to the Senate. The Senate passed what was called the Smoot bill.

I have always believed that a pension should be for service or disability. I believe that the pension roll should be a roll of honor, and I have always felt that way ever since the war, and I feel that way now. Then we had conferees appointed between the Senate and the House. I was chairman of the conferees on the part of the House. Mr. MCCUMBER was chairman on the part of the Senate, and we labored for four months to perfect the bill. As I said before, that bill was adopted on the 11th of May, 1912, and was signed by the President and became a law the next day. It was signed by President Taft and is now the law.

If there is any gentleman here who can tell me what I can do more than I have already done to get this bill up, I would be glad to do it. We have the precedent of the Sulloway bill, which passed under the suspension of the rules, and which carried $75,000,000, and which was based on an entirely new line. No country in the world up to that time, or any representative or parliamentary body up to that time, had ever passed a soldiers' pension bill based solely upon age. In my opinion there is no virtue in being old. If there was, I would be the most virtuous man in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. Would the gentleman prefer to have the bill come up as a privileged bill rather than under suspension of the rules?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I would if I could get recognition now, in order to speed its passage into law.

Mr. BLAND. Does not the gentleman think he could get recognition a little later, if he would let the bill go over and not consider it under the suspension of the rules on Monday?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I am receiving so many letters in favor of the bill and urging its passage that I want to get it out of the way. I do not think it makes much difference what kind of a bill we pass in the House, if we can only get it into conference, and I will guarantee that we will give you a satisfactory bill if we ever get the bill into conference.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I hope at the expiration of that time we may go on with the reading of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend the rules and include in that motion a proposition to strike out section 3. Would the gentleman be willing to do that?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will tell you. There are 16 members of the committee. When this bill that is now on the Union Calendar was considered, it was ordered to be reported by the unanimous vote of those present. Twelve members of that committee were present, and I would not take the responsibility of deciding for the other 15 members of the committee what to do, because I am only one member of the committee. I have no more voice than any other member of the committee. As far as I am individually concerned, I would be willing to do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Probably a meeting of the committee could be held between now and the hour of meeting Monday, and we might arrange that.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Some of the members of the committee may be absent. I want to say further that I am a member of the legislative committee of the Grand Army of the Republic. The Grand Army of the Republic to-day constitutes about 45 per cent of all the surviving soldiers of the Civil War. At the meeting of the national encampment at Boston last year I was not present. They appointed a legislative committee, with full power to designate what pension legislation should be recommended to Congress for enactment. I met with that committee when they met here previous to the preparation of the present bill. I met with them twice, once before the Senate committee. This bill has been prepared in accordance with the recommendations of that committee of which I am a member, except that ex-Representative Gardner, who was chairman of the committee, said that the amount of money appropriated should not be less than $40,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. I suppose Commander in Chief Somers is a member of that committee?

Mr. SHERWOOD. No; he is not a member.

Mr. BLAND. I want to say for the gentleman's information that the Grand Army of the Republic officers have written to me that they were opposed to this bill, and especially opposed to these two features, and that they indorsed the provision of the Smoot bill that is in the Senate.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Some of them might be opposed to any bill that we might enact. I have received as high as 800 letters a day. I have received the indorsement of posts of the Grand Army of the Republic from Ohio to Oregon, favoring the bill now on the Union Calendar. I have received all told about 75 letters against the bill, in favor of a larger bill. Of course, we are all human. They all want as much money as they can get. You must understand that. I do not blame them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. SHERWOOD. No.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, has just told us how solicitous he is that his general pension bill shall be considered, and how much he desires to have it considered under favorable circumstances for amendment, and so forth. It seems to me that this discussion here, if it has done nothing else, has cleared the way and pointed out to him exactly how he may do it. There is no difficulty whatever in the way. All that is necessary is that we may go ahead reading the bill that we are now considering, finish it this afternoon, and before adjournment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] will have time and opportunity to move that we go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general pension bill, which his committee has reported out. It will thus become the unfinished business for next week, and we shall not have to invade suspension day to consider it under suspension of the rules. [Applause.] The way is now perfectly clear, and if we are forced to consider this bill under suspension of the rules, it will be because those in control of it shut their eyes to the opportunities that are before them. It will be because they persist in considering it under suspension of the rules, where it can not be amended, instead of under more favorable circumstances.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. It was the distinct understanding before we went into the consideration of this bill that this would be the last business considered to-day. The question was asked by the leader on that side of the House [Mr. GILLETT], and it was distinctly stated that we would not do any more business to-day. I think it would be entirely unfair to those Members of the House who are not here to take up other legislation after that positive statement has been made.

Mr. TILSON. Of course, gentlemen's agreements ought to be kept, but I was speaking of the parliamentary situation; and so far as the rules and orders of the House are concerned, I have stated the facts just as they are. Immediately after the completion of the Military Academy bill this afternoon, if those in charge of the pension bill will call it up, we can begin the consideration of it. By so doing it will become the unfinished business. There is no justification for our being forced to consider it under suspension of the rules next Monday.

Mr. BLAND. Under any circumstances it is not necessary for the chairman of the committee to move to suspend the rules on Monday, is it?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly not. The rules are clear that at any time when an appropriation bill is not pending or some other legislation being considered, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] can arise in his place and move that the House go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of his pension bill. He can do it if the Speaker will recognize him and he has the votes to back him up. I think the gentleman has the votes to back him up on this pension bill at any time he may wish to call it up. So if we go ahead and consider it under unfavorable circumstances it will be simply because those responsible for the bill do not make proper effort to consider it under favorable circumstances. That is the situation, gentlemen. Let the responsibility be placed where it belongs. I shall not take up more time, and hope we may now go on with the consideration of the Military Academy bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one battalion sergeant major, Infantry, $864: Provided, That the enlisted man in the headquarters, United States Corps of Cadets, performing that duty has the rank, pay, and allowances of that grade: And provided further, That if performing the above duties at time of retirement the said enlisted man shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances of a retired sergeant major, Infantry.

By unanimous consent Mr. SHERWOOD and Mr. BLAND were given leave to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that my colleague [Mr. PRATT] has seldom asked for time in the House,

I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to speak for 10 minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] that his colleague may continue for 15 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. Chairman, it is a little more than a year since the United States entered into war against Germany, and since then our hearts, our hopes, and our resources in men and money have been thrown into the scale with our brave allies overseas, who for almost four years have been contesting the ground inch by inch with a highly organized and efficient military foe. Little did we think the twentieth century would usher in the most gigantic strife of all time. The world a few years ago looked peaceful enough, but we see now what we were unable to discern then, that for many years all the energies of a great people—the Germans—had been bent toward the single object of world dominion. When the time was ripe Germany stripped off her mask and struck her long-planned, long-prepared blow, hoping by the very suddenness and fury of its onset to overcome France, and then to take on England, while Austria-Hungary kept back the hosts of Russia. But little Belgium—God bless her!—whose neutrality had been violated as by a thief in the night, interposed her arm, and with a gallantry unsurpassed stayed the robber legions in gray which swarmed upon her fair land until France had time to rally and stopped the mighty rush of the invaders at the Battle of the Marne. And so the tide of conflict has ebbed and flowed until to-day there are but few neutral nations, and this has indeed become a world war. Never before has so much blood been spilled; never has this world seen such shame and such glory. But the shame has proceeded from our brutal and barbarous foe and the glory from those who are in a life and death struggle with that foe.

It is unnecessary to review the causes that led the United States to become an active participant in this great war, but we went in because Germany would not let us stay out. We made every honorable effort to stay out. We were a peace-loving Nation; we had been taught by our first President to avoid entangling foreign alliances; in our geographical isolation we felt secure from attack by a foreign foe; but slowly and imperceptibly we were drawn against our will into the maelstrom until we have become a part and parcel of the contending forces. America's aims and purposes in this crisis were never more clearly stated than by the President of the United States in his famous war message delivered in this Hall on the evening of April 2, 1917, and his closing sentences have much of the solemn and majestic sweep of Lincoln's second inaugural:

> It is a fearful thing to lead this great, peaceful people into war. But right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest to our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free. To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured.

In the past year the American Congress has sought almost unanimously and by every means at its command to frame and put into effect measures that will help to win the war. We on this side of the House, who are proud of our political heritage as members of the great Republican Party, have shown a oneness with those of our friends of another political faith. We have known no North, no South, no East, no West; but we have devoted ourselves in common to the great task of organizing the resources of the United States for victory. After entering the war in April last year the Congress in May passed the selective-service law; in June, pursuant to the President's proclamation, nearly 10,000,000 Americans, the flower of our young manhood, were registered for service; in August the first quotas were ready to report; in September they began to reach the various cantonments; in October training was under way to provide a great National Army.

Remarkable progress has been made in the last year in many departments of governmental activity; if in all of them the most complete success has not been achieved, if in some of them there have been vexatious delays, the fault in large measure has been due probably to the fact that we have been trying in a few months to accomplish the work of years. It took generations of intensive training to make Germany the military power she was in 1914 and is to-day. But our National Army is in the making; it will soon be worthy of American traditions. Many of our soldiers are already on the firing line, and the Kaiser knows he must secure a military decision, if at all, before the American boys in full force can reach the shores of France.

If in the raising and training of our National Army we are once more showing our unity as a Nation, if we are to-day shaking off the clinging garments of apathy and pacifism and unpreparedness which for more than 50 years have been our national habit, we are in other fields of endeavor striving to meet the exigencies that are a part of our war program. From all over the land are heard the sounds of preparation for the struggle we are in. We are building ships, we are making ammunition, we are providing and conserving food, and we are raising billions in money. We must have not only soldiers and ammunition, but we must have food and the ships to carry it across the ocean; and the American farmer, no less than the American artisan and the American business man, is exhibiting his patriotism in this supreme moment in the world's history.

Of such transcendent importance is the question of food supply in our war program that this Congress a few weeks ago passed an act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant furloughs to enlisted men to enable them to engage in agriculture during the present farming season. By reason of this the men who have left the farms for the training camps can go back to the farms for short periods, largely for seeding and harvesting time. Without universal farm productiveness we can gain no victory over Germany.

I have the honor to represent a district where agriculture is largely pursued. The counties of Steuben, Chemung, Schuyler, Tioga, and Tompkins, in the southern tier of New York, are noted for the extent and volume of their agricultural interests. There are no more intelligent and industrious farmers anywhere in the country, and surely none more loyal to the State and the Nation. In every community they are backing up the Government to the extent of their ability, and they will continue to do so. But they must have labor, and the farm-trained labor that will be released as a result of the furlough act passed by this Congress and approved by the President on March 16, 1918, will assist us to win the war.

There has been some talk of conscripting labor for farm production, but I am a believer in free labor. If male labor can not be obtained, women will doubtless come to the rescue. As always, the burden of war falls hardest on women; but they are uncomplaining and unfaltering, vying with men in the effort to be of assistance in this struggle. "Without the aid of women, England could not carry on this war," said Mr. Asquith, former premier. English women, to a large degree, are replacing in the factories and mills, in the public utilities, and on the farms of England the men who have been taken away to fight the Germans. As time goes on and this war takes from America its millions of men, the women of America will demonstrate their adaptability and their readiness to meet the emergency at home; for when have the women of America ever failed to show their patriotism, their heroism, and their self-sacrifice? All that they ask is an open field, an even start, and no favors; and now that in many States they do not lack citizenship and are soon, I trust, to attain citizenship in the Nation at large, they will prove not only the allies but the equals of men.

The boys in the trenches have a clear idea of what they are there for. They know they are fighting not only for democracy and to make the world free but for something very near and dear to them at home. We can almost hear them saying, in the words of a recent war verse:

> "Made safe for democracy" seems mighty fine,
> But high-soundin' politics ain't in our line.
> 'Taint that made us chuck up our jobs and enlist
> For givin' the Kaiser the taste of a fist.
> But this is the notion stowed under our lids:
> We're makin' it safe for the missus and kids.

[Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one battalion sergeant major, Infantry, $———: Provided, That the enlisted man at headquarters, United States Military Academy, performing that duty shall have the rank, pay, and allowance of that grade.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, in the print of the bill the amount after the dollar mark was unintentionally omitted, and I ask to amend the bill by adding the figures "768" after the dollar mark.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 2, after the dollar mark, insert the figures "768."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, current and ordinary expenses, $184,605.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I simply want to say a few words on this bill itself and not on any pension legislation or any other extraneous matter whatever.

Mr. FESS. That is peculiar; is not that out of order?

Mr. PLATT. It is peculiar. I do not know whether it is in order to speak on the bill before the House or not, but somebody ought to discuss it a little, and West Point is in my district. This is peculiarly a detailed bill and it runs along with a rapidity in the Clerk's reading that takes your breath away when you attempt to follow it. There are some things about which I would like to ask a question or two. In the report of the committee, for instance, I find that the estimates of the Military Academy officials and the War Department have been very greatly cut down. The total estimates were $5,715,000 and the bill carries an appropriation of $2,320,000, which means, of course, that the construction program recommended to provide for the increased corps of cadets has been entirely or almost entirely cut out. The new buildings which are absolutely necessary for the enlargement of the academy, to provide for the number of cadets which must be obtained for the Army, have been abandoned for the time, and there has merely been an increase in the mess hall so that the cadets who come in the next year, the enlarged new class, will have some place to eat. I regret the cutting down of the construction, but I have no doubt the committee had good reasons for its action.

Now, in connection with that there is submitted here a table showing the number of vacancies in the cadet corps which I think is wholly misleading. May I have the attention of the chairman of the committee? In connection with the explanation of why the building program is cut down there is given a list of vacancies here showing 591 vacancies in the academy. The gentleman does not mean to say that there are 591 actual vacancies in the corps of cadets at West Point at this time, surely?

Mr. DENT. Of course, there are, according to the complete number Congress authorized in 1916, 1,332.

Mr. PLATT. I submit that can hardly be true. This is the same list of vacancies which you will get, I think, if you write The Adjutant General asking for a list of vacancies at West Point, and embraces cadets who will graduate this summer. It includes every district where appointment is made this year, though the actual vacancies will not be there until the end of this academic year. There have been usually in former years 100 or so vacancies only.

Mr. DENT. These figures were given to me by The Adjutant General's office through the superintendent of the Military Academy.

Mr. PLATT. I know, exactly——

Mr. DENT. The gentleman will recognize under the law we passed in 1916 doubling the acedemy that the total number of cadets finally to be authorized is 1,332.

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Now, they had 688 there when the superintendent of the academy appeared before the committee.

Mr. PLATT. Well, but the number of appointments to make that total number of 1,300 cadets has not yet been fully authorized. That number of vacancies, I am practically sure, includes all districts which have appointments this year. It includes two appointments from my district, for instance. The boys are already appointed, have taken their examinations, but will not enter the academy until June.

Mr. DENT. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. PLATT. There are other cadets in their places, or would be normally. As a matter of fact, one of my cadets was dropped. I simply wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the figures do not represent the actual vacancies in the academy at the present time.

Mr. DENT. There are vacancies until they go there.

Mr. PLATT. But the vacancies are not there yet. It merely means there are appointments to be made to fill vacancies which will occur when the present first class graduates.

Mr. DENT. That may be misleading. I asked the superintendent of the academy to give these figures, and they were given by him after they had conferred with The Adjutant General.

Mr. PLATT. I have followed the matter of vacancies at West Point in Congress from year to year, and I know they range from 60 to 100 or a little more as the year progresses.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. KAHN. The paragraph of the report just above that statement of figures will show the gentleman there were at the time of the hearings 688 cadets attending the academy and not over 360 more are expected in June, so that the estimates are based upon 1,000 cadets. Now, that was the information that was given us by the superintendent of the academy.

Mr. PLATT. Well, I think the estimates are probably all right, but I do not understand the vacancies. It gives 366 congressional districts that have vacancies there. Now, that means 366 appointments to be made this year. The most of those boys are there. A few of the districts may have vacancies running through the whole year due to failures in examinations, but most of them are simply appointments to be made in place of cadets who will graduate this coming summer.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. On page 12 of the hearings there is some information given. There is a statement made there by Col. Tillman, as follows:

Since January 22, 1917, at which time the strength of the Corps of Cadets was about 697, the following changes have occurred to date:

Discharged for physical disability	11
Discharged for deficiency in studies	53
Graduated	290
Resigned	11
Dismissed	8
Dropped	3
Died	2
Discharged for deficiency in conduct	1
	379
Strength January, 1917	697
Separated since	379
	318
Cadets admitted during the year	370
Present strength	688

Now, the committee has estimated that there will be a number to come in, so that we have based our appropriations on 1,000 cadets for the year ending July 1, 1919.

Mr. PLATT. I am not criticizing that fact. I am simply criticizing the statement of vacancies given in the report and as explaining it. It seems to me it does not explain it. I think probably it is true that the number of cadets that will come in will be about as estimated here—360 more. But those 360 that are to come in in June are included, I think, in the 591 here given as vacancies. They are vacancies for the purpose of appointment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I will say, as to the gentleman's criticism of these figures, that I put in the report which came from the superintendent after conference with The Adjutant General's office, and he will find it to be absolutely correct when he recognizes the fact that we doubled the capacity of the cadets to 1,332. And when you take the 688 who were in the academy at the time the superintendent and the quartermaster appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs and add the 591, you have got 1,279. Now, the vacancies they meant were the total number of vacancies authorized by law.

Now, I want to make this additional statement?

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman mean they could all be filled at the present time?

Mr. DENT. I am going to make a statement that, I think, will satisfy the gentleman.

When we passed the bill doubling the capacity of the academy so as to constitute a corps of 1,332 cadets, at first the department made a regulation that that increase should be in four annual increments. There was so much complaint on that subject by the Members of the House and Senators that the regulation was changed, and Gen. McCain informed me that every Member of Congress was given an opportunity to make an appointment, and that the reason that they are not full up, according to the 1,332, as provided by law, is because of the number of failures of the appointees.

Mr. PLATT. That is very surprising to me, because I know this to be the fact: If you write to The Adjutant General asking for a list of vacancies, with the idea of getting a boy appointed, getting somebody to appoint from another district, you will find your own district included in the vacancies, although you have already appointed your boy. I have had that happen to me over and over again.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will yield, I think if the gentleman will take the trouble to verify it, he will find out that the statement in the report was absolutely correct at the time of the hearings, and that there were that many vacancies at the time. If the gentleman will make the multiplication and addition, multiplying the total number of Members of Congress in both Houses, including Delegates, by two, and add the number of presidential appointments and the number from the National Guard, he will find the total strength is approximately 591 more than the total strength given here—688. Therefore I think there were at the time this report was made 591 actual vacancies and that there were 360 actual congressional district vacancies.

Mr. PLATT. If that is true——

Mr. TILSON. I think it is absolutely true.

Mr. PLATT (continuing). It makes a worse showing in the congressional districts for the boys we appoint than anything that has happened before. It shows the boys of this country have run down tremendously. I do not think it is true. I think it includes vacancies that are to occur when the present class graduates.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, as to the vacancies the gentleman refers to, that we have all made our appointments and this causes vacancies until those men get through and qualify.

Mr. PLATT. It does not, because the man an appointee is to succeed is still there.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Not when you take into consideration the increase.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman might verify that a little bit when he takes into consideration that this bill is not to provide for existing conditions at West Point, but for the fiscal year beginning with July 1, when the vacancies are to be filled and become operative.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman states these vacancies were accurate at the time of the hearings. If so, the explanation may be that many of them were created by the graduation of a class last August, a year ahead of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask for two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLATT. I want to take the two minutes to present a matter, although I do not criticize it, because I think it may be necessary to postpone it for the present, and that is that the old hotel at West Point should be torn down and rebuilt. It was built nearly 100 years ago, and is a disgrace to the country. They had to pile manure around the water pipes to keep them from freezing last winter, and there were only one or two toilets in the house that they could keep from freezing up. The parents of the cadets have no other place to go than to this hotel, and the men are not allowed to go off the reservation. Something ought to be done about this hotel in the near future. I wanted to call attention to that, because I hope when we get a little bit loose from war indebtedness and can do something, we will build a new hotel at West Point, or let somebody else build it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For installation of automatic stokers under four 440-horsepower boilers in the power plant, $40,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FESS. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the meaning of that first line on page 29?

Mr. DENT "For installation of automatic stokers under four 440-horsepower boilers?"

Mr. FESS. That is not a misprint, then?

Mr. DENT. No; it is not a misprint. It was misprinted in the original bill, but it was corrected.

Mr. FESS. Then I will use this as an incident concerning which I want to ask the gentleman a question. Has the printing force in the Government Printing Office been greatly disturbed by the draft act? Have many of our expert men been taken out of the Printing Office because of the operation of the draft?

Mr. DENT. I am sorry to say it, but I am absolutely unable to answer that question. I am not familiar with the situation. I have not heard anything of that kind.

Mr. FESS. I presumed that there had gone into the Printing Office a considerable increase of force on account of the war demands for departmental printing and that there must be a considerable number of inexperienced workmen or printers, typesetters, or compositors in the office. I wish to make this observation, that up to the time the war opened it was a very infrequent thing to find a misprint, a misspelled word, or any error, grammatical or otherwise, especially in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have looked upon it as one of the most remarkable achievements for perfection of work I had ever seen, that the RECORD came so carefully prepared; no matter how late our sessions ran here at night, we would have the RECORD on our desk the next morning, and it was almost error proof. But I have noticed a good many typographical errors in the last year. In the mineral bill considered recently Members commented upon the great number of errors, and I wondered whether those errors had crept in because some of the expert men had been taken out due to the demands of the war.

Mr. DENT. I have had no complaint submitted to the Military Committee on that line, although I lost the assistant clerk of the committee the other day—which I regret very much—on account of the draft. But I can not help it.

Mr. FESS. I would not at this time offer any criticism, at least until I had the facts concerning the source, as I do not think it would be proper. But I am going to make this observation, since I am on my feet and this feature of the war's affect is before us, that in public places where we have to deal with men interested in public or quasi-public matters we find a wonderfully pronounced indifference among our public servants in their regard for the public needs, an indifference which is very noticeable when compared with what we had prior to the war. Take, for example, the railway depot down here and the men the traveling public have to deal with. It is either because they are overworked, or because they are inexperienced, or else because they are inclined to be ungentlemanly, a characteristic which is developed by a situation in which they know the public can not help itself. Whatever may be the cause, it is quite difficult to receive any sort of courteous treatment in matters in which the public heretofore had been so decently treated. Even were it necessary to overlook the most palpable discourtesies, that does not justify the insolence so frequent in recent months. I think I had to stand for five minutes once in the railway depot waiting for a man who was selling me a ticket to tell me what the rate was to the place I was going. He did not even know where the city was, and he had difficulty to find out. He did not know how to examine the Railway Guide, as it appeared to me. In making some inquiry I found that he was a new man, who had just gone in, and consequently I felt inclined to excuse what would otherwise be positively intolerable treatment of the public, although I did feel in a critical mood. I am of opinion the same thing is true in many of our public offices in many places. In other words, that is one of the great prices we are having to pay for this war—taking away our efficient, aggressive, and faithful young men, upon whom the public has had to rely, and who seemed to enjoy the ability and pleasure of serving the public as a duty for which they were paid by their employers. But to-day others have come in, untutored as to what the public demands and wholly careless of what it must have. They seem to be absolutely irresponsive as to any matters of public interest, for which they are employed, and wanting in common courtesy when you ask them questions that the public has a right to know and they ought to decently answer.

I repeat that I do not think that this is a proper place nor time to air our complaints, but I think that a good many unnecessary injuries are suffered by the public that could and should be avoided. In railroading every man who travels must have noticed the marked indifference to public rights since the Government has taken over the roads. In that degree we are justified in calling attention to the situation. Only this week I took a lady from a hospital and placed her on a train. We had but a few moments in which to exchange a claim check for the necessary check for her trunk. As a precaution I notified the young man that I had but a few moments to assist a sick lady to the train and requested expedition, that she might not be overtaxed. But the young lady by his side was of more interest than my request. In war time, when we can not help ourselves, we must submit, but it ought not to occur where the Government can avoid it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For installation of mechanical soot blowers in six 440-horsepower boilers in the power plant, $3,600.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This morning a little incident occurred which I think it wise to correct. I do not like to disagree with my good friend from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], but he quoted me as saying something, and it occurred, as I understand it, wholly through a misunderstanding. It is true that he did stop me in the hall when I was walking down the hall very fast and asked me in regard to something, and I understood him that he asked in regard to a statement that Gen. March had made before the Committee on Military Affairs, which had to do with something altogether different from what he understood it did.

Now, in order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to the matter, I will take the liberty of putting into the RECORD and reading to you just exactly what Gen. March did say. I think this is fair to the House and fair to everyone else.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask the gentleman if that was a statement before the committee?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DENT. It is subject to the rule, but I do not think there is any objection that will be made. The statement has not been printed yet.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a matter of particular concern to the Chair, but it seems that under the rule, as the Chair now remembers it, the Chair should even take the initiative, if necessary, to prevent any statement of what occurred in committee being made. That is the position of the Chair.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this matter, as I remember, is not very material, and I do not think any harm will be done if the gentleman from Iowa is permitted to quote from the hearings.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no special interest in the matter. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the statement be read. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to inquire whether it is not perfectly proper for the gentleman to read from the printed hearings?

Mr. DENT. The hearings have not been printed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? I may say in that connection that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] suggested to me, since I spoke this morning, that the remarks which Gen. March made to him were not a part of the record but were made informally. That is how the misunderstanding between the gentleman and myself arose. He thought I was referring to the record, and so did I, but I found that Mr. ANTHONY indicated that it was a sort of informal conversation, evidently during a lull in the proceedings. That explains how the statements were made. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, except to make that statement.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. With that statement it is hardly necessary for me to read what I was going to read.

Mr. LITTLE. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But I think it will set Gen. March right, and I will read into the RECORD just what he said, in answer to an inquiry by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE]. Gen. March said:

Gen. MARCH. Exactly that.
Mr. GREENE. It will be a continuous and steady flow?
Gen. MARCH. Yes. We are finding it is not necessary to keep them in the camps on this side as long as we anticipated, but that they can be quickly sent to the other side and complete their training over there.

That is exactly my understanding of what was said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For material and labor for repair of Field Artillery target range, clearing grounds for targets and firing positions for batteries, constructing roads and trails to firing positions and target range; and for miscellaneous expenses connected with the indoor instruction of cadets in field artillery during the winter season, $500.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 33, line 11, after the figures "$500," insert "for Quartermaster's Corps garage, $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enlarging the Military Academy to accommodate the authorized number of cadets: Construction of cadet barracks and headquarters, to be located at the south of the area of the old or south barracks, $444,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is a great source of satisfaction to me to see the repairs and improvements being made at that beautiful spot on the west side of the Hudson River known as West Point. I have had the pleasure of being there to see several young men in whom I was deeply interested graduate. The improvements which have been going on there for the last few years have been very marked and have beautified the place wonderfully, adding materially to the facilities for the work accomplished there. I am very pleased also to see that these facilities are introduced in the work of that school, to simplify and lessen labor, such as the installation of automatic stokers for boilers and modern methods for removing soot. But this is not what I rose to speak particularly about.

A short time ago the Government took over the 1,000-ton barge canal recently completed in the great State of New York for the purpose of facilitating the movement of freight and the conservation of transportation. I want to say to the membership of the House that, in my judgment, unless some arrangement is made for proper facilities at the terminals in the different towns, villages, and cities through which this canal runs it will do very little in the way of adding to transportation facilities. Not more than 15 or 20 years ago practically all the coal for the State of New York, both for manufacturing and domestic use, was delivered by way of the old Erie Canal. In the past few years that method has become obsolete, due to the fact that it is impossible to get labor to unload the boats in the manner in which it was formerly done.

The State has spent $156,000,000 in the completion of this canal for the benefit of private users. As I say, the Government has recently taken it over for its own use. The suggestion I desire to make is that the terminals along the line of this waterway, and which have been built by the State, should be so arranged that coal can be removed from the barges which it is proposed to build, so that the State of New York, New England, and all other sections of the country in that locality may be supplied with coal through the canal.

It can be done by arrangement such as is made for removing ore from the lake boats at terminal points. These facilities could be established at each terminal to handle coal from barges by practically the same system that is now used in taking the coal from coal cars and elevating it into coal bins for the purpose of shooting it down into trucks for delivery.

This is a subject in which I think every Member here is interested. I am making these remarks for the purpose of bringing the matter to the attention of the Director General of Railroads and his department, and to give the membership of this House the benefit of the knowledge of the fact that the canal facilities are there, and that if the Government takes advantage of them it will do more to loosen up the congestion throughout the entire country, caused by the lack of railroad facilities, than any other one thing of which I know of to-day. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter printing, binding, and blank books required for the use of the United States Military Academy may be done or procured elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office when in the opinion of the Secretary of War such work can be more advantageously done or procured locally, the cost thereof to be paid from the proper appropriation or appropriations made for the Military Academy.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on that paragraph, beginning with the word "hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DENT. This has been carried heretofore.

Mr. FOSTER. This makes it permanent law.

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to striking out the word "hereafter." It has been carried before.

Mr. FOSTER. If the word "hereafter" has been carried heretofore it is already permanent law.

Mr. KAHN. It has been carried.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it is permanent law anyhow, so I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, buildings and grounds, $776,693.30.
Total, Military Academy, $2,277,294.25.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the totals to conform to the amendments which have been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the totals of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. I move to strike out lines 10 and 11, on page 34. They are unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 34, strike out lines 10 and 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. DENT was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. RUSSELL having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11185) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LITTLE, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of the illness of his father, who is 88 years of age.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 6, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 6, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God, we praise Thee for Thy boundless mercy. In all the past Thou hast dealt with us most graciously. Thou hast favored our land from the very beginning, when we built an altar unto the Lord. Thou hast given us great prosperity and our commerce has blessed the world. But alas, in the enjoyment of our abundance, we have too often forgotten Thee and gone after other gods. We have forgotten the source whence cometh our help, and now Thou art reminding us of our folly, and the thought of Thy goodness is leading us to repentance. Thou art calling us back to Thyself. Thou art calling us into service for the benefit of mankind and for the preservation of the principles that pertain to Thy kingdom.

O God, may we heartily respond to the call of Thy providence. May we be glad to turn our vast treasures back to Thee and to lay all we have upon the altar of sacrifice. Our thought, our money, our skill, our prayers, ourselves—may we give all to Thee for service in the cause of righteousness and for the restoration of peace to a long-distracted world. We ask it for the sake of Jesus, the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, May 2, 1918, when, on request of Mr. VARDAMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10264. An act to prevent in time of war departure from or entry into the United States contrary to the public safety; and

H. R. 11185. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think Senators will agree that the pride one has in the good achievements of his own State is quite pardonable. I hold in my hand a clipping showing what my State has done in the matter of liberty-loan subscriptions. I think it worthy a place in the RECORD. It reflects not only the spirit of South Dakota but the spirit of the West generally. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read from the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Sioux City Journal.]

A NEIGHBOR'S GRACIOUS COMPLIMENT.

All you have to do for South Dakota is to give her a mark to shoot at. In the first liberty-loan campaign the organizers of the drive in the ninth reserve district, having an opinion of South Dakota resources and of her will to use them that must look sort of funny now, asked the State to subscribe a million and a half. The State did, plus enough to bring the total up to almost $4,000,000. In the second liberty-loan effort South Dakota was asked to produce ten millions. The figure actually reached was close to $13,000,000. Along came the third bond issue, and the gentlemen at the Minneapolis headquarters, gulping noticeably, suggested that $22,000,000 would be about right.

South Dakotans, including those particular South Dakotans on whom responsibility for scraping up the $22,000,000 of loose change chiefly devolved, gulped, too, and asked Minneapolis what was the matter. As soon as explanations were made, however, the drive began. And, lo, just as the first $1,500,000 allotment was raised and bettered, just as the second $10,000,000 quota was bettered, too, so the third sum, being $22,000,000, was produced without turning a coyote's hair. It is expected that something like $28,000,000 will be South Dakota's bit in this effort, as South Dakota herself perceives it.

Now hymns of praise are being sung in the citadel. A. B. Rogers, ninth district campaign director, is acting in a way as choirmaster. The sense of the song is something like "South Dakota Ueber Alles," though of course nobody would think of expressing it in just that fashion. Among the things that the State has done, it appears, are these:

She was the first State in the district to report officially to the Federal reserve bank an oversubscription of the allotment.

She obtained probably the highest percentage of distribution, population considered, in the district.

She subscribed more generously than any other State of the district, resources considered.

She exceeded her subscription to the second loan by a greater percentage than any other State in the Nation, the increase being more than 100 per cent.

Perhaps conflicting claims will be offered by other States with regard to these points of superiority. That will not make any essential difference. South Dakota assuredly has seen her duty and has done it. Not that there was any real question about that. Indeed, there was none. There is no need to call attention to the performance of Iowa along the same line. And Sioux City can not bear any longer to mention her own humble achievements. But it's a pretty comfortable corner of God's country out here. The New York press may be expected to throw another surprise and happy fit to discover that the West is still, with both feet, in the war. We shan't. With us it's a commonplace.

Bring on your loans.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with the article just read, Mr. President, I want to say that the little State of New Hampshire has also oversubscribed the loan and is ready for another.

Mr. President, I have had a great many telegrams in reference to a provision in the naval appropriation bill, to which I offered an amendment, which is now in print and before the committee, proposing to strike out a provision known, I think, as the Taylor efficiency system, which has been placed in bills heretofore, and which it is proposed to place in the naval appropriation bill. I have simply taken from my desk four or five telegrams from business concerns, mostly in my own State, and I ask that they may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MANCHESTER, N. H., April 30, 1918.

Senator JACOB GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

We strenuously condemn antiefficiency rider penalizing bonus and premium payments and time studies in naval appropriation bill just passed. Trust you will use your every influence against similar rider in Senate bill.

LEWIS DEXLER.

DOVER, N. H., April 30, 1918.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

We note the naval appropriation bill with antiefficiency rider attached has been passed by the House. In view of the absolute necessity of speeding up operations, we most earnestly protest against passage of bill with this rider by the Senate. Sincerely hope it will have your active opposition.

B. WILLIAMS & SONS.

NEWPORT, N. H., April 30, 1918.

Senator JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

We enter our protest against the antiefficiency rider in naval appropriation bill. We feel that at this time every effort should be used to increase rather than diminish the country's producing capacity.

EMERSON PAPER CO.

MILFORD, N. H., May 3, 1918.

JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

The antiefficiency rider penalizing premium and bonus payments was surely made in Germany. Our boys across the water are crying, "Speed up." Can't you hear them? We look to our Senators to protect them and us from such vicious legislation.

FRENCH & HEALD CO.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, concerning the allotment of liberty bonds and subscriptions therefor in the several States, to which Senators have been referring, I could have made an announcement of this kind on the second day of the loan, which I will now do. In one of the counties of Tennessee, that of Unicoi, on the first day, before 9 o'clock in the morning, double the quota of the county was subscribed, and I have no doubt that exceeds the record of any other county in the United States. There are no more loyal people in the Union than those of Tennessee, and the prompt action of Unicoi County fairly represents the spirit prevailing all over our State.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have felt modest about claiming good things for the Green Mountain State, but I feel that it is in order this morning to state that of all the New England States Vermont was the first to go over the top in regard to the third liberty loan. May I say also that barring the State of Delaware, Vermont was the first of all the New England and the Atlantic States to overgo her allotment.

Mr. RANSDELL. I present resolutions unanimously adopted at the State Teachers' Association, Baton Rouge, La., April 6, petitioning Congress to support the Federal amendment giving suffrage to women. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions unanimously adopted at the State Teachers' Association at Baton Rouge, La., on April 6, 1918.

Whereas we are faced with new problems and new issues, and the Nation is realizing its dependency on women as never before: Therefore be it

Resolved, That they can serve still more efficiently when they shall have received a full measure of citizenship. Be it further

Resolved, That the time has come when the enfranchisement of women by means of amendments to the Federal or State constitutions is an act necessary to do justice to all the people of our Nation.

Mr. RANSDELL. I also present a telegram from the president of the Eighth District, Federation of Women's Clubs, of Natchitoches, La., urging Congress to adopt the suffrage amendment, and expressing the hope that Senator GUION will vote for it. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATCHITOCHES, LA., April 30, 1918.

Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
Washington, D. C.:

The Eighth District Federation of Women's Clubs, in convention assembled, urge the United States Senate to pass the suffrage amendment to the National Constitution and it be read into the RECORD. We earnestly express the hope that Senator WALTER GUION will vote for it.

Mrs. C. V. PORTER,
President Eighth District Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to present a telegram from Mr. McMahon showing the subscriptions of the New Orleans Great Northern Railroad to the third liberty loan. With a great deal of pleasure he announces 100 per cent subscription, amounting to $55,000—733 officers and employees, 300 of whom are colored. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 30, 1918.

Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As chairman New Orleans Great Northern Railroad, third liberty loan campaign, it is with great deal of pleasure I announce 100 per cent subscription, amounting to $55,000—733 officers and employees, 300 of whom are colored.

M. J. MCMAHON.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a resolution adopted by the citizens of Columbus, Ga., urging that the influence of the Representatives and Senators from Georgia be used in behalf of war-time prohibition, and also a somewhat similar communication from the Georgia Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which contains among other things a request for the immediate enactment by Congress of war prohibition measures.

I wish to call their attention and the attention of the public to the fact that Congress has already passed legislation prohibiting the manufacture of spirituous liquors and has left to the President the authority to limit the manufacture of beer and vinous liquors.

Congress has acted, and while I gladly present the resolution, what has been done by Congress should be known:

Resolved by the citizens of Columbus, Ga., in mass meeting assembled, That the food, fuel, and transportation administrator be, and is hereby, urged to use his influence in behalf of war-time prohibition.

Resolved, second, That the chairman of this meeting write to the United States Senators from Georgia and to our Representative in Congress, Hon. WILLIAM C. WRIGHT, and urge them to do all in their power to bring about war-time prohibition.

Resolved, third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Food Administrator, Senators, and Representative.

GEORGIA WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,
Macon, Ga., April 27, 1918.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senator of Georgia,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the conservation of food, fuel, and man power, the promotion of civic righteousness, morals, and the spread of Christianity we, the Woman's Missionary Society of Centenary Methodist Church, of Macon, Ga., urge that you use your influence and vote—

First, for the immediate enactment by Congress of war prohibition measure.

Second, for the bill for prohibition in Hawaii during the period of the war.

Mrs. J. M. BASS, President.
Mrs. A. J. BARNES, Secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. There has been sent to me a copy of a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Utah Branch of the National Woman's Party with the request that I have it placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I ask that that be done.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted at a meeting of the Utah Branch of the National Woman's Party, held at the Hotel Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah, on April 20, 1918.

Whereas the Federal suffrage amendment has passed the House of Representatives and is before the Senate for consideration;

Whereas President Wilson has given the measure his support in the House of Representatives and all political parties, either in their platforms or by action of their national committees, have indorsed the amendment;

Whereas the foreign diplomatic policy of the administration is demanding the establishment of representative governments in all countries;

Whereas our allies are enfranchising women in war time by national action, and "we can not afford to lag behind our allies on this democratic issue":

Resolved, That we, members of the Utah Branch of the National Woman's Party, at a meeting held in the Hotel Utah on April 20, 1918, ask the President to give the measure his active support in the Senate by urging its speedy passage; further be it

Resolved, That all administration leaders be urged to use their influence to secure the speedy passage of the measure, and that Senator SMOOT and Senator KING, of Utah, be urged to give the amendment their strong support; finally be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to all administration leaders and to the Senators from Utah with the request that it be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

LOUISE M. GARNETT,
Chairman of Meeting.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Butte County Medical Society, of Chico, Cal., praying for advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fowler, Cal., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LEWIS presented a resolution adopted by the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association, of Chicago, Ill., pledging their allegiance to the United States in the prosecution of the war and their support to the Constitution of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POMERENE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred the bill (S. 3438) to prevent corrupt practices in the election of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 426) thereon.

Mr. BECKHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3261) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Alonzo W. Livingston, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 10850. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 427); and

H. R. 10924. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 424).

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11245) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto, approved October 6, 1917, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 429) thereon.

ARMY CHAPLAINS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4409) to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. Chaplains: The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, chaplains in the Army at the rate of not to exceed, including chaplains now in the service, one for each 1,200 officers and men in all branches of the Military Establishment, with rank, pay, and allowances as now authorized by law: Provided, That there shall be assigned at least one chaplain for each regiment of Cavalry, Infantry, Field Artillery, and Engineers: Provided further, That the persons appointed under this act shall be duly accredited by some religious denomination or organization and of good standing therein, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That no person shall be appointed chaplain in the Army who on the date of appointment is more than 45 years of age."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state that a similar bill passed the House and Senate and was signed by both the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, but was vetoed by the President, because he thought the last provision in the bill was susceptible of a wrong construction. He therefore suggested an amendment, which we have inserted in the bill now and report it back favorably.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFUND OF DUTIES ON MATERIALS DESTROYED.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on the 30th of April, by direction of the Committee on Finance, I reported back favorably the bill (S. 2496) for the refund of duties paid on materials destroyed by fire. It is Calendar No. 372. Since then I have had a conference with one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, who calls my attention to certain features of the claim to which our attention had not been before directed, at least mine was not, and which make a material difference concerning the equities of the measure. I therefore ask that the bill be taken from the calendar and referred back to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

SALE OF MILITARY SUPPLIES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I submit a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill 3803, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3803) authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell supplies, materials, equipment, or other property, heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States, in connection with, or incidental to, the prosecution of the war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report?

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 10264. An act to prevent, in time of war, departure from or entry into the United States contrary to the public safety, was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. KING, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 11185. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUNISHMENT OF UNLAWFUL ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4471) to declare unlawful associations purposing by force, violence, or injury to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change in the United States, and prescribing punishment for persons engaged in the activities of such associations, and for other purposes. The bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary with a unanimous report, and as I do not conceive that there will be any objection to the bill, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may be read, though I do not think I have any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any association, organization, society, or corporation, one of whose purposes or professed purposes is to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change within the United States by the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises, or defends the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, to accomplish such change or for any other purpose, and which, during any war in which the United States is engaged, shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, advise, or defend, is hereby declared to be an unlawful association.

SEC. 2. That any person who, while the United States is engaged in war, shall act or profess to act as an officer of any such unlawful association, or who shall speak, write, or publish, as the representative or professed representative of any such unlawful association, or become or continue to be a member thereof, or who shall contribute anything as dues or otherwise to it or to anyone for it, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 10 years or by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 3. That any person who, while the United States is engaged in war, knowingly prints, publishes, edits, issues, circulates, sells, or offers for sale, or distributes any book, pamphlet, picture, paper, circular, card, letter, writing, print, publication, or document of any kind in which is taught, advocated, advised, or defended, or who shall in any manner teach, advocate, advise, or defend the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, as a means of accomplishing any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change, or otherwise, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 10 years or by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 4. That any owner, agent, or superintendent of any building, room, premises, or place who knowingly permits therein any meeting of any such unlawful association, or of any subsidiary or branch thereof, or, during any war in which the United States may be engaged, any assemblage of persons who teach, advocate, advise, or defend the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year or by a fine of not more than $500, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not think I have any objection to the bill, but it is a very drastic measure, and I wish that the Senator from Montana would give some explanation of it. I have only heard it read hurriedly, but I can see that there are certain provisions of the bill which are really very drastic.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is very clearly disclosed in its language. It is intended to outlaw any organization or association which teaches, advises, advocates, or defends the use of force or violence or physical injury to person or property for the accomplishment of any changes in the United States economically, industrially, or politically. I did not conceive that there would be any objection whatever to the enactment of a statute of this character at this time. The occasion which gives rise to it, of course, is known to all of the Senators present.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. WALSH I will.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course I have no objection to any legislation which will reach only organizations or persons which advocate doing anything that is unlawful or something that should not be done or something that will hamper the prosecution of the war; but in the reading of the bill I observe that it includes any association, organization, society, or corporation, one of whose purposes or professed purposes is to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change within the United States by the use, without authority of law, and so forth. Of course I am willing that any organization which is not a legitimate or lawful organization should be forbidden; I do not think that any such association as that should exist; but, I say to the Senator from Montana in all seriousness, I have not had time even to read the bill, and that is why I asked for an explanation of it.

I agree with the Senator from Montana that something should be done to stop and to punish any association, organization, or person that will commit any unlawful act or do anything that will hamper the war in any particular. I am in perfect accord with the Senator in that respect. I do not think, however, that legislation should be hastily passed that will do an injustice to any person, association, or organization having for their or its purpose to do what is lawful and what will result in good to humanity.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from North Dakota will perceive from reading the bill that it reaches only such associations as teach, advocate, advise, or defend the use of force or violence, or injury to person or property for the accomplishment of its ends. If an association does not teach that, it will not fall within the condemnation of the bill. No association, no matter what its character, if it does not teach that kind of heresy—I might properly say "treason"—is included within the condemnation of the bill at all. The bill also makes membership in an organization of that character, or acting as the representative of it or talking for it a crime. The idea is to outlaw any organization that professes purposes of that character.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Senator from Montana for his courtesy in explaining the bill, and I will say to him that I have no objection to its passage, if it reaches only such persons, associations, or organizations as he has mentioned.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether, in his opinion, this bill, if passed, would give the United States courts jurisdiction over those engaged in lynchings or those who should defend lynchings?

Mr. WALSH. I should think probably it would.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know that I am opposed to the bill, but it opens rather a new field for the giving jurisdiction to courts of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska to repeat his question? I should like to understand the Senator's question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I inquired of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], in charge of the bill, whether, in his opinion, the bill if passed would give to Federal courts jurisdiction over all cases against men charged with lynching or cases against men who defended lynching, and the Senator has replied that, in his opinion, it would, whatever the cause of the lynching might be.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Montana has given more consideration to the matter than have I, and I have great respect for his judgment; but, in my opinion, the proposed law does not go that far. However, in that I may be in error.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will pardon me for just a moment, I should like to amplify my statement by saying that the bill is aimed primarily at organizations and associations the purpose of which is to bring about these results, and an organization to bring about such results by lynching would undoubtedly fall within the condemnation of the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator from Montana will yield for a question, does not the Senator think, however, that the third section of the bill goes a good deal further than that?

Mr. WALSH. The third section of the bill is intended to reach individuals who do not belong to associations, but who teach exactly the same doctrines that we seek to condemn when urged by associations.

Mr. HARDWICK. Suppose an individual were to advocate lynching, or suppose some man should go out and say "Let us lynch these pro-Germans or spies," or whatever they may be?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; he would fall within the condemnation of this bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is why I think the Senator is right on account of the third section of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am familiar with section 3, and I have no doubt at all that it would not reach such a case. The whole bill has another object in view, and it will have to be construed as a whole. I have no objection to reaching that particular individual, if the bill will reach him; but if the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Georgia want to reach that individual, in my opinion, they had better offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. President, I only desire to say in regard to this measure, that I supported it in the committee and I support it now as a war measure. I am perfectly willing in these times and in this supreme exigency to deal with this situation through the strong arm of the Government; but I would not want, Mr. President, by my support of the bill to be committed to the idea that the problem of the Industrial Workers of the World or any other labor problem can finally and ultimately be settled through the strong arm of the Government or through force. I think that the remedy will have to be a different remedy than that which might be incorporated in a measure of this kind. At the present juncture of affairs, and in this exigency, I know of no other way to deal with it immediately and effectively than in this particular way; but the time will come when we will have to choose our methods and our remedy with more patience and after greater investigation and with greater wisdom than the mere passing of a criminal statute. As I have said, while I am perfectly willing to support the bill as a war measure, and for the purpose of dealing with the evil in this crisis, it by no means commits me to the policy of dealing with the situation as a permanent proposition in this way. The disease must have a broader, more humane, and patient treatment. We must remove some of the causes before we expect the trouble to disappear.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will permit an inquiry, does not the Senator from Montana think that there ought to be some provision in this bill that would make nonmailable the publications referred to in section 3 of the measure? The Senator will remember that there is a bill pending before the Judiciary Committee which I introduced some time ago, relating to the use of the mails by organizations of the character contemplated by this bill. It was referred to a subcommittee consisting of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], and myself. The present bill was reported by the subcommittee. In the subcommittee the question was considered whether any provision should be incorporated in the measure which was being prepared that would deny the use of the mail to publications emanating from the criminal organizations denounced in this bill. The members of the subcommittee concluded not to attempt any legislation of such a character as a part of this measure, but I reserved the right to offer an amendment to cover this point when the bill was being considered in the Senate. It seems to me that there ought to be some provision here that would deny the use of the mails to the poisonous, disloyal, and treasonable matter referred to in section 3; and, if it will not prevent the immediate passage of the bill or impede it in any way, I should be glad to offer an amendment having for its object the exclusion from the mails of all publications and printed matter to which reference is made in section 3.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah knows that I am not at all averse to the idea which he expresses, that there ought to be a provision which would make matter of this kind unmailable, and authorize its exclusion from the mails.

I voted for such a provision when the espionage bill was under consideration recently; but I am satisfied, and the Senator from Utah can not be unaware, that there is a very decided difference of opinion in this body on that subject, and I very much fear that the precipitation of that question would delay very much, if not defeat, the passage of the bill. I hope, therefore, that we may have that question reserved for consideration as an independent measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not want to do anything, of course, that would interfere with the speedy passage of this bill. I believe, however, that an amendment such as I am about to read will not be objectionable, will not provoke discussion, and will be accepted by every Senator. What I suggest is as follows:

SEC. 5. Every publication and paper referred to in section 3 of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the espionage act as amended does not cover every conceivable phase of the discussion of this war from every conceivable standpoint, I do not know how it can be covered.

Mr. President, I am anxious to see this bill pass; but if there is going to be any adding to the dictatorial power of the Postmaster General in this situation, it can not pass to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Nor to-morrow.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from Idaho, in my opinion, is entirely unwarranted. There have been no dictatorial powers conferred in the espionage act upon the Postmaster General, and the proposed amendment would not confer any dictatorial powers upon the Post Office Department, and the Senator from Idaho must know it.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho is perfectly aware of what he said, and he has no modification whatever to make. He knows precisely the language that was used in that bill, and he has to say that nothing additional will be added to this bill to-day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Idaho can pursue such course as he may desire, and he may, if he desires, prevent—because I do not want to impede the passage of the bill by the tendering of this amendment—but obviously this amendment ought to be accepted by everyone who desires to see a needed law properly enforced and manifest evils corrected. It is not sufficient to punish criminally those who violate the law, but the Government ought not to be required to convey through the mails their treasonable and incendiary publications. If the Senator from Idaho objects to the criminal, disloyal, and seditious publications referred to in section 3 being excluded from the mails, he must reconcile his course with his own conscience. I shall not offer the amendment at the present time.

Mr. BORAH. I have no difficulty at all in dealing with my own conscience. I simply desire to say that I have no desire to see such material go through the mails of the United States; but I have a desire that the question as to whether or not it is that kind of material shall be determined in accordance with the established principles of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence and justice. That is the position which I take in regard to it. I do not want these things to be determined through wholly ex parte arbitrary methods.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from Montana a question, in lines 6 and 7 the words "without authority of law" are inserted. Can it be possible that we have a law that would authorize the use of force, violence, or physical injury in a case of this kind? Are not those words unnecessary, and do they not at least suggest that there might be a law that would justify the use of force or violence for the purposes here forbidden?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the language he speaks of was the subject of some consideration both by the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee and by the full committee. It was proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], a member of the subcommittee, who suggested that under certain circumstances the life of a citizen may be taken legally, or property may be destroyed legally. For instance, under many prohibition statutes liquor, being contraband, is seized and destroyed, and thus property is injured. He was apprehensive that without some language of this kind it would be contended that some of those statutes would be abrogated and that it would be made a crime to injure property or person, even though some other statute authorized it to be done, and out of abundance of caution this language was inserted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not apprehend that the words will do any harm, and yet it strikes me that it is strange phraseology to say—

Any association, organization, society, or corporation, one of whose purposes or professed purposes is to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change within the United States by the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury.

I am not a lawyer, and, of course, can not undertake to discuss the legal meaning of that language; but, in reading it, it struck me as a suggestion that we might enact a law that would permit these things, which, of course, I think is not at all probable to say the least. However, I will not insist upon the suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. I feel at liberty to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that my own ideas coincided very much with his.

Mr. GALLINGER. It can do no harm, Mr. President, and yet I felt like calling attention to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, primarily this bill is designed to prevent associations advocating change by force and lawlessness from carrying out their purposes and avowed objects during times of war. The bill limits its operation to the continuance of the war. I very much regret that it is so limited, in so far as it affects these associations. I have long been apprehensive regarding the effect upon society and the safety of person and property of a certain criminal organization which has been permitted by the nonaction of the States to assume somewhat formidable proportions and which has become one of the most effective agencies of the enemies of the United States not only in the dissemination of propaganda, but in the use of what members of the society are very fond of calling "direct action" against many of our industrial units. It violates the law both of God and of man in the attempted execution of its purposes to set aside all social conventions and to create anarchy wherever it is possible. They have in some instances obtained possession of local official positions designed for the safeguarding of society, for keeping the peace, and for the enforcement of law and order, and these they have used for wholly contrary ends. They have intimidated whole districts and sections of the country and have at times made it very difficult, through fear of personal injury afterwards inflicted, to secure convictions at the hands of honest men in their capacity as jurors, whose oath of office requires them to convict where the evidence justifies it.

I believe that the strong hand of the United States Government is essential to wipe this society from the face of the earth, and this is a step in the right direction. Of course, it is quite as necessary to prohibit the advocacy of the so-called principles of such organizations by their members as to prohibit their acting in an associated capacity and in the holding of meetings to consider better methods of carrying out and making effective their infernal propaganda.

I was told some days ago that one of the organizers of the I. W. W. appeared before the commission appointed by the President to inquire into the facts concerning the now notorious Mooney case. He was asked whether he believed in and advocated murder. He said, "Yes; because the end justified the means." He was asked whether he advocated the destruction of property, and he answered, "Yes; because the end justified the means." He was then asked, Mr. President, whether he advocated the overthrow of social conditions by any means whatever. He answered, "Yes; because the end justified the means." Yet that man was permitted to walk out a free man from the doors of that commission. He went there, as I understand, to protest that Mr. Mooney had not been convicted according to the forms of the Constitution and the law!

Mr. President, I have here a copy of a so-called hymn, furnished me by a gentleman who vouches for its genuineness, which is sung by the I. W. W. to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and which appears in the I. W. W. songbook. It gives a graphic idea and mental picture of the infernal activities and criminal characteristics of the members of this association. I shall therefore inflict it upon the Senate:

"CHRISTIANS AT WAR."

(The following "hymn," sung by the I. W. W.'s to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and written by John F. Kendrick, is reprinted from the I. W. W. songbook.)

Onward, Christian soldiers! Duty's way is plain;
Slay your Christian neighbors, or by them be slain.
Pulpiteers are spouting effervescent swill,
God above is calling you to rob and rape and kill,
All your acts are sanctified by the Lamb on high;
If you love the Holy Ghost, go murder, pray, and die.

Onward, Christian soldiers! Rip and tear and smite!
Let the gentle Jesus bless your dynamite.
Splinter skulls with shrapnel, fertilize the sod;
Folk who do not speak your tongue deserve the curse of God.
Smash the doors of every home, pretty maidens seize;
Use your might and sacred right to treat them as you please.

Onward, Christian soldiers! Eat and drink your fill;
Rob with bloody fingers. Christ O. K.'s the bill.
Steal the farmer's savings, take their grain and meat;
Even though the children starve, the Savior's bums must eat.
Burn the peasants' cottages, orphans leave bereft;
In Jehovah's holy name, wreak ruin right and left.

Onward, Christian soldiers! Drench the land with gore;
Mercy is a weakness all the gods abhor.
Bayonet the babies, jab the mothers, too;
Hoist the cross of Calvary to hallow all you do.
File your bullets' noses flat, poison every well;
God decrees your enemies must all go plumb to hell.

Onward, Christian soldiers! Blighting all you meet,
Trampling human freedom under pious feet.
Praise the Lord whose dollar sign dupes His favored race!
Make the foreign trash respect your bullion brand of grace,
Trust in mock salvation, serve as pirates' tools;
History will say of you: "That pack of G—— d—— fools."

These people may call this a travesty or satire upon existing conditions. I am credibly informed that it is a part of the literature of this infamous organization.

I hope this bill will pass, Mr. President, and that it will be enforced wherever the occasion requires as summarily and completely as may be necessary to wipe out of existence this foul nest of thieves and murderers, the toleration of whose existence in this country as an association is a libel upon our character and our integrity as a law-abiding people.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I have no objection to any measure which seeks to curb these I. W. W. activities, but I am afraid that section 3 of this bill unwittingly goes a great deal further than that and may possibly accomplish a great many other things besides that, and things that were not even dreamed of by the proponents of the bill when they drew it.

I quite agree with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and quite disagree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the question of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was properly answered by the Senator from Montana. Under this bill anybody who advocated or threatened lynching under any circumstances, upon any occasion, or for any purpose could be prosecuted in the Federal courts. Of course, the several States ought to be left to deal with matters of this kind.

Let me call the attention of the Senate, and particularly of the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Idaho, to the reason why I think that. The third section deals with individuals. Of course, what I have said does not apply at all to these sections which deal with associations or organizations, but the third section of the bill deals with individuals and provides:

That any person who, while the United States is engaged in war, knowingly prints, publishes, edits, issues, circulates, sells, or offers for sale or distributes any book, pamphlet, picture, paper, circular, card, letter, writing, print, publication, or document of any kind in which is taught, advocated, advised, or defended—

That is complete there now—

or who shall in any manner teach, advocate, advise, or defend the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, as a means of accomplishing any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change, or otherwise, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 10 years or by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

That is, this measure applies to any person who shall either advise or defend the use of these means or the threat of such injury either for the purpose of accomplishing any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change, or for any other purpose whatever. That broadens it to an extent that I do not believe the framers of the bill had in mind, and I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will be willing to strike out those two words "or otherwise." I think if he will do that, probably he will have accomplished all that he is seeking to accomplish without using language so general that it may be construed to cover almost everything; and that is especially true when not only the injury itself is provided against, but even the threat of the injury, which is very drastic. If we go that far and apply this bill to whoever shall advocate these things or even threaten them, I think we had better define exactly what we have in mind. I hope the Senate will agree with me. I suggest that amendment, anyhow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it was an inadvertence, I am sure, that the word "such" does not appear in the bill on line 3, page 2, after the word "any," so that it will read "shall by any such means prosecute or pursue."

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, before the word "means," it is proposed to insert the word "such."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for just a minute, I want to ask the Secretary to state the amendment I suggested informally just a moment ago—to strike out the words "or otherwise" on page 3, line 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "or otherwise" and the comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall vote for the motion to strike out. I think the words "or otherwise" are subject to such a construction, or at least may be the cause of such confusion, as probably to work injury. Certainly if the construction suggested by the Senator from Georgia is the correct one, that language would reach any possible offense of any kind or character. I must admit that I do not understand whether that is the correct meaning or not, but I think the use of the words "or otherwise" simply tends to confuse. I hope the Senator will agree with me and that the words "or otherwise" may be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I feel disposed to accept the suggestion made to eliminate those two words from the bill, my own reason being that many petty offenses and petty offenders would thus be brought within the scope of the bill that might very well be left for disposition by the local authorities. The Federal Government ought not to be charged with the responsibility of prosecuting anybody, for instance, who commits malicious mischief or who advises the commission of malicious mischief, and that would fall within the terms of this provision as it stands.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment, I could give, in concrete form, my reasons for objecting to these words from my experience, or from matters which have come under my observation with reference to what is commonly known as the Ku Klux statute as it has been enforced in some of the public-land States, where parties have been tried under the United States law for purely a local offense—for an assault and battery or something of that kind. Some one who desired their prosecution had them prosecuted before a United States court for attempting to prevent people from locating upon the public domain when there was no proof that there was any such purpose upon the part of either party, either the man assaulted or the man who assaulted him, when there was no evidence that the party assaulted was even attempting or intending or even had a right to settle upon the public domain. I recall very vividly one case where, as a matter of fact, it was shown that the party had used every right he had upon the public domain and could not possibly have been precluded by any assault from his right to settle upon the public domain. Still the man who was charged with the assault was tried before a United States court, after being acquitted by the State court of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not care how far we go to reach organizations like the I. W. W., provided, of course, that before we declare the guilt of any man he shall have a trial according to the laws of the land and shall have been proven guilty.

I have had heretofore something to say on the floor of the Senate about strikes, especially where the strikes are in industries which are furnishing war material.

Mr. WALSH. Did the Senator address me?

Mr. REED. Not for the moment. I intend to address an interrogatory to the Senator.

I think I have gone quite as far as any other Member of the Senate in saying that I believe a strike brought on in an industry that is making ammunition or armament is almost as bad a thing to do as a direct interference with soldiers upon the line of battle.

Yet, Mr. President, I want to ask the author of the bill if he intends to draw within it every labor organization or every labor society that may advocate a strike, provided some of its members may advocate the use of force or a threat of force?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should be very sorry, indeed, if anyone should get the impression even that there was any purpose in this bill to prohibit what is known as a peaceful strike; that is to say, an organized abandonment of work. I am a friend of organized labor and have been for many years. I believe that organizations of men engaged as wageworkers are absolutely essential in our present situation of affairs for the purpose of securing not only the industrial but the political freedom of the wageworkers.

But, Mr. President, the legitimate organizations of this country do not undertake to accomplish their ends by the use of force or violence or by the destruction of property or injury to persons, nor by threats of such. They proclaim and have proclaimed again and again that they do not have any such purpose and do not exist for any such purpose.

If any injudicious member of such an organization goes out and advocates the use of force or violence or injury to person or property to accomplish their end, he falls within the condemnation of this act. He is the greatest enemy there is of organized labor. He is the peril of every strike that is conducted upon legitimate lines.

I can not believe, Mr. President, that any labor organization will seek protection for a man who advocates that method of securing such an end as they seek to obtain.

Mr. REED. I desire to state with all emphasis that disloyal organizations like the I. W. W., which are going about at a time like this seeking to stir up dissension in the land and which commits acts of sabotage and other criminal offenses, get no sympathy from me. Upon the other hand, I am willing to go almost to any extent to work their extermination.

But I want to call the attention of the Senator to just what is within the four corners of this bill as I see it. My examination has been a little hasty, having just been made here on the floor of the Senate. While I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, I did not happen to be there the day this particular bill came up.

I am seeking to elicit the earnest attention of the Senator who is the author of the bill in order, if possible, to convince him there is some necessity of amendment. Observe now as I scan the bill: That any organization, "one of whose purposes or professed purposes is to bring about any social or economic change within the United States by the use of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or by threat of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises, or defends the use of force that is within the terms of the bill."

"Any organization which seeks to bring about any social or economic change by the use of force." What kind of force? It does not mean physical force, because that is afterwards specifically enumerated. It says any kind of force.

I raise the question, therefore, whether under this bill an organization that proposed merely to boycott a man in order to bring about an economic change, to wit, a change in wages or a change in prices or a change in the economic life of a community, would be guilty of the employment of force within the meaning of this statute, for it does not mean physical force, because the word "force" is followed by the words "violence or physical injury."

Now, let us go a step further in the analysis of the bill. It is proposed that any person who shall contribute any dues to any such organization shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 and imprisonment for not more than 10 years in the penitentiary. It is true, as the Senator has stated, that the best protestations of labor organizations always are that they do not propose to employ physical violence or to destroy property, yet they have employed force in the nature of boycott for many years. A boycott certainly involves the employment of force.

But I waive that for the moment. Here is a local labor organization. It gets into a strike, and it finally comes to a point where fisticuffs are employed.

Mr. HARDWICK. Where picketing is indulged in.

Mr. REED. I prefer the illustration where fisticuffs are employed. Here is a man who has paid his dues to that organization. He may even be protesting against that method, yet I would be very much afraid he might be drawn in under the terms of the bill.

I do not make this observation in an antagonistic spirit; I make it by way of the most kindly suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I feel very thankful to the Senator for the suggestion he has made. Of course, if the word "force" could be given any significance in the statute except physical force there would be some basis for the contention. In other words, I believe we sometimes talk about moral force, and if the force here would be considered as moral force the statute would, of course, be objectionable. But I do not think it is possible to give that construction to the statue.

Let me remark in the first place, Mr. President, that neither boycotting nor picketing contemplates the use of force. Not only that, if it did contemplate the use of force it would be subject to an injunction, and it never is.

You do not use any force when you boycott a man. Everybody agree they will not, with that method. Where does the force come in? There is not any such thing as force in boycotting. Indeed that was the purpose, in the first place, when it was originally utilized in Ireland. The use of force would have subjected the Irishman who was objecting to conditions prevelant in his country at that time to arrest and conviction. So he devised a method of securing the end by means that did not apply to force. Boycott was the name of a very objectionable landlord or agent of some landlord, and there was a general agreement that they would not trade with him, they would not talk to him, they would not recognize his family socially; he was simply isolated. That is the origin of the word "boycott." It is the antithesis of force.

So, Mr. President, with reference to picketing, what is picketing? I shall submit in the RECORD a little later extracts from the authorized publications of the I. W. W. They advocate for the purpose of securing their ends the establishment of pickets who shall prevent men from coming in the neighborhood of the works that are picketed.

That contemplates clearly the use of force to accomplish their end, but picketing as ordinarily employed in a strike does not contemplate force at all. The purpose of pickets is that a record may be kept of everyone who goes to work, and if he is a nonunion man he will be recognized and a report is made, and they will govern themselves accordingly.

Those of us who have had something to do with strike litigation recognize these distinctions very clearly, and it is recognized in the law. It is recognized in the Clayton Act. The Clayton Act does not attempt to justify the use of force either in connection with picketing or in connection with a boycott, but it clearly authorizes the use of both those means for the purpose of conducting a successful strike.

That is my answer to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment for a suggestion? The Senator from Montana says that he has the declaration of the constitution and by-laws of the I. W. W. which he proposes to put in the RECORD. For the purpose of the argument at this time in this discussion, in connection with the line the Senator from Missouri is now taking in the discussion of the word "force" and what it means, if the Senator will allow me to do so I will read into the RECORD or have read from the desk from the general articles, by-laws, and constitution, and so forth, of the I. W. W. their tactics or methods as they have adopted them officially, which I think will throw a good deal of light on the discussion which has now taken place. If the Senator will allow me to introduce it now in his time, as I do not care to discuss this question at all, I will simply read it.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to reading it, although the demonstration that the I. W. W. are a bad lot is quite unnecessary to me.

Mr. FALL. I understand that, but they define "force."

Mr. REED. But they can not define force for the courts.

Mr. FALL. My impression is that this bill was drawn by someone who understood very well the tactics the I. W. W. propose.

Mr. REED. I have no doubt of it and I have no doubt it hits the I. W. W. I want them hit.

Mr. FALL. I understand the Senator does.

Mr. REED. I want them struck as hard a blow as possible, but I do not want, in trying to get at that miserable and infamous organization, to strike organizations we are not looking for at all.

Mr. FALL. I understand.

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator to read it.

Mr. FALL. With the Senator's permission, I read as follows:

I. W. W. TACTICS OR METHODS.

As a revolutionary organization, the Industrial Workers of the World aim to use any and all tactics that will get the results sought with the least expenditure of time and energy. The tactics used are determined solely by the power of the organization to make good in their use. The question of "right" and "wrong" does not concern us.

No terms made with an employer are final. All peace, so long as the wage system lasts, is but an armed truce. At any favorable opportunity the struggle for more control of industry is renewed.

The Industrial Workers realize that the day of successful long strikes is past. Under all ordinary circumstances a strike that is not won in four to six weeks can not be won by remaining out longer. In trustified industry the employer can better afford to fight one strike that lasts six months than he can six strikes that take place in that period.

The organization does not allow any party to enter into time contracts with the employers. It aims where strikes are used to paralyze all branches of the industry involved when the employers can least afford a cessation of work—during the busy season and when there are rush orders to be filled.

The Industrial Workers of the World maintain that nothing will be conceded by the employers except that which we have the power to take and hold by the strength of our organization. Therefore we seek no agreements with the employers.

Failing to force concessions from the employers by the strike, work is resumed and "sabotage" is used to force the employers to concede the demands of the workers.

The great progress made in machine production results in an ever-increasing army of unemployed. To counteract this the Industrial Workers of the World aim to establish the shorter workday and to slow up the working pace, thus compelling the employment of more and more workers.

To facilitate the work of organization, large initiation fees and dues are prohibited by the Industrial Workers of the World as an organization.

During strikes the works are closely picketed and every effort made to keep the employers from getting workers into the shops. All supplies are cut off from strike-bound shops. All shipments are refused or missent, delayed, and lost, if possible. Strike breakers are also isolated to the full extent of the power of the organization. Interference by the Government is resented by open violation of the Government's orders, going to jail en masse, causing expense to the taxpayers, which is but another name for the employing class.

In short, the Industrial Workers of the World advocate the use of militant "direct-action" tactics to the full extent of our power to make good.

This is from their official document, offered and accepted in evidence in the United States court at Los Angeles, Cal., in the trial of certain parties who were accused of violating the neutrality laws of the United States, and whom the evidence showed were being supported, both financially and otherwise, by the I. W. W. organization.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I intend to take but a very few minutes. I would think I had not done my duty if I did not call attention to the language of this proposed act. I presume we shall repeat the old experience—that is, because some outrageous thing has been attempted or some outrageous organization has come into existence, we at once proceed to pass laws so broad and sweeping that scores of objects we do not want to penalize will nevertheless be declared felonies.

Mr. President, I can not agree with my distinguished friend, the author of this bill, in regard to the construction of the word "force."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I can give the Senator from Missouri a little further enlightenment upon that. I have sent for the volume of Words and Phrases containing the word "force," and I find, in the case of "burglary":

The "force" required to constitute burglary under Pennsylvania Code, article 842, may be by lifting the latch of a closed door, by raising a window, by entry at a chimney, or other unusual place, the introduction of a hand or any instrument to draw out the property through the opening made by the burglar for that purpose.

Of course, it would not be moral force.

"Force," as applied to a forced marriage, implies physical constraint of the will.

Mr. REED. Well, I will now call the Senator's attention to some definitions. I happened by mere accident——

Mr. WALSH. Pardon me one moment. In construing the forcible-entry statute it is said:

The word "force" carries with it necessarily the idea of violence exercised, and it may include a putting in fear by threats, but it can not include a mere entry by the ordinary means of entrance without any breaking and without any threat of violence to the person.

Mr. REED. The employment of the phrase is sufficient. I do not think there is much question about the fact that "force" does not necessarily have to be physical force, physical violence. For instance, we will take the question of the boycott. I happen to have on my desk Black's Law Dictionary; I read the definition of boycott.

Boycott. In criminal law. A conspiracy formed and intended, directly or indirectly, to prevent the carrying on of any lawful business or to injure the business of anyone by wrongfully preventing those who would be customers from buying anything from or employing the representatives of said business by threat, intimidation, or other forcible means.

I think that the word "force" would cover a boycott. A man, we will say, is running a grocery store and he is informed by an organization, the membership of which largely patronizes that store, that if he does not do a certain thing he will be boycotted. That means that nobody will trade with him; it may mean that nobody will speak to him; it may mean that as he passes along the street he will be subject to the silent contempt, or even the manifested contempt, of the community. It is one of the most terrible instrumentalities that can be employed. I observe that that method is referred to by Black. The phrase "threats, intimidation, or other forcible means," that being a part of the boycott.

Again—and the remarks which I am now making are without preparation—the word "force" as defined by Black is:

Power, dynamically considered, that is in motion or in action; constraining power; compulsion; strength directed to an end. Usually the word occurs in such connections as to show that unlawful or wrongful action is meant.

Unlawful violence—

That is also force—

In Scotch law. Coercion or duress—

Are treated under the head of "force."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri pardon a further interruption?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. I have sent for Cogley on Strikes and Lockouts, and I find here a definition of "boycotting" and "picketing" that I should like to give to the Senator for such aid as it may afford.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. Here is the definition:

PICKETING.

Employees early learned that a strike would be futile if they could not by some means prevent others filling the places they had voluntarily surrendered. Picketing, therefore, was one of the means adopted for that purpose. The system appears in the earliest cases on strikes. According to the modern doctrine, "picketing" by members of a trade-union on strike, consists in posting members at all the approaches to the works struck against for the purpose of observing and reporting the workmen going to or coming from the works and of using such influence as may be in their power to prevent the workmen from accepting work there.

Then it says:

Ordinarily picketing is a part of boycotting. Some of the cases, with good reason, held that picketing was itself intimidation. But Parliament in England and the legislatures of some of the States of this country have so far yielded to the encroachments of mobs as to legalize acts and conduct that at first were crimes. It may now be stated as to the rule both in England and the United States that if picketing is peacefully conducted and the acts of the pickets confined to watching, observation, and persuasion, it is not a criminal offense. But if violence to person or property is resorted to or workmen are so persistently followed as to inspire fear, or if their tools are hid so they can not work, or their houses or places of business are watched or beset, or the approaches thereto, then the acts of the pickets become unlawful.

So you will see that picketing does not imply the use of force or violence at all.

Mr. REED. It does not necessarily imply it.

Mr. WALSH. It does not necessarily imply it; certainly not. But just as soon as you apply force or violence, then this proposed statute would step in.

Mr. REED. Ah, but the decision on that authority goes no further, as I gather it from hearing it read, than to say that the court and Parliament have finally yielded to the idea that mob law may proceed that far; that being practically the phrase of the book.

Mr. WALSH. The expression——

Mr. REED. But when we come to define the word "force" here, while I think that the authority read would be of persuasive influence, I should not regard it as conclusive. I should be glad to hear the other authorities referred to by the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. The remark I was going to make was that the authority holds that peaceful picketing is not a crime and does not imply force or violence; but when force or violence are used in connection with it, it then becomes criminal. I read further:

BOYCOTTS.

A boycott is one of the most serious forms of intimidation resorted to during strikes. It may be and frequently is accompanied by violence to person or property, or it may be a complete social or business ostracism, or both, of the parties boycotted.

* * * * * * *

Anderson's Law Dictionary defines boycotting as "a combination between persons to suspend or discontinue dealings or patronage with another person or persons because of refusal to comply with a request of him or them."

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HOLLIS. It seems to me very clear that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] wish to reach the same offense. It is merely a matter of accurate definition. Now, would it not satisfy the Senator from Montana to strike out the word "force" and to leave the word "violence"? There can be no doubt about the meaning of "violence"; and if the Senator wishes to reach only questions of violence that will do it. Then the question which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] very properly raised will be cut out of consideration.

Mr. WALSH. I may be able to make a suggestion that will reach the case. I would not like to make the substitution proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, because "violence" there contemplates the application of force in intensity; but I have not the slightest objection in the world to inserting the word "physical" before the word "force," so that it shall read "physical force."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that will reach that point. Now, I call the Senator's attention to this language. It is proposed to make it a criminal offense, punishable by a heavy fine and long imprisonment, for anyone to contribute dues to any such unlawful organization; that is, such an organization as has been defined in the first section. I think that some phrase ought to be introduced so that the person contributing the dues must have understood the purpose of the organization.

I have this in mind: Here is a man who belongs to a labor lodge; a strike is started and finally the lodge itself resolves upon the employment of such a degree of force as would bring it within the terms of this proposed statute. Members contribute dues; there is no statement here that they shall do it knowingly; that is, that they shall do it knowing the purpose of the organization. So I think the language is too loose and general at that point.

I call the Senator's attention to that. Then I call attention to another fact. We are liable to reach, under this bill, a class of organizations which are organized for the employment of force, but which it has never been intended to put within the control of the Federal Government. There are States in this country where there are organizations to promote social purity and good morals by the occasional application of force. There are societies organized for the purpose of capturing horse thieves, and similar societies that have taken immoral women and immoral men out and chastised them and given them time to leave the community. I do not justify that way of treating crime; but it seems to me that there is no intention on the part of the author of this legislation to incorporate that class of organizations within the purview of this bill and to make them amenable to the Federal statute.

I wish to suggest to the very distinguished author of this bill, since this discussion has taken place, that if he will take the bill and go over it now he will perhaps want to make a few changes in it. That could be done, and the bill be brought up again to-morrow morning. I do not want to delay its passage. If, however, he does not want to do that; I shall not any further resist the passage of the bill; indeed, I do not want to be understood now as resisting its passage. I am only seeking to bring about its amendment.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the bill beyond to-day, for I heartily approve its purposes and shall very cheerfully vote for it. I believe it ought to be passed and enacted into law as soon as possible.

I have but one objection to it, and I am going to offer an amendment to meet that objection. If this bill is a good thing in time of war, I can see no reason why it would not be good in time of peace. If the organization which has been referred to here, or any other organization with similar purposes——

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BECKHAM. I will not yield just now—if any such organization is prohibited in time of war from accomplishing what are defined in this bill as unlawful purposes, it certainly should not be allowed to do so in time of peace. I therefore move to strike out in line——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Kentucky that his amendment at this time is not in order. There is an amendment pending, the pending amendment being that offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. SHEPPARD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What became of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] with reference to the insertion of the word "such"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been disposed of; it was not formally tendered. Before the Senate was permitted to act upon the amendment of the Senator from Montana he yielded to the Senator from Georgia, and the parliamentary status is that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is now pending.

Mr. HARDWICK. I did not want to displace the amendment of the Senator from Montana. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana ought to be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Montana will be considered before the Senate. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, before the word "means," it is proposed to insert the word "such."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the question I wished to ask the Senator from Kentucky is this: What power would the Federal Government have to do this in time of peace? This proposed act rests on the war power; and Congress has not, in my judgment, any right to make acts of this sort in the several States crimes in times of peace.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Kentucky that that was the view taken by the Judiciary Committee, that the only power the Federal Government has in the premises is under the war power.

Mr. BECKHAM. That may be the view of the committee, but I wish to offer my amendment. Do I understand, Mr. President, that another amendment is now pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is now before the Senate; so that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is not now in order.

Mr. BECKHAM. Well, my amendment would be to strike out in line 2, page 2, the words "during any war in which the United States is engaged"; in line 7, section 2, to strike out "while the United States is engaged in war"; in line 17, page 2, to strike out the words "while the United States is engaged in war"; and on page 3, line 8, to strike out the words "during any war in which the United States may be engaged." I do not believe that the inclusion in the bill of these words which I propose to strike out is necessary to make it constitutional.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georga. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "or otherwise" and the comma.

Mr. REED. One moment. I was engaged in conversation. I may be in error. I thought the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky was being voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia is the amendment that has just been voted on.

Mr. REED. Very well, I withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is agreed to. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 2 and 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "during any war in which the United States is engaged" and the comma.

On lines 7 and 8 of the same page it is proposed to strike out the words "while the United States is engaged in war" and the comma.

On lines 17 and 18 of page 2 it is proposed to strike out the words "while the United States is engaged in war" and the comma.

Also, on page 3, lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "during any war in which the United States may be engaged" and the comma.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that if this amendment should be adopted it might render the whole bill unconstitutional. I can not discuss the amendment at this time; but I think in all probability it would be held unconstitutional, for the reason that we have no power to pass such a law except the war power.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I share the apprehension expressed by the Senator from Idaho. I feel very fearful that the whole act would fall if that amendment should prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Montana, I think I will offer an amendment to insert the word "physical" before the word "force" in four places—on page 1, line 7; on page 1, line 10; on page 2, line 24; and on page 3, line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I am in favor of the amendment. It merely expresses the view that was entertained concerning the significance of the bill by everyone who had anything to do with the preparation of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I did not quite catch what the amendment is. Is it to strike out the word "force"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "force," where it occurs in the bill four times—on page 1, line 7; on page 1, line 10; on page 2, line 24; and on page 3, line 11—it is proposed to insert the word "physical," so that it will read "of physical force, violence, or physical injury to person or property."

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not care to take time to debate this matter, but I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, on page 2, lines 1 and 2, I move to strike out the words "or for any other purpose."

Before the Secretary states the amendment I want to say that I think that is practically the same proposition that was involved in the other general language. The first section of the bill reads in this way:

That any association, organization, society, or corporation, one of whose purposes or professed purposes is to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change within the United States by the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises, or defends the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, to accomplish such change or for any other purpose——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is a little difference there, and I trust the Senator will not press the amendment. This section refers only to associations; and if an association exists and teaches, for the purpose of accomplishing any end, the use of force or violence or the destruction of property, I think we may very well endeavor to suppress the organization during the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. I quite admit that there is that difference, although I think the same proposition is involved, and I will tell the Senator why. Now, you see, you even put in the threat to use violence.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but it is only addressed to an organization.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know; but when you are dealing with the war power, and enacting legislation under it, it strikes me that you ought to confine it to things that are strictly connected with the war. I think the Senator is right as a matter of public policy, that this would be a perfectly sound proposition for any State legislature or for all State legislatures; but surely you do not want to broaden it beyond the express purposes that you have outlined in the bill, every one of which is immediately and directly connected with the adequate prosecution of the war. The trouble is that this language would broaden it so that if any organization, for any reason, used language that some people might say threatened violence to person or property, although it had no relation to the war, although it did not seek to change the policies of the country, nor did it come within any of these definitions sought by the Senator, the Senator's committee, and the Senator's bill, it would come within the provisions of the law as written. In other words, the bill would apply to language that did not seek to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change within the United States—if it was for any other reason except that.

That is the reason why I think this language ought to go out. While I hope the amendment will be adopted, I admit that it is not nearly as important as the other amendment I offered, which the Senate adopted; but I think it is going a long way to say that in the exercise of the war power you will undertake to do anything, even with organizations, where the thing penalized is not tolerably well connected with the conduct of the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator desires to strike out "or for any other purpose." Is that correct?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; that was the idea I had.

Mr. McCUMBER. Can the Senator give us an instance which he may have in his mind in which it would be perfectly proper for a person to use force or violence or physical injury toward another person? Will the Senator tell us for what lawful purpose it could be used?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia does not think he has to sustain that sort of a burden in order to establish the correctness of his proposal. If it was a purpose that was purely domestic, that was not in any way connected with the efficiency of the country in the war, then, as I view questions of this sort, the Federal Government would have no power whatever to enact a rule of civil conduct on that question; or suppose it was some purely local thing, like night riding in Kentucky or Georgia, or any other State, or these local disturbances that at times we have had, during which we have heard of some threats being used. The local courts and local laws are perfectly competent to handle those things; and, as I understood it, that was not what you were striking at at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. As the purpose is always one of intent, it would be quite simple and easy for any offender to show that his intent was for some purpose other than that connected in any way with the prosecution of the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all. If the Senator will pardon me, the question of intent is not involved at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, "purpose" must mean "intent" as used in this provision.

Mr. HARDWICK. But let me explain to the Senator why I think the question of intent is not really at stake here. "Purpose" is not used as an equivalent of "intent" in this draft:

Which teaches, advocates, advises, or defends the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury——

Now, for what purpose? For what object? I will use that word to show the Senator what I mean—— to accomplish such change——

That is, the change referred to in the previous part of the section—governmental, social, industrial, or economic changes within the United States. Now, how could you say "any other purpose" when you have already specified exactly what you mean? I can not see why those words should be used.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood that one of the reasons was so that a person who committed an unlawful act, which under any construction would be against all moral law as well as the established doctrine, could not excuse himself by saying that he intended some other purpose.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I should agree with him perfectly if we were in a State legislature enacting a rule of civil conduct; but when we exercise the war power with respect to this particular matter we ought to confine it to the objects that are really within the purview of that power. It might be that the Senator's moral proposition would be a perfectly unanswerable one in every State legislature, in all of the 48 States; but surely, even in time of war, there is a certain field for exclusive action on local questions and domestic matters left to the lawmaking bodies of the different States in the Union. That is the reason why I think it is a good amendment; and ought to be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not think a change so important as this ought to be voted on with only 15 Senators present, and therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The SECRETARY called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gronna	Martin	Shields
Beckham	Hardwick	New	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Henderson	Nugent	Smoot
Calder	Hollis	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Phelan	Thompson
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Tillman
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Trammell
Curtis	Kendrick	Pomerene	Walsh
Dillingham	Kenyon	Reed	Warren
Fall	King	Robinson	Watson
Fletcher	Lewis	Saulsbury	Weeks
France	McCumber	Shafroth	Williams
Gallinger	McKellar	Sheppard
Gerry	McNary	Sherman

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is absent on account of illness.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, after some conference with the Senator who reports this bill, while I believe the amendment is right and that probably it would be safer to adopt it, I am not disposed to press it now; and if no one objects, I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendments stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "force," where it appears in the bill in four places, the word "physical" has been inserted, so as to read "of physical force, violence, or physical injury."

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall not undertake to delay this matter in any way. I want it understood, however, and in the RECORD, that I object to the insertion of the word "physical."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill is being considered during the morning hour, and unless it is passed within a very few minutes it will go over, unless by unanimous consent or by motion its consideration may be continued. I had intended making some observations concerning this measure, its objects, and purposes, and the situation which it was designed to meet, but not wishing to delay its passage, I will refrain from carrying out my design. In a word or two, however, I may add that there is a criminal and treasonable organization in our midst that is a menace to the peace and tranquillity of the people. This bill will not impinge upon the rights of any labor organization or affect any law-abiding person. It strikes at such organizations as the I. W. W.—organizations that seek the overthrow of our Government, our social and industrial institutions, and the principles of justice which obtain among civilized peoples. I regret that the States have not dealt with these organizations and their members and passed criminal statutes to adequately punish them. This measure I would not support except as a war measure. It is the duty of the States to enact all proper police regulations and such criminal laws as may be necessary to protect life and property. However, I believe that under the war powers of the Federal Government the provisions of this bill can be supported and that the disloyal, wicked, and treasonable activities of the organization referred to and many of its members are sufficient warrant for legislation of this character. Several months ago I gave an interview concerning the I. W. W. organization which was published in a metropolitan newspaper. It expresses some of my views concerning this organization, and, because of the lack of time and opportunity upon this occasion to discuss this measure and to present some of my views concerning organizations whose teachings are destructive of law and order and our Government, I desire to submit this interview and ask that it be printed in the RECORD. Of course, this interview does not consider the legal questions in legislation of this character nor cover the various phases of a subject so vital and far reaching.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

It is gratifying to know that the overwhelming majority of the people of this country are loyal to its institutions and devoted to the great principles of liberty for which this Republic stands and with grim and earnest determination are supporting the administration in this stupendous war between the forces of democracy and liberty upon the one hand and of autocracy and tyranny upon the other hand.

There are, however, within the borders of our land a few traitors, a number of Prussianized Americans who came to this country to secure political liberty and to enjoy the material blessings of a free Republic and whose allegiance is still given to the enemy that is seeking the destruction of this Republic; a number of sentimental pacifists, whose misguided teachings are poisonous and graze the edge of treason. Then there are the members of that criminal, disloyal, and brazenly atheistic organization known as the Industrial Workers of the World. Perhaps there is no greater menace to the internal peace and domestic tranquillity of our country than this criminal association.

It is difficult, in view of our standards of civilization and the Christian ideals and ethical concepts of the American people to comprehend how such a malignant growth as this organization is could fasten itself upon our industrial system. However, we find in nature the strange paradox that extremes sometimes meet; and so in society and in government the ethereal, righteous, and progressive forces are opposed by dark and destructive elements.

Numerically the Industrial Workers of the World organization is not strong. I do not think its membership exceeds 200,000, and yet its name has become a source of terror and fear for the same reason that a mad dog in the crowded thoroughfare or a murderous maniac at large might terrorize a large community.

It is not only an organization destructive of society, but it is a treasonable organization. This is not overstating it, because it is giving aid and comfort to the enemies of this Republic. Its leaders and members defiantly announce that they will commit deeds of violence and assail the very foundations of the Government and of society. They attack in subtle and in open manner the industrial life of the Nation to bring about the result that there will be no resources for military organization or preparedness, so that this country may be prevented from giving any aid or support to the forces of the great nations with which we are united in an effort to defend liberty and defeat Prussian militarism.

The members of this organization have no interest in this Government or in any government. Indeed they disclaim any nationality. They know no flag except the flag of revolution, and no emblem except that which stands for murder and the most savage depravity. They refuse allegiance to any country, deny the authority of any governmental agency, and desire the destruction of every form of authority or government, national and municipal. They regard this nation-wide war with satisfaction and would rejoice if it culminated in the destruction of our Government and the overthrow of all authority in the world. Having no flag and no country and wishing the overthrow of this great Republic, they are doing everything within their power to prevent the Nation and the people from mobilizing their resources, developing their industries, raising armies and building navies, and taking effective steps to vigorously prosecute the war.

If German troops were upon our shores, they would furnish information that would aid in their efforts to subjugate our people. If they could communicate any information to our enemies that would aid them in their efforts against us, they would willingly impart it. Indeed, their plan is to do everything possible to hinder and prevent the prosecution of the war, to sow the seeds of internal revolution, to spread sedition, to inflame the passions of the ignorant, and to demoralize and disorganize all of the forces that make for law and order.

The members of this criminal specie find their way into the industrial circles and among all the laboring classes. Their purpose is to compel, by threats, criminal violence, or otherwise, all persons who labor to strike in order to arrest all of the forces necessary to the life of the Nation. They attempt to close every mine, shut down every factory and manufacturing plant, stop every train, prevent the planting of all crops, or the reaping of the harvest. They declare that they are a revolutionary organization, and that the question of right and wrong does not concern them or affect their methods or their aims. They boldly declare, as a part of their creed, that the interference of the Government will be opposed by open violation of the Government's orders, and they advocate the use of militant and "direct action," by which they mean the use of force and violence, the employment of every weapon to destroy government, paralyze industry, demoralize society.

They see in this world war an opportunity, as they believe, to bring about their plan of destroying all government and capital and of seizing whatever there is corporeal or physical in this world. In pursuance of this nefarious design they destroy property by the use of dynamite and in an incendiary way. They blow up manufacturing plants and seek particularly the destruction of those agencies employed by private individuals or the Government in providing munitions, clothing, and the multitude of articles required in the prosecution of the war.

In the West they are particularly active and have found a fruitful field for their propaganda. They have been especially active in their efforts to shut down the copper and lead producing mines of the West. They appreciate the imperative necessity of our Government, not only for its own uses but for the use of the nations with whom we are allied in this war, procuring immense quantities of copper and lead. Accordingly they invaded peaceable mining camps where high wages were paid and general prosperity existed, and by violence, intimidation, seditious utterances, and poisonous, treasonable efforts they caused thousands of miners to leave their employment, as a result of which mines have been shut down and a chaotic condition produced.

In many of the districts into which they penetrated there were found a large number of aliens. Some were Austrians, and in some of the Arizona mining camps a large number of them were Mexicans. Every means was employed to inflame the minds of these people against this Government and against all persons who owned any property, and particularly those who owned or operated mines and mills and plants and employed labor. Exaggerated statements were made as to the profits of employers, and impassioned appeals made to the employees that they should cease to operate the mines and manufacturing plants and all of the industrial activities of the country. Particular effort was made to provoke strikes in those works that were producing articles for the allies and for our Government. Many of these appeals were adroitly phrased and cunningly presented under the pretext of effecting a world-wide internationalism of the workingmen. But the prime purpose was to destroy production, the social organism, and the Nation.

The agricultural districts were invaded and the torch was applied where unsuccessful efforts were made to prevent the harvesting of crops. The bridges and tunnels of our land, and particularly in the West, have to be guarded by armed soldiers against the treacheries of this criminal class who would destroy them and thus prevent the operation of the trains and halt the transportation forces of our country. They would, if they had the power, destroy all bridges, railroads, and ships.

They terrorize the honest wage earner, and do not hesitate to assassinate him if they can not secure his allegiance by other means. Life has no sacredness to them, and it does not stand in the way of the accomplishment of their designs. They openly teach murder, and they brutally and defiantly advocate the destruction of property and the overthrow of government.

Their organization under any and all circumstances, is a menace to organized society and government, but it is particularly deadly in a crisis such as confronts our Nation to-day. In order to carry on the war successfully our fields and farms must be productive, our factories must be operated to their full capacity, and every resource of the people must be employed in the most efficient way. We must produce and produce still more. This means organization, union, cooperation, domestic tranquillity, and contented, patriotic, enthusiastic people in all the broad land. There must be complete integration of all of our activities.

The political, industrial, and social mechanisms must be coordinated and operated without friction.

"Sabotage" is a word employed by them, and they urge sabotage in all its forms as applied to our vast industrial machine. As they employ the word it means intimidation, coercion, and any means necessary to gain an end; it means the throwing into the delicate machinery of the industrial and economic organization any "foreign substance" that will destroy the machine. This "foreign substance" is generally force, physical violence, and murder.

They declare that by revolution and violence "capitalism" must be destroyed and all of the industries of the world surrendered to them. They proclaim that there is a guerrilla warfare as well as a battle; that the battle is between two opposing forces and must culminate in the destruction of human government, organized society, the ownership of property, and of our civilization. It is not higher wages or improved conditions for the laboring man for which this organization is striving. It is admitted that whatever demands are conceded by employers to-day, other shall be made to-morrow; that whatever agreements may be entered into, they should be violated; that instead of orderly development and harmonious relation between employer and employee, there should be revolution and no amity or friendly cooperation.

Some people entertain the view that the I. W. W. organization is seeking the amelioration of the condition of the laboring man, and there has been some sympathy in certain sections for members of this organization. As stated, such is not its object. The people might as well know exactly the character of this association. It as bitterly assails the laboring man who believes in labor unions, in government, in law and order, in the Christian civilization of the day, as it does the man who employs labor.

If 50,000 men should meet together in some public square in the city of New York and there openly and cynically deny the existence of a God, of all moral restraints, of all standards of ethics or righteousness, and should proclaim opposition to the sanctity of marriage, and the building of homes, and the assumption of the obligations entailed by the rearing of a family, and to all forms of government, either municipal, State, or national, and if they should further declare that they intended to shut down every factory, close every store, prevent the operation of street cars, take possession of the city, deprive owners of their property, whether large or small, and if following these declarations they did attempt to carry them into effect and did close factories and plants and turn men out of employment and cause violence, strikes, murders, arson, and the wanton destruction of life and property; and if they further attempted to take possession of the Government and made war upon those who were engaged in preserving peace and order, and finally they succeeded in reducing everything to welter, chaos, and ruin, then some idea might be obtained of the plans and purposes and methods of operation of this hideous, malevolent association known as the I. W. W.

So far as I can learn, the overwhelming majority of the membership are aliens. It was stated in some of the newspapers that of those recently deported from Bisbee, Ariz., one-half were Mexicans and a considerable number were Austrians, and that only a small proportion were native-born American citizens. They are nomadic, houseless, and homeless. They have no family ties, no habits of thrift or sobriety, and in every sense of the word are utterly at war with our institutions, our form of society, and our industrial and governmental life. They resent those habits of industry and thrift which are regarded as virtues among all decent and civilized communities.

A thrifty man inevitably acquires some property; the amount may be small, but it gives him a feeling of security and an interest in the Government and in the social organization of which he forms a part. He feels that he is a part of society and of the Government. In this way he becomes more stable, more conservative, and more interested in the form of local or municipal government, in the State, and in the Nation. He feels that he is a cog—although, perhaps, a small one—in the machinery of life and industry of the world. It makes for better thinking, for manhood, and for a spirit of home building. He marries, rears a family, and is interested in that family and in its happiness and welfare. He desires good government, one that is safe and progressive, one that will afford protection to the property which he acquires as well as to his person and the lives of his family.

He sees that there is an ethical principle, a standard of justice, that obtains in and applies to all human conduct, and that virtue and righteousness exalt the individual as well as the Nation. He sees that religion is a concomitant of a progressive civilization, and he learns to appreciate the fact that there is a Supreme and Omnipotent Power presiding over the destiny of men and nations. These views inspire him to better work, to greater service, for his family, his community and State. He seeks to excel in the business or trade which he follows, in order that he may be more useful, not only to himself but to his family and to the community. He sees that anarchy and chaos inevitably result from no government and when the moral restraints imposed by true religion and a high standard of ethics are not observed. All these virtues, views, and principles are sneered at and despised by the Industrial Workers of the World. To them there is no God, nothing infinite, immortal, or eternal. We are in a blind world of chance, without design and without purpose.

Order, union, law, government, wholesome restraint, religion—all of these words are meaningless to them, and the forms, influences, and powers behind them and accompanying them are the objects of their hatred and implacable fury. Of course, such a creed will attract to it the godless, the wicked, the corrupt, the criminal, and all those whose brutish instincts rebel at decency and right thinking and right living; and so most of the Industrial Workers of the World are vagabonds and tramps, the flotsam and jetsam on the tumultuous sea of life. Many go from the penitentiary to the Industrial Workers of the World organization, and many go from the Industrial Workers of the World organization to the penitentiary, and more should go there.

I might add that the evidence seems to be very strong, though more or less circumstantial, that members of this organization are in the employ of Germany. Certain it is that many of them are supplied with an abundance of gold, and denounce this country and speak approvingly of Germany. In some sections where Austrians were employed the I. W. W.'s urged them to strike, using as an argument, among others, that they were producing materials which would be used by the allies and by this country against their countrymen; that is, the Austrians and Germans. In several instances, these appeals were effective and resulted in serious strikes and disorders. I feel sure that the Department of Justice, which has been diligent in protecting the interests of our country and our people, has a mass of evidence supporting this view; and upon the trial of some of these I. W. W.'s indubitable evidence will be produced connecting members of this organization with German intrigues.

It is singular, but we find as bitter opposition to trade-unions as to the capitalists, so called. The result, of course, must be that the members of the labor unions can not be and are not in sympathy with the I. W. W. Trade labor unionism fosters, as the I. W. W. says, industry, and the belief that there is a common interest between the employers and the employees. Trade-unionism brings stability among the laboring people and seeks to have industry, peace, and order, and proper development. The true laboring man is anxious for the perpetuity of society and the maintenance of good government and the proper growth and development in all of the activities of trade and commerce. The I. W. W. proclaims the abolition of the wage system, and declares that capitalism must be destroyed. One of their principal teachers says that the question of right and wrong "does not concern us." All opposition, so long as the wage system lasts, is but an armed truce. At any favorable opportunity the struggle for more control of industry is renewed.

"Interference by the Government is resented by open violation of the Government's orders, going to jail en masse, causing expenses to the taxpayers * * *. In short, the I. W. W. advocates the use of militant 'direct-action' tactics to the full extent of our power to make good. * * * Sabotage is to this class struggle what the guerrilla warfare is to the battle. The strike is the open battle of the class struggle. Sabotage is the guerrilla warfare between two opposing classes. The I. W. W. is fast approaching the stage where it can accomplish its mission. This mission is revolutionary in character. We are not satisfied with a fair day's wage for a fair day's work. Such a thing is impossible. Labor is entitled to all wealth. We are going to do away with capitalization by taking possession of the land and the machinery or production. We do not intend to buy them, either. * * * Organized with the working class we will have the power. * * *

"Property—either material or in the form of specialized skill—has ceased to exist for the proletariat * * *. And following the loss of the property idea comes a complete revolution in the mental attitude of the worker. * * * His whole attitude is one of opposition; opposition to the property of the master class—an attitude utterly subversive of all modern ethics, morals, religions, and laws—an utterly revolutionary attitude. * * * Craft unionism can not survive. Any economic system built upon the rights of property is a conflagratory system."

This writer, speaking for the organization, states that the proletariat is the subject class and that the special function of the State is to keep the proletariat in subjection; therefore, he argues, "All the activities of the proletariat furthering its program for a new society must necessarily be revolutionary and be beyond the law. Therefore, the Socialist politicians' 'legal revolution' idea is regarded as absurd."

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, one of the I. W. W. agitators, urges intimidation, coercion, and any means necessary to gain the end.

It is obvious that such an organization is an outlaw. It can not exist in a country where property rights are respected; where law, order, schools, religion, industry, business, progress, and civilization are found.

It is difficult to deal with this menace, but the situation to-day calls for vigorous, repressive measures. Already the Government is moving to repress the activities of its leaders and to prevent its treasonable and lawless course.

The secretary of the organization, Mr. Roan, was recently arrested, and doubtless others will soon be brought before the power of justice. I think it should be said that perhaps some of the followers of this revolutionary movement do not quite appreciate the inherent viciousness of the system and the ultimate end of its preachments. Of course, the person cast from society, one whose crimes had isolated him from society, would naturally gravitate to an organization which aimed at the destruction of society. A man without conscience—the cold-blooded murderer—would seek comrades among an organization teaching such abhorrent doctrines.

A few years ago a number of the members of this association came to the State of Utah. One of their number, named Hillstrom, with one of his associates committed a foul murder. After a fair trial he was convicted and executed. The courageous governor of the State, William Spry, refused commutation of his sentence, and members of the organization attempted to assassinate the governor. The executed criminal became an idol of these outlaws and a number of them followed his ashes as they were carried through the streets of Chicago and glorified his death and the wicked cause with which he was identified.

A number of measures supplementing existing law are now pending in Congress that perhaps may aid in dealing with some of the activities of this criminal body.

I hope a broad and comprehensive law will be enacted that will more effectively aid the Government in its efforts to protect industry and labor and to punish and overthrow, if possible, an organization the objects of which are so grave a menace to the foundations of society and Government.

The amendment was concurred in.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, the words "or otherwise" and the comma were stricken from the bill.

The amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to declare unlawful associations purposing by physical force, violence, or injury to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change in the United States, and prescribing punishment for persons engaged in the activities of such associations, and for other purposes."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I deem it rather unwise to condemn any association in advance under this bill; but I submit for the RECORD excerpts which I have had prepared from literature issued by the Industrial Workers of the World, indicating the purpose of that organization to use force and violence to accomplish its ends.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The same will be printed, without objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INDUSTRIAL WORKERS OF THE WORLD.

I. HISTORY.

Digested from The I. W. W.: Its History, Structure, and Methods. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau, Cleveland, Ohio, 1913.

In the fall of 1904 six active workers in the revolutionary labor movement held a conference. There they decided to issue a call for a larger gathering. Invitations were sent out to 36 additional individuals who were active in the radical labor organizations and the socialist political movement of the United States, inviting them to meet in secret conference in Chicago, Ill., January 2, 1905. The conference met at the appointed time, with 30 present, and drew up the Industrial Union manifesto calling for a convention to be held in Chicago June 27, 1905, for the purpose of launching an organization in accord with the principles set forth in the manifesto. On the date set the convention assembled, with 186 delegates present from 34 State, district, national, and local organizations, representing about 90,000 members. The convention lasted 12 days, adopted a constitution, and elected officers.

II. OFFICIAL PROGRAM.

Quoted from I. W. W. Preamble. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau, Cleveland, Ohio:

"The working class and the employing class have nothing in common. There can be no peace so long as hunger and want are found among millions of working people and the few, who make up the employing class, have all the good things of life.

"Between these two classes a struggle must go on until the workers of the world organize as a class, take possession of the earth and the machinery of production, and abolish the wage system.

"We find that the centering of the management of industries into fewer and fewer hands makes the trade-unions unable to cope with the ever-growing power of the employing class. The trade-unions foster a state of affairs which allows one set of workers to be pitted against another set of workers in the same industry, thereby helping to defeat one another in wage wars. Moreover, the trade-unions aid the employing class to mislead the workers into the belief that the working class have interests in common with their employers.

"These conditions can be changed and the interest of the working class upheld only by an organization formed in such a way that all its members in any one industry, or in all industries, if necessary, cease work whenever a strike or lockout is on in any department thereof, thus making an injury to one an injury to all."

"Instead of the conservative motto, 'A fair day's wages for a fair day's work,' we must inscribe on our banner the revolutionary watchword, 'Abolition of the wage system.'

"It is the historic mission of the working class to do away with capitalism. The army of production must be organized not only for the everyday struggle with the capitalists but also to carry on production when capitalism shall have been overthrown. By organizing industrially we are forming the structure of the new society within the shell of the old."

Quoted from The I. W. W.: Its History, Structure, and Methods. I. W. W. Publishing Co., page 11:

"In its basic principle the I. W. W. calls forth that spirit of revolt and resistance that is so necessary a part of the equipment of any organization of the workers in their struggle for economic independence. In a word, its basic principle makes the I. W. W. a fighting organization. It commits the union to an unceasing struggle against the private ownership and control of industry.

"There is but one bargain that the I. W. W. will make with the employing class—complete surrender of all control of industry to the organized workers."

Quoted from How to Overcome the High Cost of Living. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau, pages 14–15:

"The progressive program of the I. W. W., by which it will build the framework of the new society within the shell of the old, while at the same time getting ready to take possession of all the industries, will be put into effect as fast as possible, whenever and wherever the workers generate the power so to do.

"The workers take a shorter workday. They work slowly; this makes it necessary to employ more workers, thereby decreasing the number of unemployed; the workers then force the employers to pay higher wages. This strengthens the workers and weakens the capitalists; there will be more paid and less unpaid labor; the workers control more of the wealth their applied labor power produces. Industry becomes more centralized, forcing the little labor skinners into the ranks of the workers. The workers, because of their increased wages, are enabled to consume better food, clothing, and shelter. The workers continually reduce the workday, curtail production, decrease the army of the unemployed, increase wages. The stronger the workers become the weaker grow the capitalists. The workers elect their own foremen, superintendents, and managers; they dominate the direction and control of industry; the workers impose their will upon society. Industry is more and more centralized; the capitalists have no retainers left to think and fight for them. The workers, ever stronger, more dominant, shorten the workday, curtail production to the point where unpaid labor disappears—this abolishes the wage system, production for profit ceases. Production for use is now the order; all physically and mentally capable members of society become useful workers. Economic classes are abolished. Industrial administration and industrial democracy, based on free association of workers, comes into being. Every member of human society has security in the means of life, with full and equal opportunity to develop the best that is in each for the benefit of all."

III. TACTICS OR METHODS.

Quoted from The I. W. W. History; Structure and Methods. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau, Cleveland, Ohio, 1913, pages 17–18:

"As a revolutionary organization the Industrial Workers of the World aims to use any and all tactics that will get the results sought with the least expenditure of time and energy. The tactics used are determined solely by the power of the organization to make good in their use. The question of 'right' and 'wrong' does not concern us.

"No terms made with an employer are final. All peace so long as the wage system lasts is but an armed truce. At any favorable opportunity the struggle for more control of industry is renewed. * * *

"No part of the organization is allowed to enter into time contracts with the employers. Where strikes are used, it aims to paralyze all branches of the industry involved, when the employers can least afford a cessation of work—during the busy season and when there are rush orders to be filled.

"The Industrial Workers of the World maintains that nothing will be conceded by the employers except that which we have the power to take and hold by the strength of our organization. Therefore we seek no agreements with the employers.

"Failing to force concession from the employers by the strike, work is resumed and 'sabotage' is used to force the employers to concede the demands of the workers.

"The great progress made in machine production results in an ever-increasing army of unemployed. To counteract this the Industrial Workers of the World aims to establish the shorter workday and to slow up the working pace, thus compelling the employment of more and more workers. * * *

"During strikes the works are closely picketed and every effort made to keep the employers from getting workers into the shops. All supplies are cut off from the strike-bound shop. All shipments are refused or missent, delayed, and lost, if possible. Strike breakers are also isolated to the full extent of the power of the organization. Interference by the Government is resented by open violation of the Government's orders, going to jail en masse, causing expense to the taxpayers, which is but another name for the employing class.

"In short, the I. W. W. advocates the use of militant 'direct-action' tactics to the full extent of our power to make good."

Quoted from How to Overcome the High Cost of Living. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau, page 13:

"The Industrial Workers of the World, the revolutionary working class industrial union, is a strictly nonpolitical organization, declaring that the workers must organize their industrial power and use it directly at the point of production, sign no contracts with employers, but take advantage of every opportunity to shorten the workday, curtail production, and increase wages. Do away as much as possible with the outside strike where workers leave the boss in possession of the job and give him the opportunity to put scabs at work. Striking on the job and compelling the boss to pay strike benefits is better than long-drawn-out starvation strikes. The only time the workers should leave the job is when the employer locks them out, and the revolutionary workers will develop the means to checkmate that. Direct action, sabotage, passive resistance, and irritation strikes are some of the tactics of the revolutionary Industrial Workers of the World."

Quoted from Eight-Hour Workday; What It Will Mean and How to Get It. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau:

"How are we to gain the eight-hour day? is another question.

"By simply taking it!

"The first thing to do is to educate your fellow workers in the shop * * * Second, agitate * * *. Then comes organization * * * and when you see that your industrial union is strong enough, take the eight-hour day. Go to work in the shop, and when your eight hours are up go home; come back the next day and do the same thing.

"The boss will not like it at first; he may lock you out; he may try to send away for scabs to take your place. If you think you are going to get licked, go back as though willing to submit. A little later on, when the boss least expects it, repeat the dose, and when he sees that you mean business he will give in."

Quoted from Union Scabs and Others. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau:

"When a strike is declared it becomes the chief duty of the organization to effect a complete shutdown of the plant. For that purpose warnings are mailed, or wired, to other places, to prevent workingmen from moving on the afflicted city.

"Pickets are stationed around the plant, or factory, or harbor, to stop workers from taking the places of the strikers. Amateur scabs are coaxed, persuaded, or bullied away from the seat of the strike. Persuasion having no effect on the professional strike breaker, he is sometimes treated to a brickbat shower. Shut down the plant; shut it down completely is the watchword of the strike."

Quoted from Getting Recognition. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau:

"The way to get recognition from the employers is the same as the way to get any other concessions from them—compel it. Take it by the strong hand. * * *

"The way to get recognition for the union is to get a union that the bosses can not help recognizing. * * * one that ties up the whole plant when there is a strike." * * *

Quoted from Appeal to Wageworkers, Men and Women. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau:

"All members of the I. W. W. must at all times act in concert. For example, in case of strike in one factory, every worker must go out, and leave the factory deserted entirely. And all workers in all industries throughout the jurisdiction of the I. W. W. must act as one against the factory.

"2. All workers of all industrial unions and departments may be called out on strike if need be.

"3. The hours may be decreased without strike. For example, work eight hours and no longer, and ignore the wishes of the boss.

"4. 'Passive strike'; that is, to obey the rules to the letter, and thereby force the employer to come to terms. This method has proven successful on railroad systems in Austria and Italy.

"5. Intermittent strike; that is, go on strike one day, go back to work the next, and so on, if deemed necessary to win the point in question.

"6. Opportune strike; that is, go on strike when the capitalist has orders that must be filled immediately or when similar conditions give promise of victory.

"7. If demands are not granted, turn out poor work, or work slow, so that to decrease profits until the employer will be made to understand that he will gain most by granting the demands.

"8. In case of a capitalist injunction against strikes, violate it, disobey it; let the strikers and others go to jail if necessary. That would cost so much that the injunction would be dispensed with.

"9. Final universal strike; that is, to remain within the industrial institutions, lock the employers out for good as owners and parasites, and give them a chance to become useful toilers."

Editorial quoted from Industrial Worker, May 5, 1917:

"To the master class the I. W. W. makes no apologies and gives no excuse. Workers organized in the I. W. W. say to the master: 'We have the power to gain certain concessions, and we are going to take them because we have the power. When we have attained more power we will take more of the good things of life till all labor has produced is the property of labor.'"

Editorial quoted from Industrial Worker, September 1, 1917:

"The I. W. W. recognizes that the workers suffer from industrial evils, an industrial autocracy. * * * Direct action as used by the I. W. W. means that the I. W. W. stands for the cure of the evils on the job through direct industrial action on the job."

Editorial quoted from Industrial Worker, Seattle, Wash., November 3, 1917:

"The character of the I. W. W. is so international that any attack upon it is bound to have an effect elsewhere in the world of capitalism. The syndicalists of the European countries are bound to the industrial unionists of this country with ties that not even the greatest war in history can break. Industrial labor will answer American terrorism!"

"Preparedness.

"The question of 'preparedness' is also being considered—what preparations have been made or are necessary to pursue a war to a successful conclusion? To the profit gluttons of big business it means battleships, cannons, shrapnel, and machine guns and other things which are essential to the slaughtering of slaves. But to the worker—to you—preparedness means something entirely different. It means things that are necessary in order to successfully battle with the speed-up system on one hand and the high cost of living on the other. And it means more than this. Have you ever asked yourself what 'preparedness' means to you?

"Are you prepared to fight the every-day battle with the boss for shorter hours, more wages, and better conditions with a fair chance of winning?

"Are you prepared to defend your class, as well as yourself, from the rapacity of the murderous thieves of big business?

"Are you prepared to defend your fellow workers now held as prisoners of war in the clutches of the enemy?

"Are you prepared to defend your press—the press of the I. W. W.—and the right of the workers to free speech, no matter what happens? Don't forget that the powers that be would like to do away with the papers that show up the real facts of the class war, so that the dastardly work of jailing and hanging fighting members of the working class in different parts of the country can go on unprotected and unmolested while the prostitutes of the capitalist press divert the minds of all with a sickening mess of pale fripperies, black lies, and jingoism.

"And to you who are not members of the one big union as yet will the union you now belong to permit you to strike any time occasion demands? or to participate in a general strike, if necessary, to meet a sudden contingency of the unknown future? We are living in critical times; are you tied down by contracts or divided by crafts, or are you dominated by a bunch of grafting officials and tied hand and foot by what they say and do?

"Are you prepared with forcible weapons to successfully fight your battles on the industrial field? Do you know what sabotage means and how and when to apply it in order to block the desires of the modern shylocks from taking more than the 'pound of flesh' that each slave is forced to yield up these days in exchange for bread?

"Do you know what direct action means? Are you afraid to use it against the parasites who would speed you up to a killing pace, and who, when they have squeezed you dry, would throw you onto the industrial scrap heap, or who would take you from your work and your family and drain the last drop of your blood on their stupid battle fields? And then do the same thing to your children when you are no more! Do you still respect the robbers who gouge you every day of your life? Do you respect the chains they rivet on your wrists or the laws that sanction the hideous game of exploitation? Are you ready to use direct action to better your condition and to free yourself from wage slavery?

"Do you know what the general strike would mean to you and your class? Are you prepared to take your place and do your bit to help frustrate the gigantic conspiracies now being hatched by the enemies of labor? Do you know what organization—real labor organization means? How much do you know about that union known as the Industrial Workers of the World.

"The I. W. W. is organizing all the workers of all industries into one big union. The I. W. W. is showing the workers how to use all the weapons that modern industrial development has placed in the hands of the producing class. And the I. W. W. is the only organization that is out not only to win the everyday battles with the boss chap, but to do away with exploitation, ignorance, and slavery by abolishing the wage system and establishing industrial freedom, where each worker will receive the full product of his labor, where there will be no place for the social parasite, and where health and happiness will be the lot of every human being. Preparedness means organization and industrial unionism. The I. W. W. is the only form of organization that meets the requirements of the ever changing industrial development of to-day. Before long a man who isn't a union man in the full sense of the word will be considered a scab.

"If you are seeking preparedness, join the I. W. W. You will never have a better chance than now. Take your place with your fellow workers in the trenches of the industrial war—your war—and show that you are made of the stuff that men are made of."

IV. ATTITUDE TOWARD WAR.

(a) Military service.

Quoted from War and the Workers. I. W. W. Publishing Bureau:

"Young man, when you are asked to enlist in the Army or Navy, to be used as food for cannon, be sure you look before you leap.

"Remember the Spanish-American War, with its vile and unspeakable record of embalmed beef, shoddy uniforms, bum-fitting brogans, leaky tents, rotten ships, and a rottener bureaucracy, blow-hole Armor plate a la Carnegie, insufficient and inedible food, venereal diseases, and malarial fever.

"Remember that the Sugar and Tobacco Trusts got the goods and the workers got the malarial fever.

"Remember that the officers got the honor and the glory, and the men got shot at.

"Remember that the officers got three squares each day, while the rank and file were starving on three moldy hardtacks.

"Remember that these arrogant and overbearing officers were commissioned because they hadn't energy enough to work, brains enough to beg, or courage enough to steal.

"Remember that the American workers had no quarrel with the Spanish workers, anyway.

"Remember that the acquisition of Cuba and the Philippines never raised your wages, shortened your hours, or otherwise bettered your conditions.

"Remember the pensions the men didn't get.

"Remember those who were maimed, mutilated, and disfigured for life.

"Remember the boys who never came back.

"Think of the widows, think of the orphans, think of yourself.

"Let those who own the country do the fighting!

"Put the wealthiest in the front ranks; the middle class next; follow these with judges, lawyers, preachers, and politicians. Let the workers remain at home and enjoy what they produce. Follow a declaration of war with an immediate call for a general strike. Make the slogan 'Rebellion sooner than war.' Don't make yourself a target in order to fatten Rockefeller, Morgan, Carnegie, the Rothschilds, Guggenheim, and the other industrial pirates

"American capitalists want war in order to seize rich lands; gain railway, mining, and other concessions; unload their surplus stock of shoddy goods upon the Government; secure investment for their money in interest-bearing bonds; and to kill off the surplus of unemployed workers who are threatening to overthrow the capitalist system.

"Workers of the world, unite!

"Don't become hired murderers.

"Don't join the Army or Navy."

Quoted from the Industrial Worker, April 14, 1917, editorial:

"To members of the I. W. W.: We would suggest that they literally follow the demands of the capitalist press and stand behind the President. It is only by getting in front of politicians and capitalists that workers court destruction. The I. W. W. will not permit the movement to be switched away from the industrial organization, which alone can be effectively and constructively antimilitaristic, because it is anti-capitalistic."

Quoted from the Industrial Worker, May 1, 1917, editorial:

"We are confined to no country, no flag. Our songs herald your overthrow. This is our day. We are the forgers of revolution, the destroyers of the old and the outgrown. We are the nemesis of idlers, the doom of masters, the emancipation of slaves. We are revolt. We are progress, we are revolution."

(b) Liberty loan.

Quoted from the Industrial Worker, June 2, 1917, editorial:

"If the United States Government must issue bonds, they should at least be issued under such conditions as would leave the workers the liberty to buy them only when they desire to do so, instead of making them a weapon of involuntary industrial servitude."

(c) The Red Cross.

Quoted from the Industrial Worker, May 1, 1917, editorial:

"The Red Cross pledge has as its purpose to double-cross the agricultural workers' organization of the I. W. W. * * * We have nothing against the Red Cross, except that as it is the evident purpose of our present civilization to injure and destroy as many workers' lives as possible, its function is at least doubtful."

V. CRITICISM OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

Quoted from the Industrial Worker, November 10, 1917, editorial:

"It is the contention of the I. W. W. that the political form of government is only a mask. * * * There are apparently Senators and Representatives from the various States of the Union, and, indeed, they are elected from those arbitrary divisions. But upon observing the activities of the various so-called Representatives we find that one represents the allied railway interests, another the oil interests, another the mining industry, still another the lumber interests, and all of them represent the money interests. * * * We do not desire the government of men in the way that requires a body to govern and a body to be governed, a ruler and a subject class. What we want is an administration of things."

"And besides the private armies of the rich and the scab-herding blue coat or yellow leg of the municipal, State, or Federal forces, and the paid preacher of contentment at all costs, the legislator is loosened upon us. The big thieves with bloody hands have raised their raucous voices screaming to heaven and hell for the upholding of 'law and order.' And it so happens that we have laws against picketing, laws against unionism, laws against strikes, and, now, laws against sabotage. In their blindness and stupidity the masters of bread are trying to legislate the weapons out of our hands. Unlike the workers, they are impotent to use industrial power to gain their ends, and so they are trying to stem the great, onrushing human tide of working-class organization with a handful of dusty law books! As long as the master class is parasitical, any 'laws' they make are invalid. The parasite has no business on the back of the worker. The working class is a law unto itself. 'It is the historic mission of the working class to do away with capitalism.' Let them legislate against history if they can!

"The workers have been stripped of everything but their labor power. They have nothing more to lose and everything to gain. They are awakening to a realization of what can be done with the mighty power that modern industry has placed in their hands. They are learning the value of organization and direct action. They are discarding antiquated weapons and are going forth into the wilderness of capitalism to conquer it and make it blossom forth with the new civilization. The battle waxes fiercer each day, but the goal is in sight. The old order is crumbling and the industrial unions of the awakened workers are already organizing the slaves 'to carry on production when capitalism shall have been overthrown.' What matters, then, the virulent vaporings of a few labor-hating lawmakers who have 'filled their bellies with the east wind'?

"And until the slaves of this country wrest the reins of power from the boss class and put a stop to the present bloody carnival of greed—until they organize in one big union to gain industrial freedom for themselves—liberty will be a lie, America will be a slave pen, and her people will be peons."

"In response to the declaration of amnesty for all offenses against the old autocracy, exiles are beginning to return from Siberia and abroad. To all appearances Russia is breaking the chains of autocracy just at the time these chains are being forced upon the 'sovereign American citizen'; 'the land of the free' is taking the place of 'darkest Russia' as the world's chief champion of oppression. And with union men in America being persecuted, jailed, hung, shot, and deported the term 'Americanized' bids fair to replace 'Russian' as a term designating arbitrary and despotic repression. And in place of Russian refugees seeking shelter in the United States from tyranny at home will it be persecuted Americans who will be driven to Russia for a haven of refuge from the iron heel of American plutocracy?"

Quoted from Solidarity, March 17, 1917. Editorial:

"'THE LAND OF THE FREE.'

"A story is told of a young East Indian, who, upon first seeing the big 'lady with the torch' in New York Harbor, asked a fellow passenger 'To whom was that statue built?' 'That,' was the reply, 'is the Statue of Liberty.' 'Ah,' came the startling comment, 'we, in India, erect statues to our dead just as you do in America.'

"Those persons of the middle and upper classes who are living in smug comfort and uneventful security, and whose predatory propensities are protected by the 'law' and sanctioned by custom and the prevailing code of robber ethics—labor drivers and labor exploiters—clean of conscience and respectable of appearance; all such, are loud in proclaiming that we are living in the 'land of the free.' And from their point of view they are right; there is freedom in America—for them.

"* * * * * * * *

"Amongst the unawakened, chloroformed slaves—the 'scissorbills' who are determined to be contented at all costs—the old 'My country, 'tis of thee' idea still prevails; but the workers who have been awakened by harsh experience have found out that their only 'freedom' is their freedom to work—or starve.

"* * * * * * * *

"Comparative freedom at one time did exist in this country. The Pilgrims of New England and the early settlers of the South found it here. And they prized it highly and kept it for themselves. The young capitalist class that thrived so vigorously during the stormy days of the birth of the Republic wanted freedom, freedom from the domination and dictation of British capitalists. And they got their freedom and kept it for themselves. The words of men like Paine and Jefferson show that freedom—and freedom in a broad sense—was the aim and object of their lives. But how could they have had at that time the prophetic eyes to see what tremendous changes industrial development would make in the course of events? How could they have seen in their day, that a time would come when the political governments of the world would be mere puppets in the hands of a grasping and brutal plutocracy?

"* * * * * * *

"And this is the way in which the unbroken thread of 'freedom' is woven into the history of these States: In the early days, when we were a small people living in a great land, there was 'freedom' enough to go around. The land was rich, the stakes were high, and the game was open for all. One man had as much chance as another to get a clutch on the vast resources of the country and squeeze from them the golden prize. At one time it was an impossibility to get a man to work for wages in the Eastern States. Why should one man work for another when he could go West and find independence and 'freedom'? Always a little farther west—free land, growing towns, and the virgin sod waiting to be turned over, settlements spreading like prairie fires, offering rich rewards for the thrifty and industrious. The freedom of the frontier, of the cattle trails, and the range. The freedom that produced the wild, rugged bearded types of Americans that are now extinct, replaced by the sallow faced, sullen, many-tongued race of slaves who depend upon a 'job' for their bread and who love their unions far more than they do their master's government and who band together against the boss and his henchmen, just as the frontiersmen banded together against the Indians."

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, during the month of September last the National Woman Suffrage Association concluded to ascertain the sentiment of the country as far as it might be expressed by representative people of the country concerning the woman-suffrage amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The conference report on the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I, of course, do not want to interfere with the Senator's speech under any circumstances.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will state to the Senator that I do not expect to make a speech, and I shall occupy only a few moments.

Mr. HARDWICK. Would the Senator be willing to let us dispose of the conference report first?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think the matter which I have to present will be disposed of in 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. From various representative people of the country, such as governors, judges, members of legislatures, mayors, a vast number of petitions were obtained, and these petitions have been placed in my possession by the association referred to. They occupy several volumes, and out of order I desire to present them to the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the petitions will be received. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will state further that this morning I received a telegram from Hot Springs, Ark., from the president of the General Federation of Woman Suffrage Clubs in which the following request of the Senate is made. The telegram is addressed to the Senate in my care:

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., May 3, 1918.

THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Care Senator A. A. JONES,
Chairman Woman's Suffrage Committee,
Washington, D. C.:

The fourteenth biennial convention of General Federation of Women's Clubs, assembled at Hot Springs, Ark., representing two and a half million women of the United States, earnestly request your honorable body to take immediate action favorable on the pending resolution to submit a Federal suffrage amendment to the several State legislatures that democracy in the United States may be completed.

IONE V. P. COWLES.
President General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, for the past two weeks I have been literally bombarded with letters and telegrams urging action on the constitutional amendment. I have been compelled to answer that I did not know when it would come up. If it is proper for me to do so, I would like to ask the Senator from New Mexico, who is in charge of the joint resolution, what his purpose is, if any, looking to a vote on the proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Anticipating that some such request might be made of me when the petitions were presented, I will state that this morning there was a meeting of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, called for the express purpose of considering a time to bring the joint resolution to a vote.

I desire at this time, in order to straighten out the parliamentary situation of the joint resolution, to ask that House joint resolution No. 200, which is at present before the Senate, as I understand it, and has not been referred to the committee, and which is identical with the joint resolution heretofore reported to this body by the committee, be placed upon the calendar for action without reference to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Taking the place of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Taking the place of the joint resolution which has been reported by the committee and which is now on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator submit that request?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator, before final action on the request, what is the intention as to calling up the joint resolution for consideration by the Senate?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will state that as soon as the consent asked for is granted, if it be granted, I shall make a request in regard to fixing a time for a vote upon it.

Mr. KING. If it would mean a vote this week, I shall object, but if it means a vote not earlier than next week——

Mr. HARDWICK. The unfinished business is before the Senate. The Senator can only get the floor for the purpose of making a speech. He can not make a request to fix a time for a vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I agree that everything which is done here must be done by unanimous consent. I do not understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to object to the substitution of the House joint resolution for the Senate joint resolution upon the calendar.

Mr. KING. I will not do so if the Senator will assure me he does not intend to press it for consideration within the next few days.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will state to the Senator that the committee this morning decided to request the Senate for an agreement to vote upon the joint resolution some time during the latter part of this week, either Thursday, Friday, or Saturday.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the motion of the Senator for substitution, but if the Senator should ask for a vote this week I would object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Out of order the Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that the House joint resolution be substituted for the Senate joint resolution and states that they are identical. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am directed by the committee to make this further request. I am sorry to have the objection of the Senator from Utah in advance, but in carrying out the mandate of the committee I will make the request that on the calendar day of Thursday we proceed to vote upon the joint resolution. I will state in advance that it is not the purpose of myself to discuss the question. I do not believe that any vote in this body will be changed by the discussion of the question. It is one which has been a very live subject for many years, and it seems to me that in view of the other business pressing before the Senate we might now simply fix a time for a vote; but, of course, if any Senator desires to discuss the joint resolution before that time doubtless the Senator would be glad to hear him. However, acting for the committee, I have not concluded to take up any of the time of the Senate in its discussion.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, at the hour of 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the Senate will proceed to vote upon the joint resolution.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Under the rules of the Senate can the Senator from New Mexico submit a request like that without a roll call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that before consent can be given it will be necessary to call the roll.

Mr. HARDWICK. Would not that have the effect of displacing the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand the conference report is now before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it possible to make a request to vote upon a certain bill unless that bill is before the Senate? I understand the conference report is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is competent to submit a request for unanimous consent to fix a time to vote upon a bill, but that the objection of any Senator would prevent it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am going to make a suggestion to the Senator from New Mexico, if he will permit me.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will be delighted.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is that he ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be made a special order for a certain day. That request is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, we would have that day to discuss it, and during that time the Senator could make a request for unanimous consent to vote on it if it could not be disposed of during that day.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In view of the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which I know was made for some very good reason, I will change the request for the one just suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. To be made a special order.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I make the request that the joint resolution be made the special order for next Thursday at the hour of 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can move it, but he had better make it Friday.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that a motion to make it a special order will not be in order at this time, but I give notice that during the morning hour to-morrow I shall make such a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator from Georgia will yield for the purpose of letting me make that motion, it will be perfectly in order.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will not interfere with the conference report. We have 123,000 soldiers who ought to be naturalized before we send them to Europe. They are aliens, and they ought to be naturalized.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It will not take——

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it more important to get soldiers to the battle line than it is to get women to the polls. I hope the Senator will let me get through with the conference report; it will not take long; and then this matter can be brought up again.

AMENDMENT OF NATURALIZATION LAWS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization.

Mr. HARDWICK. Several of the countries of Europe—Italy, France, I believe, but certainly Germany——

Mr. NORRIS. And Russia.

Mr. HARDWICK. And Russia—I thank the Senator from Nebraska for the suggestion; Russia was the one I was trying to think of—have always contended that they do not release their citizens or subjects from the obligation of citizenship to those countries because they became naturalized here. We have been unable to secure satisfactory treaty arrangements with any one of the countries I have mentioned, and possibly with others on that subject.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will permit me to finish this sentence, then I will yield to him. But Germany is the only country, so far as I know or have been able to discover, that has ever passed a law which expressly authorized the subjects of Germany to immigrate to a foreign country to become naturalized in that country and still to retain their citizenship in Germany merely by filing some sort of a notice with any German consul to whom they can get.

Mr. KENYON. Was that law passed in 1913?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; that law was passed, I think, exactly on the 1st day of January, 1914. It was evidently, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, preparatory to this war; it was a part of their proposition, although it was not different from the policy that that country and several other countries had consistently maintained on this subject for quite a while.

Now, I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia made reference to certain countries having double citizenship. Of course, it is very important to know exactly the countries who have that sort of law, but I do not think France has such a law, I will say to the Senator, though I may be mistaken.

Mr. HARDWICK. I did not say positively France had such a law. I said there were certain countries who had such a statute. If I did say that France had such a law I expressed myself very unhappily.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator, I thought, included France.

Mr. HARDWICK. I may be in error about that; indeed I believe I am. Let us see. Those countries are Russia and Italy, but I am not sure about France; I will not say certainly that France has such a law, but I did not say that any of those countries recognized double citizenship. I said those countries had always claimed, and they still claim, so far as I know, that their citizens or subjects who came to this country or who went to any other foreign country did not thereby get rid of their obligations to them, and that we had not been able to get satisfactory treaties on that subject with those countries. The Senator from North Dakota may be right, and France may not be among such countries. Russia is, I know; Italy is, I know; and Germany also is. I know that in Germany the movement has gone further than it has anywhere else. There it has taken the form of law passed by their parliamentary body, the Reichstag, which provides minutely and in detail how German citizens who migrate to America or Canada or Australia or anywhere else can naturalize under the laws of those countries and still at the same time retain their German citizenship. Of course nobody favors that. We ought not to have in this country naturalized by law any citizen of the United States who does not hold a single and undivided allegiance to this country, and who does not renounce with all his heart and soul and with all sincerity all allegiance to any and every foreign power, prince, and potentate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I think the Senator from Georgia states that a little broadly. I do not think that they retain their full citizenship; but in Germany I know they will not release them from military duty. That is true as to the country of Russia, and it may be true with reference to Italy. I do not think, however, that such citizens have double citizenship in those countries, but they are subject to military duty.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator please, I shall be glad to have him look that up. If I can get time to do so, and I presume I can, I shall put the German law into the RECORD. The German law expressly provides that German subjects shall retain their full citizenship, provided they go to a German consul and file notice that they intend to do so. That is, of course, encouraging double dealing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Georgia will put that law into the RECORD. I think it would be very interesting.

Mr. HARDWICK. The act was passed January 1, 1914. I have forgotten the name of the act, but it was named after one of the German Reichstag members.

Mr. THOMAS. Delbruch.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; the Delbruch law. I thank the Senator from Colorado. That is the name. It was evidently a part of the parliamentary preparation of Germany for this war.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] offered an amendment, which we accepted, providing hereafter, except as is provided in section 11 for those people who had already come, we would not permit people who resided in any country which country had a law providing for double citizenship and for them retaining citizenship at home at the same time that they obtained citizenship here, that we would not have them naturalized at all. It was a pretty serious proposition, but the Senate accepted the amendment; I accepted it, so far as I was concerned, as I said to the Senator from Massachusetts, with some doubt. I was inclined to think it went too far, and I will tell you why. Suppose a man is leaving a foreign country, renouncing his allegiance to it in all sincerity—opposed to its laws and to its institutions—and coming here, intending to live here permanently and to give this country his undivided allegiance for the balance of his life; he can not help what sort of a law they have passed back there. The fact that they will pass such laws as that might be one of the very reasons which induce him to come here and make him a good American citizen when he gets here. It looks very harsh to penalize a man of that class, from whatever country he may come, because the Government that he is renouncing has done something which he can not help. That was the reason why I said at the beginning that I doubted the wisdom of the policy announced by the Senator from Massachusetts.

But the conferees—and especially our brethren on the part of the other House who are acting with us in this matter—insisted on this: They said, substantially, there is no country on earth that has a law like this, except Germany, and under the law and under present conditions German immigrants can not come here, anyway, during the war. When we enact a law on this subject, so far as it relates to Germany, we may find ourselves, if peace ever comes between the countries, bound by the stipulation of some treaty agreement. We do not know what may be provided in the treaty that the Governments of the two countries may make on this subject, if they ever are again at peace. So, since none of them can come here, anyway, during the war, and Germany is the only country that has such a law, and there can be no occasion for any German coming here during the war as an immigrant, we had better not cross that bridge until we get to it; we had better wait until the war is over and then deal with this question, especially since the Bureau of Naturalization did not think well of the amendment. They say that they have already under existing Federal law authority to cancel naturalization proceedings where it can be shown that any such double dealing as that has taken place. For that reason the House conferees urged that this amendment——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to ask the Senator whether in his consideration of this subject he has found any great number of cases where such double citizenship has been indulged in as a practice?

Mr. HARDWICK. I can only say to the Senator that the Assistant Commissioner of Naturalization told the conference committee that there were several such cases. I did not ask him how many. I do not myself know. I do not know to what extent it has been practiced. Of course, the difficulty about it is in getting the evidence. That was why the Senator from Massachusetts insisted that we ought to just exclude them all arbitrarily by law. They may go to a consul's office, but we can never find it out. I think, however, I may say to the Senator from North Dakota, on the assurance of the Naturalization Bureau, that there have been cases where that has been done.

Mr. McCUMBER. Such cases are extremely few compared to the vast number who have come here from Germany?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know. I imagine, however, compared to the total number of emigrants from Germany, such cases must be extremely few, and I reckon that the Senator has not stated it too strongly. I do not suppose there could be a great number, but Germany can send no more emigrants here during the war, and there is no immediate necessity for disposing of this question. The bureau did not think it was best to dispose of it now, and, of course, the Senator from Massachusetts presented rather an extreme proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Georgia has fully dealt with that particular branch of the subject, I want to ask him about the other nations which do not recognize the naturalization of their people—Russia, for instance. Of course, it is beyond our power to reach the question, but Russia and the other countries the Senator has mentioned, particularly Russia——

Mr. HARDWICK. And Italy; we have had a great deal of diplomatic correspondence with Italy about it.

Mr. NORRIS. Russia and other countries—and I have come in contact with the question a good many times myself—refuse to——

Mr. HARDWICK. To recognize expatriation.

Mr. NORRIS. To recognize the naturalization by our laws of anyone who has emigrated from those countries. I know that the State Department for a great many years has been careful to avoid issuing passports to former citizens of those countries, because they feared difficulty might arise if one of those naturalized citizens should go back, and, for instance, be drafted into the army or something of that kind. In such event very serious international complications might arise. I wonder if in the investigation the Senator has made he discovered any adjudication that has ever been made on the subject? Has there been any decision of that question by the departments of our Government and by those other governments? Has the question ever been decided by any tribunal that would make it final and binding upon the nations?

Mr. HARDWICK. It is, of course, as the Senator realizes, a question of international law. There are numerous instances in which this Government has asserted to the fullest extent and in the most vigorous manner its own claims with respect to this matter—that naturalized citizens were expatriated from whatever country they had come—and that the United States would protect those naturalized citizens in their rights as fully as they would protect American-born citizens; that has been done; but I can say also to the Senator that has been a subject of very extensive diplomatic controversy. We have been for years trying to get the Governments of Italy and of Russia, and I think of Germany—we did for a while, I know, negotiate with Germany—to enter into some agreement, which should be mutual and reciprocal, upon the question of expatriation from one country to another, and vice versa. So far we have not succeeded with those three countries, at least, and those are the principal countries we have trouble with on this question; but it is a most important question for the Government in the future to succeed in getting treaties that will fully cover this question and will fully safeguard and protect the rights of these people and fully establish the national rights of this country with regard to this matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question. As he says, it is a question of international law. Has he investigated to ascertain what the authorities on international law hold on the subject? Suppose the question arose between our Government and Russia, for instance——

Mr. HARDWICK. It has arisen.

Mr. NORRIS. Where a naturalized Russian had gone back to Russia and they had refused to admit that he had become an American citizen, and that question had to be passed on as a legal proposition, without regard to any treaty between the two Nations—of course, if there were a treaty that would be the law that would govern—what would govern the determination of that question?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think there have been instances where military service has been exacted of naturalized American citizens. Although I have not made any recent investigation of the matter, I am pretty sure that has been done.

Mr. NORRIS. I think there are a good many cases where military service has been exacted, but that has been decided by one government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly; that is the difficulty about it; there is no court to decide it but the Russian court; there is no international court; our courts would hold one way and the Russian courts the other way.

Mr. NORRIS. What do the writers of international law hold?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I think the soundest view and the most general view—although you find some authorities in those countries dissenting with regard to that—is that when a citizen emigrates from one country and becomes naturalized in another he expatriates himself from the country from which he emigrates. That is undoubtedly the sound view, and that must be the policy of this Government. I regard it as a matter of the utmost importance that as soon as may be this Government shall negotiate treaties of that character with every important country on the face of the earth; and I am almost prepared to say that, even if it may work hardships in some individual cases, if we can not finally secure treaties covering the matter, I am willing to exclude emigrants from countries of that kind and character, because it makes too much trouble. It is a harsh thing to do—I gave you the argument on the other side of it a moment ago—it is a very harsh remedy, and I do not think that we ought to do it now, when there is nothing to be served by it. Therefore the conferees on the part of the Senate receded from the Senate amendment on this question.

Mr. President, I think that covers the substance of the conference report. The bill is not really substantially different from the form in which it left the Senate, except that the Lodge amendment is no longer in the bill. I hope that the conference report may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I move that the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, which is now on the calendar, be made the special order of business for 1 o'clock on Thursday next.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, would the Senator just as soon make that Friday? I offer that suggestion because Senators may be absent who would like to be present, and it would be difficult for them to get here before Friday. I am in favor of the Senator's motion, and shall vote with him, but Friday would give every Senator who may now be away an opportunity to be present.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am willing to change the date to Friday.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Hollis	Nugent	Sutherland
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Thomas
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Thompson
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Tillman
Curtis	Kenyon	Pomerene	Trammell
Dillingham	King	Ransdell	Underwood
Fall	Kirby	Reed	Vardaman
Fletcher	Knox	Robinson	Walsh
France	Lewis	Saulsbury	Warren
Gallinger	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson
Gerry	McKellar	Simmons	Williams
Gronna	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Hardwick	McNary	Smoot
Henderson	Norris	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] that House joint resolution No. 200 be made the special order for Friday next at 1 o'clock. As many as favor agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico will vote "aye," those opposed "no." The ayes——

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for a division. I think there ought to be a division, anyhow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there ought to be a division, as it requires a two-thirds vote to adopt the motion.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let us have a roll call, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I do not see him in his seat, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. I think he is in the city now, but I do not see him present, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). Mr. colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is absent from the Senate by reason of a death in his family. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is absent from the Chamber. Therefore I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I understand that if he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I am advised that, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote, and accordingly I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. On this question he would vote as I propose to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Being unable to secure a transfer of that pair, I am unable to vote; but I desire to be counted as present for a quorum.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have announced my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I have since been informed that if the Senator from Maryland were present he would vote against this motion. As I would vote the same way, I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. LENROOT. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GUION]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. REED. Under the announcement just made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] as to the transfer of his pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, I am at liberty to vote and vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent because of illness in his family. My information is that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I find that I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I therefore make the transfer and vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] because of official necessity, and to say that, were he present, I am advised that he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is unavoidably absent on account of illness. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], but as he would vote as I have voted, I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 21, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not having the necessary two-thirds, the motion of the Senator from New Mexico is lost.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to announce that on Friday, May 10, 1918, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall move to take up for consideration House joint resolution 200, known as the woman-suffrage amendment. I make this announcement so that Senators may be advised and may be present.

POSTAGE RATES ON AIRPLANE MAIL.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4208, authorizing postage rates on airplane mail.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4208) authorizing postage rates on airplane mail.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, on May 15 aerial mail service will be inaugurated between New York, Philadelphia, and Washington. No authority has been given to the Postmaster General to fix the rate for this service. It is necessary to the proper inauguration of the service that the rate be fixed and the object of the bill is to clothe the Postmaster General with the requisite authority. I ask that the bill be read. It is short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may require the payment of postage on mail carried by airplane at not exceeding 24 cents per ounce or fraction thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Texas if it is practically understood that the rate of postage will be 24 cents?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is to be the maximum rate, Mr. President, although I am not advised as to what is the exact intention of the Postmaster General.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if we are to establish a postal route on which it will cost 24 cents an ounce to transmit a letter, I think we might as well abandon the scheme at one time as another. It may amuse somebody for two or three days, but my impression is that it never will become a reality. However, perhaps it is well enough to try the experiment. It will be about a two-days' wonder, not a seven-days' wonder; there is no question about that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, while I was a Member of the House of Representatives, on June 14, 1910, I introduced in the House a bill to investigate the advisability of establishing an aerial mail route, which I think was the first bill ever introduced in Congress on the subject. I desire to have that bill incorporated in the RECORD in this connection, as well as the humorous and somewhat skeptical comments of the New York Telegraph on the bill at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[H. R. 26833, 61st Cong., 2d sess. In the House of Representatives, June 14, 1910. Mr. SHEPPARD introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and ordered to be printed:]

A bill for an investigation to determine the practicability and cost of an aeroplane or airship mail route.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the practicability and cost of an aeroplane or airship mail route between the city of Washington and some other suitable point or points for the experiment and report the results of said investigation to Congress at the opening of the short session in December next, in order that it may be definitely determined whether aerial navigation may be utilized for the safe and more rapid transmission of the mails.

[From the New York Telegraph, June 19, 1910.]

AEROPLANE MAIL COLLECTORS AND CHUTES TO SHOOT UPWARD—REPRESENTATIVE SHEPPARD URGES POSTMASTER GENERAL TO INVESTIGATE FEASIBILITY OF SCHEME TO QUICKEN LOCAL TRANSPORTATION OF LETTERS.

And when the mail chutes go up and not down, where will we go to post our letters? Will we take elevators or tip the janitors to carry them to the slot?

In these times it is well to give the subject a little forethought. Forethought is the only word that can be correctly used in facing aeroplane possibilities. If there is to be an aeroplane mail service, as the Texas Representative thinks, now is the time to prepare for it.

A modern apartment will be thus equipped with its aerial mail box, and the postman will flit in the air once every hour.

Representative SHEPPARD'S resolution authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to investigate the practicability and cost of an aeroplane or airship mail route between the city of Washington and some other point or points suitable for experiment. "The aim is to find out if aerial navigation may be utilized for safe and more rapid transmission of mails."

But it is doubtful if aerial legislation will be reached at this session in Washington. By this is meant that we are given time to prepare.

If a propeller breaks in a Jersey swamp or a rudder gets anchored in a Rocky Mountain peak, don't fuss because your mail is delayed. Hasn't a blizzard or a washout held letters up before?

By a series of signals you may let the postman navigator know the sort of letters you are expecting. This will aid him in his work and assist in accurate delivery.

Love letters will be carried in a rose-pink aeroplane, steered by Cupid's wings and operated by perfumed gasoline. If you are awaiting a love letter, stand with one foot on the edge of your roof and place the right hand over your heart. This ship's name is Dearie.

If you owe money, lock yourself in your flat and refuse to believe in signs. Bills and missives from collecting agencies will be a special cargo of a dull-gray ship charged to carry 13,000,000 pounds of first-class dunning matter.

This aeroplane will descend with a roar and will emit fumes of gasoline at the chute. When it soars away it will send an echo that can be heard for 33 miles. Name this ship What's the Use.

Letters from mine promoters and from the Optimist Society will carry a brass band in the bow, will be painted yellow, and will be named Cheer Up.

Postmen will wear wired coat tails and on their feet will be wings.

A postman's feet will hereafter be a study for ornamentation. Decorative designs will be used in profusion, as, naturally, feet will be quite unnecessary things in postal delivery.

This is the day for one-legged and no-legged men. Civil-service examinations will consist of questions hitherto unknown.

"What is your reach?" will be the question by which the examining board will test a man's endurance.

There will be another ship which must be reckoned with—conveying letters from reformers, those who are mad for social uplift. It will be called Hot Air, and will be operated by many of our best known and most highly respected muckrakers.

No man can apply for a job on this unless he has eaten a bad piece of meat, choked on diluted milk, or intimately knows of white slavery.

The Government will have no jurisdiction over the management of this ship, but will be held responsible for any jolts received and given, for any accidents due to bad judgment or caused by a hasty preparation for the flight. The ship will be bright red, and the engine will run to the strain of "Marseillaise." It will be called Liberty. Julius Hopp is writing a poem for its dedication.

That's about all for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if it is in contemplation for the Government to go into the business of manufacturing or purchasing airplanes to carry out this enterprise?

Mr. SHEPPARD. My understanding is that the Post Office Department will use such planes as the War Department may let them have.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, to my mind it is about as absurd an enterprise as ever was thought of without more complete investigation and the development of more accurate facts, but, as I said a moment ago, it may serve to amuse somebody. It will be about a two days' wonder, and in my judgment that will be the end of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3783, to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Is that motion debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is, after the morning hour.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President I have had occasion during the investigation of the so-called aviation program——

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to inquire of the Senator who made the motion to take up this bill and of the Senator who now has the floor if they would object to allowing me an opportunity to try to pass the rent-profiteering joint resolution respecting the District of Columbia? I fancy it will take only a very few minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing to yield for that purpose.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator who made the motion and the Senator who has the floor will agree to do that, I think it will delay the matter only a very few minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I can be assured that I will be recognized to take up this bill after the completion of the consideration of the joint resolution, I have no objection at all to the Senate taking up the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should, of course, be very glad to recognize the Senator under those circumstances if I were in the chair; but I can not undertake to say——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, at the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Delaware if the present occupant of the chair is here he will recognize the Senator from Utah, and if he leaves the chair he will instruct his successor to that effect.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not object to the making of the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair means—that the Senator from Utah will be recognized to make the motion.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that if he will consent to the taking up of the bill, I will ask that it be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Delaware can proceed with his joint resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. I will not consent to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator would not, but I wanted to be perfectly fair to all Senators concerned; and in order to show the Senator from Colorado that I have no desire whatever to make him talk for any great length of time, I am going to say to the Senator that with the statement made by the Chair I am perfectly willing that we shall proceed now with the consideration of the rent measure, if it does not lead to too long discussion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I fancy that it will not.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me say that it is not necessary for the Senator to try to make me talk. I think perhaps he would serve the country better by doing something that would make me keep still. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw the motion, Mr. President.

RENTAL OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 152, to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That until the adjournment sine die of the present session of the Congress no judicial order for the recovery of possession of any real estate, now or hereafter held or acquired by oral or written lease, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, and all leases thereof shall continue so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, except on the ground that the tenant has failed to take reasonable care of the premises, or has committed waste, or has been guilty of conduct which is a nuisance or amounts to a disturbance of the peace of adjoining or neighboring occupiers or a violation of law, or that the premises are reasonably required by a landlord for occupation by himself or his family while in the employ of or officially connected with the Government; and where such order has been made, but not executed before the passage of this resolution, the court by which the order was made may, if it is of the opinion that the order would not have been made if this resolution had been in force at the date of the making of the order, rescind or modify the order in such manner as the court may deem proper for the purpose of giving effect to this resolution: Provided, That any provision in any oral or written lease that the same shall be determined or forfeited if the premises shall be sold is hereby declared to be void while this resolution shall be in force, and every purchaser shall take the conveyance of any premises subject to the rights of all tenants in possession thereof under the provisions of this resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the joint resolution now before the Senate was up for discussion when we adjourned on Saturday, or shortly before that time. I do not care to add very much to what I have said; but upon further considering the joint resolution, and upon conferring with my colleagues on the District of Columbia Committee who have been particularly interested in this matter, I think that an amendment should be made to the joint resolution, which I will now purpose.

I move that the joint resolution be amended by inserting after the word "lease," on line 6 of the first page, the words "for one month or any longer period." The effect of that amendment is to make the joint resolution apply only to cases where the tenure is for a month or longer, and not to apply to daily or weekly tenures, which is manifestly an improvement.

I move the adoption of that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "lease," it is proposed to insert the words "for one month or any longer period," so that if amended it will read:

now or hereafter held or acquired by oral or written lease for one month or any longer period, or for the ejection or dispossession—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Delaware what we are to understand by an oral lease?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Merely a lease where a tenant enters into possession under a verbal agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not a lease, then.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Not in writing.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is an agreement; it is not a lease.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Anything which provides for the possession of real estate by a tenant would be technically a lease, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should not think so; but I will not put my lack of legal knowledge against the Senator's fullness of legal knowledge.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not profess any such knowledge, but I think I am clear on that point.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that where there was a so-called oral lease the tenant might claim that the owner said he might occupy the property a certain length of time, and the owner might say, "I did not make any such agreement," and there you are. I think, if the word "oral" is to remain in the joint resolution, that it ought to be "oral agreement," and let them fight it out as to whether they have an agreement or not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that that would be the case anyway; it would be purely a question of evidence as between the landlord and the tenant. That would be the case in any event.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am going to venture to move that the word "agreement" be placed in the joint resolution after the word "oral," at the end of line 5, page 1, and also in line 11, page 2, so that it will read "oral agreement or written lease."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no objection at all, if the Senator desires that amendment to be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this joint resolution was before the Senate on Saturday I asked that it should go over, because I wanted to look into it. I have not had much time to do that; in fact, I have hardly had time to read it from that time to the present, having much official business on my hands. I then said that it was extraordinary legislation, most unusual legislation, which the Senator from Delaware admitted was the fact.

I am not satisfied as to the wisdom of passing a joint resolution of this kind. The House has passed some kind of a so-called rent-profiteering bill. I have not had time to examine that bill. It is now before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I presume will soon be presented to this body for consideration. I am not informed, and I do not know that I could by any possibility set in operation an inquiry that would inform me, as to how extended this grievance is, as to how much advantage is being taken of the occupants of buildings or apartments by the owners in the matter of increased rentals.

I can see some objections to this joint resolution. A man owns a little home here. It is leased, and he wants to sell it. The lease is about to expire, or there is an oral agreement that the party occupying it shall occupy it for a month; but he is not permitted to sell it. I think the suggestion has been made here that the bill that will be presented here contains practically the same provision as this; and thus the man who desires to dispose of his property is denied that right by law, although there may be very urgent reasons why he wants to dispose of it. That is a thing that never was dreamed of before, I apprehend, in the history of this country. He is compelled to allow the occupant to remain there, because the law says that he can not eject him under any circumstances.

I know of one case—it is a very exceptional case—where a gentleman owns a house in Washington, not a very high-priced one, and he wants to change the tenant so as to accommodate a man in his employ to whom he is planning to rent the house at a lower rate than he is getting now, $10 a month less; but he will not be allowed to do it under this provision. Of course, that is only one case; I imagine that it is almost sui generis, but it exists. Poor men have come into my committee room—two of them to-day—to tell me that they have worked hard to acquire little homes, and they have rented their homes, and now they want to occupy them themselves, but under a law of this kind they can not do it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should like to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that under the bill which has been reported to the Senate to-day by the Committee on the District of Columbia both of the cases which he mentions are fully provided for. Any person who wants to occupy the property himself or to have it occupied by his family or by his servants is fully provided for.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to know that, Mr. President. For that reason I think we ought to take up that bill and pass it, in place of passing this joint resolution, which does not provide against the matters of which I have complained.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him, there is no inhibition against the owner of the property selling his property. He can sell his property just in the same way that he always could sell his property, but the tenants of properties in the District are given the right to remain on at the rent which they now pay, provided their tenure is for more than a month, from month to month, and the only hardship on a man who wants to sell his property is that he can not deliver possession to the person to whom he sells it. If the owner of any property is engaged in any governmental work, he can obtain his property and move into it at any time. The object is—I do not care to interrupt the Senator if he objects, of course.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; not at all. I am delighted to have the explanation of the Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall be very glad to explain the matter. The object of the joint resolution is to provide in every way possible to get places where the people who are engaged in the Government service may sleep and may live in this District.

If I may explain to the Senator, there are about 50,000 employees of the Government under the civil service who have been brought to Washington during the last year. It is anticipated that 35,000 more of them will be brought in between now and the fall. They have all got to be attended to. There are not enough houses here to house everybody, and where a man had actually rented his property it did not seem to the committee to be any hardship to keep him out of it while the Government employees actually needed it. That is the theory of that portion of the joint resolution.

I will speak later as to the great amount of profiteering. I do not want to interrupt the Senator too long.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that a man not in the Government employ could be dispossessed to give place to a man or a woman who is in the Government employ.

The Senator says that 50,000 Government employees have been brought in during the last year and that 35,000 more are to follow. I do think that, instead of passing a bill of this kind, we might well halt and make an inquiry as to the necessity for the inundation of boys and girls and men and women into the District of Columbia. If anybody knows what on earth they are doing, I confess it is beyond my ability to comprehend.

Mr. President, I am not going to make any factious opposition to this joint resolution. The committee, composed of men in whom I have much confidence, seem to be unanimously in favor of it. But I do want to voice a suggestion, at least—it might be called, possibly, a warning—that in these days of lax economy, in these days, if not of misappropriation of public funds, at least of the reckless use of them, we might well pause and make inquiry as to whether we are not having thousands and tens of thousands of employees, so called—many of whom are doing nothing to earn their salaries, as I happen to know—come into the District of Columbia to dispossess the citizens of their property because it is argued that there is no place for them to sleep.

Mr. President, I have here what I consider a very interesting contribution to this question, in the form of a clipping from a newspaper printed in Augusta, Wis.—the Augusta Eagle. This happened to be sent to me a week ago, and I put it in my desk. I have seen somewhat similar mention made in other papers of the great straits the Government is in for more employees, and the fact is being advertised all over the country that all a boy or a girl has to do to get a job is to come to Washington. I think all of those who come here are getting jobs.

I ask that this article from the Augusta (Wis.) Eagle may be read. To me it is a very interesting article.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested:

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Augusta (Wis.) Eagle, Apr. 26, 1918.]

THOUSANDS NEEDED AT GOOD SALARIES—20,000 SPECIALISTS WANTED IN ARMY AND NAVY CIVILIAN BRANCHES.

Charging armies and thundering battleships are easy to visualize but not so easy to accomplish. There can be no going "over the top," no paralyzing broadsides, unless to sustain the blow there is material in abundance to back up the human effort.

Right now the civilian branches of the Army and Navy are in urgent need of thousands of highly trained workers, and before this year passes these branches must be increased by at least 20,000. The Ordnance Department of the Army needs great numbers of men who are trained as mechanical engineers, mechanical and other kinds of draftsmen, chemists, metallurgists, and the like. Literally thousands of inspectors are also wanted for the work of passing upon the quality of everything conceivable in the way of ordnance, ammunition, and other munitions. For office work the Ordnance Department wants a great many statisticians, accountants, experts and assistants in business administration, and clerks trained in special lines, such as clerks qualified in business administration, index and catalogue clerks, and clerks qualified in statistics or accounting. The Quartermaster Corps of the Army is in need of several thousand examiners and inspectors of everything that enters into the personal and camp equipment of the soldier. Passenger and freight rate clerks are also wanted in this branch. The Signal Corps of the Army is short of aeronautical mechanical draftsmen. The Navy has an unlimited number of places for draftsmen of various kinds and for a long list of technical workers. Practically all branches of the service are in need of stenographers, typists, bookkeepers, statistical clerks, multigraph operators, and calculating-machine operators.

The United States Civil Service Commission, whose duty it is to fill these civilian positions, urges as a patriotic duty that qualified persons offer their services for this work—work vital to pushing the war. Good salaries are offered, and the work is all in the United States. With the exception of a few of the clerical positions, applicants will not be assembled for written examinations, but will be rated upon their education, training, and experience, as shown in their applications, supplemented by corroborative evidence. Representatives of the Civil Service Commission at the post offices in all cities are prepared to furnish definite information and application blanks.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is illuminating. I do not know who is responsible for this. It is apparently placed upon the Civil Service Commission. I doubt very much whether the Civil Service Commission is responsible for it.

Mr. KENYON. Is it an advertisement?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not; it is a news item, apparently. I do not know where it originated. The suggestion is there made that they are not even to be required by the Civil Service Commission to take written examinations; that they are to be rated according to some plan that will be devised in the department, upon educational experience or something else.

Now, how is this going to end? If it is necessary to bring in 35,000 more, as the Senator from Delaware suggested, I would be the last man in the world to oppose it; but as I have passed through certain bureaus in the last month and witnessed the apparent incompetence of those who are being employed, and of their negligence, so far as their duties are concerned, and have had some of them tell me they had been there a week and have had nothing to do, I have wondered whether after all it was not a duty devolving upon Congress to ascertain whether or not it is wise to turn the city of Washington upside down, dispossess the owners of property, men who have toiled during a lifetime to obtain a home, to make a place for this inundation, because it is nothing less than that, of Federal employees. If it is necessary let it go on, but it seems to me there ought to be some inquiry concerning it.

Mr. President, I have felt that way, and I feel that way now. I am not going to oppose the joint resolution. If the committee thinks it wise to do this thing let it be done, but I think it would be wiser to take the bill the committee has reported. We could pass that, I judge, as soon as we can pass this joint resolution. Then let it go to conference and let us have legislation on the subject and settle it once for all.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator concerning the resolution which I saw by the papers he introduced. Was it in reference to an investigation as to the new clerks in Washington?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I offered a resolution on Saturday asking the Committee on Expenditures of the War Department to make an investigation as to the manner in which appropriations for that department had been expended; that is all.

Mr. KENYON. I wish the Senator would introduce a resolution for an investigation of the new clerks. I was told not later than this noon by a gentleman connected with one of these bureaus that there are 2,000 of these clerks to do the work that 600 have been doing, and that 600 could do. I agree with the Senator that there ought to be some kind of an investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I feel that way about it, but unless some other Senator agrees with me, or unless the Senate thinks it is necessary to inquire into this matter, I, of course, have no more concern about it than any other Senator; but I really feel that there has been the utmost degree of recklessness employed by the heads of bureaus, if not of departments, in making demands for clerical and other help. As I suggested the other day, I read in the newspapers that a certain official, not the head of a department but a subordinate, said he could use 1,200 stenographers; that he could give them employment. That is too ridiculous for a moment's consideration.

Yet I presume that gentleman would like to have 1,200 good-looking girls or cigarette-smoking young men under his control. But the question is whether we want to do it. If the finances of the Government are in such splendid shape—and I think they are in about as bad a shape as they can be—that we can go on appropriating money without hindrance, adding to the clerical expenses in Washington until we get so many here that they will have to sleep in the park, as they do in Hyde Park in London, perhaps it is wisdom, but it does not appeal to me.

I have on my desk a bill introduced in the other House which, to my mind, has a good deal of sense. I presume we could not get it through either branch of Congress, but it strikes me that it is worthy of consideration. It is a bill to distribute these activities; to let the Shipping Board go to Philadelphia, for instance; to let the Food Administration—I do not think it makes much difference where it goes; to let the Coal Administrator go to some other region than the city of Washington.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator suggest where?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator will look at the bill which has been reported from the committee he will find that that is provided for.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Vermont interrupts me to say that if I look at the bill that has been reported, even those things have been provided for. All the more reason why we should take that bill up and consider it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator that one reason why the committee thought it might be wise to pass the joint resolution now—it may be that the Senator in charge of the joint resolution has already stated it—is because the bill we have reported is very radically different from the bill that passed the House. We anticipate that there will be very considerable delay in conference, and that it will probably be a month or two before we can get the legislation through. The situation seems to be so pressing, from the information that came to the committee, that we thought it wise to report the joint resolution for passage.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will allow me, along the same line as the statement just made by the Senator from Washington, there were a great many impelling reasons for the presentation of this joint resolution. One was the vast number of notices which came to our knowledge that had been served upon tenants requiring them either to immediately sign up leases for the ensuing year or to vacate. I have here a copy of one of the notices served by the landlord on a tenant in a large apartment house in which there are probably 40 or 50 or more tenants. I have been told that the same notice was served upon each of the tenants, advising them of an increase in rent of 33⅓ per cent for the ensuing year, and requiring them to call at the office and sign the new lease on or before May 10. That is just four days hence, and these 40 or more tenants are threatened with dispossession unless they will immediately sign the leases at this increased rental.

Mr. GALLINGER. Those 40 or more tenants have a lease already which will not expire until the 1st day of October.

Mr. POMERENE. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. They need not go to the captain's office unless they wish to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. But the Senator overlooks the fact that the apartments will be let to other tenants, so that they will be dispossessed on October 1 unless they sign up for the increased rents. That is the difficulty about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I apprehend there are cases—and they may be more numerous than I think—where this is going on; but, after all, we are face to face with the fact that 33⅓ per cent—and I doubt whether that would be exacted in many cases—does not exceed what we are paying in increased prices for everything on earth that we use. I saw two pieces of goods on Saturday, one purchased a few months ago for 35 cents, and exactly the same kind of goods, except it was not as good a quality, a woman paid 85 cents for on Saturday. That is about what we are up against, not only in the city of Washington but everywhere else. I saw a piece of goods that came from New York a few days ago identical with that which was purchased less than one year ago and at exactly double the price it was a year ago.

So I say, I think there is a good deal of feeling engendered against even the owners of apartment houses that may not be quite just. I happen to have a little apartment in an apartment house. I have not been notified of any increase of rent, but I would not be surprised if I would be, and if this increased cost of everything goes on I do not know but what it would be justifiable. I am not advising the owner of the property to increase my rent, but I am not so sure that it would not be a just thing for the owner of the property to do under the circumstances.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator is expressing some doubt as to the general serving of these notices. While the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] was speaking I looked at the notices he had in his hand which had been sent to him. I have one sent to me identical in every way, printed with the same type, but the names of the apartment houses are different; the names of the people to whom they are addressed are different; the rent is different. The 33⅓ per cent is precisely the same and the date—May 10—is precisely the same—the time when the tenants are to come to the captain's office. It is a peculiar thing that these notices should be printed and used by different apartment-house owners with those identical characteristics and printed with the same type. It seems to me that that carries out precisely what the committee has been informed—that it is such a general thing in the city that people are willing to take advantage of the necessities of the tenant that it has come to a point where we are convinced it must be attended to.

I will say to the Senator that he will be surprised at the extent of this thing. I have on my desk here a letter from a gentleman almost as well known in this country as Theodore Roosevelt, a man who is looked to as one of the great leaders of progressive thought and conservation. He is a large property owner in the city of Washington, and yet he tells his tenant that if she does not give up possession to him willingly, he will sell that property under the terms of the lease—which provides that in case of sale the tenure may be avoided, and the new landlord may rent it—he will sell that property, to which the tenant is entitled for a year longer, to his own wife for cash, and in that way obtain possession of the property, so that he may get money out of his property to contribute to war relief.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator think a sale of that kind would operate to avoid a lease?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course it would not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; and the gentleman who made the threat discovered that it would not. Of course, it would be very interesting——

Mr. FLETCHER. May I make an inquiry, with the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is expected to be accomplished by this provision? Where would you get any relief against those notices, unless you expect Congress to be in session until the 1st of October? The 1st of October I understand the purpose is to oblige the landlords to rent to the tenant or some other tenant at the same price; but if Congress is not in session as late as the 1st of October, the joint resolution does not operate, and you do not afford any relief to those who have received the notices.

Mr. SAULSBURY. With the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. GALLINGER. I have only a word more to say, but I will yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Delaware first.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has called attention to the somewhat unusual exactions, or contemplated exactions, of a gentleman who he says is almost as prominent in the progressive field as Theodore Roosevelt. Is this gentleman also a distinguished advocate of extreme conservation?

Mr. SAULSBURY. He is a great conservationist. That is his chief characteristic in the public eye.

Mr. THOMAS. With a French name?

Mr. SAULSBURY. His first name, I will say, is Gifford.

Mr. REED. And the Senator objects to letting him conserve his own interests?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not going to let him conserve his own interests at the expense of the Government or at the expense of anybody else, if I can help it by law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have only a few more words to say. I called attention to what I called an inundation of clerks to the city of Washington. I believe it ought to be stopped, or at least it ought to be investigated before it becomes a peril to other property owners in Washington, if they are to be given a preference in the matter of lodging.

There is one other evil that has come to the city of Washington and to the property owners in the city of Washington, and that is a less inundation of rich men in the city of Washington who are working for a dollar a year. I have in mind a house, I do not know how much it cost but I should think $100,000 would be a very large amount, more likely it cost from $50,000 to $75,000. I know a certain gentleman who on coming to the city offered to pay $35,000 a year rent for that house. That is not an isolated case. The result is that houses are being vacated in that way, and the former occupants have to find a lodging somewhere. If we have got to give up our homes absolutely to the clerical force of the Government and to the specialists of the Government and the draftsmen of the Government named in that bill—I suppose any girl or boy who can draw a crooked line is a draftsman just as any man who can saw a board, whether he saws it crooked or not, is a carpenter and gets six or seven dollars a day or more—if people who have acquired a home by hard work are to give up their homes for that class of people, there is going to be a turmoil in the city of Washington, and if it is extended to other cities of the Union there will be a trouble that will be very serious, in my judgment.

But, as I said, I have great confidence in this committee. I have no doubt they have worked diligently on this matter, and think this is a necessity, but I would very much prefer taking up the bill they have reported and discussing it and passing it, if it is a wise measure, and I would not be alarmed, as the Senator from Washington is, lest it might be in conference for a long time. We had a bill here the other day which we discussed for several days and the Senator in charge of it prophesied that unless we passed it quickly it would be of no particular use. It went to the House, and the House accepted every amendment we put on, and I suppose we put on 25. If there is any need of this legislation, both Houses of Congress are wise enough and sensible enough to pass a salutary bill, and I think we ought to pass quickly the bill, which I understand has been reported to the Senate in a different draft from that passed by the House, and let it go to conference; but I yield to the combined judgment of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I presume that a measure of this kind is necessary to deal with the situation which we have here. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the measure if there is any provision under the joint resolution by which a bona fide purchaser of property, for instance, would get possession for his own use?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the only provision that is made here on that point is that any person who is the owner, or any purchaser if he is in Government employ, could obtain that property for his own use.

Mr. BORAH. Some people who have been paying rent here in apartment houses, and so forth, have come to the conclusion that if they are to stay here they must buy property. I wonder if the Senator feels that it would weaken the force of the joint resolution if we inserted on page 2, line 2, after the word "landlord," the words "or bona fide purchaser."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think I can answer the Senator that it would probably very greatly interfere with the effect of the joint resolution, and for this reason: As described before the committee, and possibly before the Senate by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], there is one location of which he happens to know personally—and many such were brought to our attention—where tenants have been given notice in numbers, and an attempt is being made to compel the tenants to buy the property, under threat of a sale to somebody else. If a sale is made to somebody else, they could oust these tenants, even under the guise of coming in as owners, and it would work a hardship which we are seeking to avoid by the joint resolution, because all the tenants might be ousted, and certainly they would be put to the trouble of proving a colorable sale.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me a large latitude ought to be given for legitimate transactions.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say to the Senator I would not object very much to a provision of that kind, where the person who bought was moving into the property.

Mr. BORAH. This might accommodate the class of people whom you are seeking to protect by this measure, because it would be a bona fide sale, and it must be for the party's occupation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will suggest such an amendment as that, I shall not object to it.

Mr. BORAH. Is an amendment in order now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. BORAH. On page 2, line 2, after the word "landlord," I move to insert the words "or bona fide purchaser," so as to read:

> Or that the premises are reasonably required by a landlord or bona fide purchaser for occupation by himself or his family while in the employ of or officially connected with the Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. For his own occupation.

Mr. BORAH. It says that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to ask the author of the joint resolution how many cases he knows of where the outrages he has depicted are being perpetrated?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Through the testimony given before the committee and through the statement of letters which members of the committee have received, I suppose some hundreds.

Mr. REED. How many hundred?

Mr. POMERENE. I can give the Senator a little information on that subject.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Ohio do so. He is chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. POMERENE. I have another letter from one of the tenants in another apartment house in which there are over 40, and they have all been served with notices. An officer connected with the War Department who has been at times assigned to the special duty of looking after the people who are about to be dispossessed and to try to find living quarters for others connected with that department said to me the other day that in one week he had over a thousand of these notices come to him for his investigation, and that they were constantly coming. It has become so extensive——

Mr. REED. A raise of 33⅓ per cent?

Mr. POMERENE. I should not say that they were general raises in the rent. I could not say as to the amount of the raises. I may say to the Senator, further, that many of the real estate men who came before our committee stated they believed that something would have to be done in order to protect these people. In other words, there are many real estate brokers and agents very high-class men who feel the necessity of being protected against the outrages which are being perpetrated upon the people by other agents who are engaged in business here in the city.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know how many thousand tenants there are in Washington, approximately?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I do not think I can tell the Senator the number. This will give a side light on the question which the Senator has asked. It was stated that there were over 200 apartment houses in the city that are being rented. Of course, the Senator is aware that in many of them there are a great many tenants and in others the number is small.

Mr. REED. I suppose in a city of 350,000, like Washington, largely made up of transients, it would not be unsafe to say that 275,000 of them live in rented quarters—perhaps 300,000—and if there are 300,000 and you have complaints from two or three hundred, it is very far from giving any kind of accurate information as to general conditions.

Mr. President, I think that a man who will take advantage of the present situation to grossly increase his rent is a swinish sort of fellow who ought to be consigned to the contempt of every decent man. But that there should be some increase in rent, assuming now that the rents in the past have been reasonable, is absolutely to be expected. The upkeep of a house has enormously increased. If the heat is to be furnished, the coal costs more to the landlord. The janitor service costs a great deal more, and every other element that enters into the upkeep of the building has been increased. The values of property have likewise increased, and it is only natural under those conditions that there should be some reasonable increase in rent. As was suggested by the Senator from Florida, repairs, plumbing bills, and everything of that kind which I think I had previously embraced in my expression "upkeep" should be included. I had my house painted the other day, and I paid twice as much as I would have had to pay when I came here six years ago. The men who own these properties, some of them, may be acting very badly, but let us be careful of two things, that we do not punish the innocent with the guilty, and let us be careful also that we do not too closely imitate the soviet that is just now distinguishing Russia.

I confess to such a feeling of disgust for men who are at a time like this trying to profiteer that I hesitate to say anything in favor even of the property owner who is only exercising the right of a citizen.

But, Mr. President, as is usual with remedies of the kind proposed, they largely defeat themselves. We had notice served upon us a few months ago that building operations must cease in this country. The motive back of that was excellent. It had its effect in the city of Washington, as it did in every other part of the country—the building operations largely ceased. But babies continued to be born, population continued to increase, and to-day the Government of the United States is appropriating $10,000,000 to build houses in the city of Washington, a large part of which might have been built by private enterprise if it had not been discouraged by governmental interference; and yet it will take as much lumber and just as much steel for the Government to build a lot of claptraps that will ultimately be torn down as it would to have built good buildings to start with. So having discouraged building, we now propose to pass a joint resolution, that is notice duly served upon every man who may dream of building a structure in the city of Washington, that he is not to be secure for one single moment in his rights to own that property, to use that property, and to realize an income from that property.

This joint resolution is the absolute and final stoppage of any building operations in the city of Washington.

No man but an imbecile would ever think of borrowing money, as most of them do who build these great structures, and erecting a great apartment building in the city of Washington, with the knowledge that a joint resolution can be rushed through Congress any hot afternoon that will deprive him of the use of his property and of the ability to make enough money to pay the interest upon his investment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As a case in point, Mr. President, I desire to say that I own quite a large building in the city here, and for several weeks one of the leading hotel men in the country has been trying to get me to join with him to put up a large building, not so large as a big hotel, but a very high-class restaurant, with 60 rooms, several stories of rooms, which would be of some little relief to the people who are walking the streets here and who can not get lodging and food to eat; but now we are halted. I would not dare to put any money into the transaction now, and certainly no lessee on a 5 or 10 year lease, after he had contributed part toward the improvement, would dare to take that chance, because the next day any department head might come around and take the property at their own price. That is just an instance in point.

Mr. REED. But, more than that, if the Senator from Connecticut wanted to borrow money, how much money does he think he could borrow on that kind of property—I mean money with which to build?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We probably could not borrow the money anyway, Mr. President, because the banks decline now to lend on real estate. I sold a building in my home town the other day, and took half the purchase price as a first mortgage, which is as good as gold, and which ordinarily every savings bank and every insurance company in the State would have jumped at; and yet I can not do anything with that mortgage; none of them will take it, and I have got to hold it. You can not get a dollar west of the Allegheny Mountains for anything except to put into active business connected with the war. I am not saying that it is wrong; I am not criticizing it; I am only stating the financial situation.

Mr. REED. The Senator does know, I think, that, if there is any money to be loaned upon real estate, it is not very likely to be loaned upon real estate where Congress exercises the right to confiscate the property or to destroy its use.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, no business institution, as a trustee for other people's funds, could properly loan a dollar with the threat hanging over it of condemnation at the Government's own price, without a gross betrayal of their duty as such trustee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think there is a way by which these excessive rents can be reached and the Constitution not be raped or the right of contract abrogated. I have not any doubt of the power of Congress within the District of Columbia to lay an excess-profit tax and to lay it in such a way that it would not be profitable for a man to charge these enormous rents, because when he went above a certain point the tax would take away his profits. That, however, is not this joint resolution.

Now, I want to see if I can not challenge the attention of Congress to this matter. I am not going to be very long about it. I do not know whether or not it will do a bit of good. There are many people who think they can cure everything by simply passing a resolution. They think that over in Russia. But I say that when the Congress of the United States shows its disregard for the Constitution and the laws of the land they sow the dragon's teeth, from which spring up the Industrial Workers of the World organization, the anarchists, and that class of socialists who disregard law and constitutions and property rights.

When in high places we snap our fingers in the face of the law of this land, how can we expect otherwise than that the soap-box orator, the ignorant, and the depraved will likewise snap their fingers in the face of authority?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. While I agree with the Senator that what he suggests does make socialists, does not the profiteering which is going on in this country and the profiteering that is going on in this District, that would make Capt. Kidd turn green with envy, also create socialists just as fast as anything else can do it in this country?

Mr. REED. I do not think so.

Mr. KENYON. I think it does.

Mr. REED. But I have already suggested that there is a constitutional way by which the greater part of it can be reached. What is this joint resolution? It is a bald, naked, unblushing abrogation of the rights of property; it is a bald, naked, unblushing attempt to violate the obligations of contract. It does not bring forth even the shadow of a pretense behind which it can conceal its ugly visage.

Mr. KENYON. This joint resolution is to continue only during the session of Congress, in order that a remedy may be worked out; it is merely a moratorium.

Mr. REED. But a resolution to set aside the Constitution of the United States for 15 minutes is just as vicious in principle as one would be to set it aside for 15 years. The Senate of the United States ought to guard the Constitution that its Members have sworn they will guard. When we undertake by a simple joint resolution to set aside the Constitution which has been adopted by the people of the United States I say we do as bad and as vicious a thing as an anarchist society when it meets and resolves that it will disregard the Constitution. Let us read this joint resolution. It provides:

That until the adjournment sine die of the present session of the Congress no judicial order for the recovery of possession of any real estate, now or hereafter held acquired by oral or written lease, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, and all leases thereof shall continue so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate—

It not only abrogates the terms of written contracts, but it proposes to make a new contract. You propose by this resolution to extend the terms of a contract, even though the parties themselves do not want it extended. You proceed to make a contract between private citizens by a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States. You undertake to sanction that under the rule of necessity. It was old Milton who said, when speaking of Satan, that he justified his course under the doctrine of necessity.

What are you going to do with the fifth amendment to the Constitution, which reads:

No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

What are you going to do with the provision that no State shall pass any law abrogating the terms of a contract, a doctrine which in principle applies to the Federal Government? What are you undertaking when you declare:

Provided, That any provision in any oral or written lease that the same shall be determined or forfeited if the premises shall be sold is hereby declared to be void while this resolution shall be in force, and every purchaser shall take the conveyance of any premises subject to the rights of all tenants in possession thereof under the provisions of this resolution—

Except to impair, annul, avoid, and cancel the terms of a contract?

What are you doing but simply sitting here in the Senate of the United States and resolving to violate the Constitution adopted by a sovereign people? For shame! For shame! Of course, Mr. President, there is no use in reading the old authors. The other day a bill was brought in here which proposed to try everybody in the United States by a court-martial. Many Senators had been talking to the effect that the Constitution was gone; that it was dead, or temporarily had been sealed up in the catacombs, along with other defunct things, and that it would there remain, only to be resurrected by the trumpets of restored peace when they once more reverberate in the capitals of the world. The President of the United States gave you a rude jolt when he called attention to the fact that the Constitution still lives and must be obeyed. Let me read a little from an old story——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator from Missouri think that the advocates of that measure received a rude jolt when they ascertained that the Senate would never pass such a bill?

Mr. REED. Well, I am glad if it be true that the Senate would not have passed it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was pretty well demonstrated.

Mr. REED. I have a number of times seen the Senate line up with great gallantry on things it was "not going to do," and afterwards have seen it do them. The other day I found myself the only man on this side of the Chamber who "voted as he had talked."

I wish to call the attention of the Senate especially to this language of Judge Story:

The remaining clause, as to impairing the obligation of contracts, will require a more full and deliberate examination. The Federalist treats this subject in the following brief and general manner: "Bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts are contrary to the first principles—

Let me call the attention of all the Members of the Senate to what old Story says:

Bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts, are contrary to the first principles of the social compact, and to every principle of sound legislation.

"Contrary to the first principles of the social compact!" Of course, that is true. They are learning that over in Russia now; they found it out over there when they began to disregard the rights of property, and ascertained speedily that they were starving; that their armies were dissolving like mist before the sun; that their land was beneath the feet of the conqueror; and that the proud nation of Russia was prostrate and enslaved. "Contrary to the first principles of the social compact!"

The two former—

That is, bills of attainder and ex post facto laws—

Are expressly prohibited by the declarations prefixed to some of the State constitutions, and all of them are prohibited by the spirit and scope of their fundamental character. Our own experience has taught us, nevertheless, that additional fences against these dangers ought not to be omitted. Very properly, therefore, have the convention added this constitutional bulwark in favor of personal security and private rights, etc. The sober people of America are weary of the fluctuating policy which has directed the public councils. They have seen, with regret and indignation, that sudden changes and legislative interferences in cases affecting personal rights became jobs in the hands of enterprising and influential speculators and snares to the more industrious and less informed part of the community. They have seen, too, that one legislative interference—

Now, notice this—

They have seen, too, that one legislative interference is but the first link in a long chain of repetitions, every subsequent interference being naturally provoked by the effects of the preceding. They very rightly infer, therefore, that some thorough reform is wanting which will banish speculations on public measures, inspire a general prudence and industry, and give a regular course to business and society.

Such was the language of the Federalist at the time these great provisions of the Constitution were under consideration.

The fathers of the Republic knew that unless life, liberty, and property were secure, and that unless legislative interference with these great fundamental rights was prohibited, this Constitution and this Government would speedily disintegrate, and that the liberties of the people would ultimately fall beneath the assault of the foes of freedom; and so they ordained these safeguards. This afternoon we resolve to wipe them out.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator regard the law which we have passed, providing a moratorium for soldiers in case of debt, as in violation of the Constitution?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I went over that bill and discussed it at the time it was under consideration.

Mr. KENYON. I have forgotten what position the Senator took.

Mr. REED. The position I took at that time was that the proposed law, as we had prepared it, was unconstitutional. I insisted in the committee and insisted on the floor of the Senate that we had a perfect right to protect the person of the soldier but that we did not have the right to stop the mere collection of a debt, and particularly the machinery of a State court. I contended for that as stoutly as I was able to contend.

But, Mr. President, that measure had some relation to the service of soldiers. It could be claimed, and probably will be claimed when the cases come to final arbitrament in the courts, that an interference even with the property of a soldier affects his utility as a soldier and, therefore, there is a direct connection, it may be argued, between the effect of this law upon a soldier and the conduct of the war; but this joint resolution does not even secrete itself behind any such pretense as that.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, anyone reading this joint resolution and thinking about it, is rather startled with its drastic provisions. I voted for it in the committee on a theory which I felt was analogous to that underlying the moratorium bill for soldiers; not that we are taking property, but we are merely suspending a remedy in behalf of persons who are engaged in governmental work and who consequently must not be disturbed. Now, I realize that it does go a trifle further than that, but that is the theory of the joint resolution.

Mr. REED. "A trifle further?" It goes the entire length. I beg my very good friend's pardon, but you can base the joint resolution on no such theory as that. The joint resolution applies to every man, woman, and child in the city of Washington who owns any property and rents it, and to every man, woman, and child in the city of Washington who rents any property.

Mr. KENYON. The bill itself covers only those connected with the Government; but I think that it is true that the joint resolution does go further than that.

Mr. REED. I am speaking of the joint resolution; I am not speaking of the bill. The joint resolution covers everything; nor is the joint resolution limited to the remedy. However, I remark that if we absolutely deny a man a remedy it is the denial of property. You can postpone a remedy for a reasonable time, but you can not deny a remedy. I read again from Story:

Although there is a distinction between the obligation of a contract and a remedy upon it, yet, if there are certain remedies existing at the time when it is made, all of which are afterwards wholly extinguished by new laws, so that there remain no means of enforcing its obligation and no redress, such an abolition of all remedies operating in præsenti is also an impairing of the obligation of such contract.

And this operates in presenti. This joint resolution goes further than that. It undertakes to authorize a court to annul its solemn judgment even after the term of the court has expired in which the judgment was rendered and when the judgment was no longer within the bosom of the court.

Let me read:

That until the adjournment sine die of the present session of the Congress no judicial order for the recovery of possession of any real estate, now or hereafter held or acquired by oral or written lease, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, * * * and where such order has been made, but not executed before the passage of this resolution, the court by which the order was made may, if it is of the opinion that the order would not have been made if this resolution had been in force at the date of the making of the order, rescind or modify the order in such manner as the court may deem proper for the purpose of giving effect to this resolution.

What an appalling doctrine. Let us see. A year ago a court made an order terminating a lease and ordering the ouster of the tenant, to take place on to-morrow. The court's judgment has been duly recorded, has not been excepted to, and the term of court has expired. The order is about to be executed on to-morrow, whereupon the Congress of the United States, the tribunal that is appointed to guard the Constitution, passes a resolution under which the court can reconsider that case, set aside that solemn judgment, and render any judgment it sees fit.

I want to deal with all due respect with the committee, but I say that the bolshevists in Russia have never adopted a resolution so utterly violative of every principle of civilized government as that. You can not point to such a resolution.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if this joint resolution were limited to those who are connected with the Government, would he not feel then that the principle was the same as that involved in the soldiers' moratorium legislation, although I know he does not believe that is constitutional and that is a fair matter for dispute?

Mr. REED. The Senator asks me, while I am on my feet, a question that anyone would naturally like to reflect upon for a moment before answering; but, answering in the off-hand way I am required to do, it strikes me that if this were limited to the right to occupy property by those who are actually in the Government service connected with the war, we might, in some measure, approximate the moratorium bill.

But the moratorium bill was defended by its sponsors upon an additional ground; they claimed that it only temporarily affected the remedy, and that even that affectation of the remedy was a matter discretionary with the judge; that is to say, they provided for a short stay of legal proceedings, during which time the defendant was to be notified and was to be represented in a certain way in court; and thereupon the judge had within his discretion the postponement of the proceedings or the postponement of execution. So an additional claim was made for the moratorium bill that it had about it those limitations to which I have referred.

Profiteering can be stopped without this sort of measure; at least it can be greatly limited. I have suggested a means which is not original with me. An excess-profits tax could be levied, and the excess profits could be determined by comparing the present rental with the rental of six months or a year ago, and the tax could be made so great as to take all the landlords unjustly extort.

I have spoken of this resolution rather harshly. Perhaps I ought not to do that; in these times we ought to be prepared for almost everything. New wrongs are springing up and men seek to remedy them, and I have no doubt the committee is acting in the best of faith; but I do beg Senators to remember that it is better even to endure temporary evils than it is to impair the respect for the Constitution. Only the other day we passed a law making it a criminal offense for a man to speak disrespectfully of the Constitution. To-day we propose to pass a resolution to ignore its more sacred terms. No nation ever won a great fight if its leaders lost their heads. These are times for calmness and deliberation, for coolness of action; we should not be precipitated into things.

Let me illustrate that. Some very enthusiastic gentlemen undertook to create by magic, overnight, a fleet of airplanes.

They told all the country how quickly they would have them, and they plunged into the work of constructing those airplanes before they understood the problem. The result is that to-day, in some parts of the airplane program, we are months behind where we would have been if a little time for calm deliberation had been taken and if plans had been made based upon facts and not upon enthusiasm.

Some gentlemen started in in the same way to get certain types of guns. They found a new gun which was going to revolutionize everything, and without sitting down in cold blood and analyzing the proposition and passing upon it on its merits they rushed into the making of contracts for a new type of gun; and yet the heavy gun of that type, which we were told we would have on hand at this time in the thousands, has progressed so little that we have not yet a single gun—not one—not even one to look at. The chart of production shows an interesting and a very sad column of zeros. It would have been better to have taken a little time and to have known what we were doing.

We started rushing soldiers into camps. I speak of this not in harshness; but we got a great many of them in camps before they could be uniformed and before they had guns. It would have been better to have been a little more deliberate and a little more careful. Perhaps two and one-half hours' careful study by one man would have saved the lives of hundreds of these boys.

We have constantly arising before us new difficulties in the legislative field. Most aggravating things occur. A lot of very cheap profiteers see a chance to graft by excessive rents and they start raising rents, and everybody gets mad, and we plunge into a so-called remedy, and yet you will find that you have no remedy. There is not a respectable court in the United States that would not spit upon this joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am very much in sympathy with the legal argument that is being made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri. I want to call his attention, though, to this situation, which doubtless he has thought of, and to which our attention has been called by other Senators:

We have here a city, as the Senator stated a few moments ago, of approximately 350,000 inhabitants. The overwhelming number of those who are residing here have come from other parts of the Union. Many of them are young girls and young boys.

Mr. REED. Most of whom ought to be sent home.

Mr. KING. I am inclined to think that the Senator is right. Many of the young boys ought to be in the Army instead of being here seeking a Government job. However, they are here. They are dependent for their support upon the salaries which they receive from the Government. After paying the enormous prices required for food and for current expenses, a very small sum is left for them, out of which they have to pay their room rent. I have had at least 200 or 250 clerks speak to me within the past three or four weeks, complaining of the exorbitant rents that are being charged by the building owners of Washington; and quite a number of the young men and young women who have spoken to me have complained that after they had paid one month's rent or two month's rent, as the case may be, the rent was raised.

Only Saturday four spoke to me and said that the landlords demanded $5 a month additional rent; starting with the 1st of next month, and would not consent to rent longer than 30 days, and they anticipated at the expiration of that month an additional raise, and so on; and two of the young men stated that they would leave their positions and return home, because they could not afford to pay these increased rents.

Mr. REED. Five dollars a month?

Mr. KING. That was for one room for one young man. That meant considerable to him. I do not mean to say that the $5 a month was all the rent that he paid; it was an increase that was demanded, and he expected that an additional increase would be demanded for the next month, and so on indefinitely, because his landlord would make no promise as to when there would be a cessation in the demands.

Now, we have that problem here to meet. It is a serious one. This work in which the Government is interested must be done. Many of the young men and women who are here are necessary because of the needs of the Government. Senators have clerks and other employees here. They have to remain. They are necessary to the work which the Senators have to perform. Now, what can be done? What ought to be done? What have we the power to do in order to relieve this situation, because there is no question in the world that there are men renting houses in this District who are selfish, who practice profiteering, and who would exact the last pound of flesh that they possibly could out of the poor people who are compelled to rent?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator had been in the Chamber he would have heard me early in my remarks answer the question. I say, first, that this joint resolution is not limited to Government employees, much less limited to those employed in occupations that have to do with the war. The joint resolution applies to every man, woman, and child in the District of Columbia who is a property holder and to every tenant. The joint resolution applies not only to the profiteer who has been doing the things to which the Senator refers, but it applies to the individual who has not raised his rent one penny, and who made, in good faith, a lease under which a tenant was to get out at a certain time; and you deprive him of the chance to use his property as he intended to use it, possibly to transform it into a different kind of building, possibly to have it as a home for a friend or a member of his family who is coming to the city. This joint resolution applies to all of them.

Second, as to the remedy: I have not the slightest doubt that the Congress of the United States, being the supreme legislative body within the District of Columbia, has the power to levy an excess-profits tax and so to phrase that tax law that any man who has raised his rents above what they were at this period last year shall begin to pay an excess-profits tax; and you can make it advance as rapidly as you please, and you can speedily bring it to point where, if the rents are raised very much, the entire excess will be taken over by the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, of course that plan can be adopted; but I am quite sure the Senator would agree with the members of the committee, if he had been present at the hearings, in their conclusion that there has been generally a very exorbitant increase in the rents charged to lessees in the District of Columbia. Now, what relief is it going to be to these tenants to have this excess-profits tax against the landlords or lessors? The purpose of this is twofold.

Mr. REED. I do not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. POMERENE. I tried to point out that there has been a very general and a very excessive increase of rents in the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Missouri seeks to meet that by an excess-profits tax.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, that would grant some relief to the extent that it might discourage excessive rates; but with that exception it would grant no relief whatsoever to the tenant who has been overcharged.

Mr. REED. My answer to that is this: In the first place, I am inclined to think that some increase in some of the rents is justifiable.

Mr. POMERENE. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. REED. Secondly, I say this, and the figures I use now are purely for illustration: If the Government took half of the excess if a man went to 15 per cent, and if the Government took all of the excess if he went above that, there would be mighty little inducement for a landlord to charge above 15 per cent.

Of course, the figures I have usesd are purely illustrative. I do not mean to say that those are the correct places at which to put the limitation, but I am trying to suggest a legal means by which a result can be reached.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a further question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is it possible that the Government might be deprived of all of its employees in the District and, to a large extent, the functions of the Government here cease while you were trying experiments with the taxing power on landlords to make them give Government employees an opportunity to live in the District of Columbia?

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, I do not think that question reaches the matter. If the Government were about to be deprived of all of its employees, there is a way in which even that could be reached, and that is by taking over the property for a public use, by commandeering and taking the property and paying for it. That would be a legal method; but you do not answer an insuperable constitutional objection by referring to the difficulties that may be in our way.

I know that it would be utterly useless to make the argument I have just made to a crowd upon the street corner, but it ought not to be useless here. I assert without the slightest fear of being found to be a false prophet that if you pass this sort of joint resolution, the building that will take place in this town during the rest of this war will be Government building, and we will have to take the money out of the taxes of the people to build the houses, because no man in his senses will build once you assert the right of Congress to come in and fix the rent and the terms of the lease, because no man will know whether Congress will fix them on the basis of a reasonable return or not.

Whenever we allow ourselves to go before the world as having torn up all the old anchors and having destroyed the Constitution, as having, simply because we are incensed at the outrages and wrongs of some individual men, been willing to batter down the bulwarks of liberty which were painfully erected by the hands of the fathers which have been baptized with the blood and tears of thousands and which we have hoped and prayed may endure forever—whenever we go before the world with that sort of doctrine, money will go into hiding, and no man will invest it. But if you pass a law here that you have a right to pass, even though you may too much limit the profits according to the opinion of some gentlemen who may be interested, nevertheless you have recognized the rights of property and the security of property.

These things are not so bad as they are pictured. We read a few articles in the paper and we get one or two letters, and we grow excited.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just let me finish this sentence.

Now, where is the exodus of clerks from Washington? Where are these people who can not get homes? They are coming, coming, coming—as my friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggests—a hundred thousand strong. They are getting off the trains with their grips. If the recruits for the Army were coming as rapidly as the recruits for the departments there would not be any necessity for the new draft, for they would volunteer faster than we could build ships to take them over. It is utter nonsense to stand here and say that the Federal Government is to be paralyzed by these rent raisers. My friends ought not to make that argument, because it is not a sound argument. It is not an argument based on facts. Moreover, I venture the assertion that there are many thousands of landlords in this city who have not raised their rents a penny, and do not intend to.

I talked to a landlord who has a very fine apartment building not far from where my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] lives, or where he recently lived. He said to me that he had not raised his rents a penny; but he declared: "I have found that a considerable number of my tenants have sublet their premises at an advance of two and three and four hundred per cent. Some of them have gone out of the town to reside, and they are living off the profit; but," he said, "that will all terminate on the 1st day of October. I am writing in every new lease I make a clause that there shall be no subletting, and I am doing it for the first time in my life, because of the abuse of these subtenants."

I have no doubt that if the leading landlords of this city were called into a room by a committee of the Senate, or by a commission appointed by the President of the United States, and it were put up to them as a patriotic duty to keep their rents where they were a year ago, with perhaps a slight advance to make up for the additional cost of maintenance and keeping up property, the principal landlords of this city would sign an agreement of that kind to-morrow. The people of the country have shown that disposition most magnificently. The coal men of the United States got together and agreed on the price of coal. Somebody said it was too high and kicked it all over, and we have been producing less coal every day since they kicked it over, and we are paying substantially the prices now that were agreed upon then. There are ways to handle these matters without losing our heads over them.

I go back to what I said a while ago. I put it upon the conscience of Senators. We passed a law the other day—nearly everybody voted for it—that if any man spoke disrespectfully of the Constitution of the United States he could be sent to the penitentiary; and in this body, by solemn resolution, we propose to disregard its most sacred precepts. If we do that in this body, if we disregard the Constitution here, if we undertake to set ourselves up as above the Constitution, higher than the great fundamental law adopted by the people, if we run counter to these principles, which the writers of the Federalist said were a part of the social compact and could never be set aside, because they existed before constitutions were written and would exist when constitutions were dead and forgotten—if we do that here, what will you expect from the Industrial Worker of the World, steeped in ignorance and whisky? If we disregard the Constitution, what do you expect him to do? If we disregard the rights of property, what do you expect of the fellow who is urged to drive a steel wedge into the end of a log to destroy a saw that is to cut it into timber? If we here in this Chamber set the example of a disregard of law and of Constitution, what can you expect from the base-born, the base-raised, the low of intellects, the ignorant, who follow on and on where shrewd criminals lead?

I know, as I stand and make these remarks, that somebody is likely to say that I am in favor of profiteers in Washington. I wish that every man in Washington who has played the hog could have his name printed where all men could read it for all time. I wish he could be branded as a man who speculated upon his country's necessities, who took advantage of the war in order that he might coin money out of the war. I should like to put his picture in contrast with that of the boy going over the trench and giving his life while this fellow grabs dollars from somebody at home. I hold such a man in a contempt that is inexpressible; but I hold this old Constitution in a respect that is unutterable, because it is the palladium of our rights, because when it is destroyed the night of anarchy will have settled upon this earth and civilization will have been lost within its shadows.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of edification to the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, and especially to his constantly repeated inquiry: "What are we to expect of the I. W. W.'s if we try to curb them?" My answer will be in asking another question: "What are we to expect from the I. W. W.'s if we do not expect to curb them?" And as a mere commentary upon the two questions I would suggest that the ordinary I. W. W. had better thank God that he is not shot; and I can not see why anybody should be tender about his so-called rights. I do not see that he has any. I never did conceive that either a murderer or a horse thief had any rights after you had convicted him of murder or of horse theft. These people have got to be convicted before they are punished.

I did not rise for that purpose, however, Mr. President, I rose for another purpose.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; of course.

Mr. REED. Did the Senator think I was talking about the I. W. W.'s and defending them? I was talking about a rent bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, but the Senator went on to say: "We are going to do this; we are going to violate the Constitution; we are going back upon the original federalistic principles that existed before the Constitution was adopted—the eternal principles, and so on; now, what will the I. W. W.'s do?

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator's logic now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My answer is that the I. W. W.'s would do just as much if we did not pass the legislation as they will if we do, and that they would do a good deal more.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit a report from the Finance Committee favorable to the passage of the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, and I submit a report (No. 428) thereon. I request the publication of the report and of the appendix accompanying it, which consists of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Finance Committee that considered the two House bills of which Senate bill 4482 is a consolidation. I also ask that there be published the usual number of the hearings of the subcommittee, whatever it is, that is printed for the use of the Senate.

I ask that the report of the committee be published, and that the bill go to the calendar, and that a sufficient number of copies of the hearings before the subcommittee be published for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that the hearings before the subcommittee were to be printed as a part of the committee report. Am I correct? There is no necessity of having a further number printed, is there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I do not know. How many copies of the report will be published under the usual order? I only want printed enough copies of the hearings for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. There will be about 200.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, well, that is sufficient. Then I withdraw the request for a special publication of the hearings before the subcommittee, and just ask that the usual number of copies of the report, which contains the hearings, may be published.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be printed, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

RENTAL OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I move to strike out the amendment adopted just a moment ago on the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and to insert in its place the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], on page 2, line 2, after the word "landlord," where the words "or bona fide purchaser" were inserted, on page 2, line 4, after the word "Government," it is proposed to insert:

Or where the property has been disposed of to a bona fide purchaser for his own occupancy.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this is substantially the same amendment, but it permits property to be sold to a person other than a Government employee. It might be that an individual owning property in the District of Columbia would find it necessary to sell his property to protect some interest, or perhaps in a case where a mortgage was being called, and he could not find a purchaser who was a Government employee, but he could find one who was not. It seems to me it would be very unfair if he was prevented from selling it and giving possession to a man who was not a Government employee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not think there is any special objection to that amendment, except that it enlarges the cases of possible hardship. I ask that the amendment be again reported, so that I may be sure of the wording of it. I think it is all right, and I am perfectly willing to have the amendment accepted.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am perfectly willing that the amendment shall be adopted. I ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Calder	Hollis	Saulsbury	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Sheppard	Thompson
Curtis	McCumber	Sherman	Tillman
Dillingham	New	Simmons	Trammell
France	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Underwood
Gallinger	Page	Smoot
Gronna	Pomerene	Sutherland
Henderson	Reed	Swanson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Twenty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KING, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina answered to their names when called.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. GERRY, Mr. BORAH, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. NELSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GUION] on very important business, which necessarily called him away.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent on account of illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is no quorum present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 7, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 6, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of the ages, Infinite Spirit, whose brooding love is over all, in us all, through us all; unheralded, yet pronounced; unseen, yet known; unheard, yet felt; the inspiration of all that is purest, noblest, best in man. It binds us together into families, where all the sweetest and purest affections have their sway; unites men into nations; makes patriots, statesmen, and loyal citizens; builds churches the centers from which radiate charity, philanthropy, schools, and colleges; makes the whole world akin; promises the final brotherhood of all peoples; and now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love, the crown of all humanity.

No one is so accursed by fate,
No one so utterly desolate,
But some heart, though unknown,
Responds unto his own.
Responds, as if with unseen wings,
An angel touched its quivering strings;
And whispers, in its song,
"Where hast thou stayed so long!"

Hasten the day when love shall have its sway; wars cease; hate, revenge, jealousies, and unholy strife give way to its warm and penetrating rays; through Him who revealeth its power in an heroic sacrifice for all mankind. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 4, 1918, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a speech made in my district, at Jacksontown, Mo., on Liberty Loan Day by Hon. XENOPHON P. WILFLEY, who since that time has been appointed by the governor of Missouri to the United States Senate. At that time it was not known by him or anyone else that three days later he would be appointed to the Senate, but this address did him great credit as a private citizen, and equally so now as a United States Senator.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a speech made by Senator WILFLEY, of Missouri. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I will inquire of the gentleman from Missouri whether Mr. WILFLEY has yet taken the oath of office as Senator?

Mr. RUSSELL. He has not taken the oath as yet, but he is expected to take it to-day. He is expected to be here at 1 o'clock.

Mr. DYER. I have no objection to the insertion of the speech, and I would be glad to see it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a speech delivered by our distinguished colleague, Dr. FESS, at Hartford, Conn., on Sunday, March 17, 1918, on the subject of the war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FOOD PRODUCTION.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture, I report herewith the war-emergency appropriation bill (H. R. 11945, H. Rept. No. 535), making appropriations to carry on the work required by the food-production act for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves all points of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. GARNER. I renew the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 29, 1918:

H. R. 10613. An act to provide for the collection and disposal of garbage and miscellaneous refuse of the District of Columbia.

PENSIONS.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration at this time the bill H. R. 9959, increasing rates of pensions of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill H. R. 9959, a pension bill. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have the bill reported first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the rate of pension of any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged therefrom, and who is now in receipt of a pension or shall hereafter be granted a pension under the provisions of any general law, or is now pensioned under a special act of Congress, and who is entitled to a pension less than $25 per month, shall be $25 per month.

In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served one year, the rate of pension shall be $26 per month; one and one-half years, $28 per month; two years, $30 per month; two and one-half years, $31 per month; three years or over, $32.50 per month.

In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $27 per month; six months, $29 per month; one year, $31 per month; one and one-half years, $35 per month; two years or over, $39 per month.

SEC. 3. That no pensioner shall be entitled to receive any benefits under the provisions of this act for any period during which he shall be an inmate of any State or national soldiers' home; and the provisions of this act shall not apply to any pensioner whose net annual income from all sources, including his pension, is $1,000 or more.

SEC. 4. That the increased rates of pension provided by this act shall commence from the date of the approval of said act, or, in case of original pensions hereafter allowed, from the date of commencement of such pensions as provided by existing laws.

SEC. 5. That no attorney shall be recognized and no attorney fees shall be paid for the presentation or prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is this bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is not on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I object.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GILLETT. Although it would not be in order to-day, yet to-morrow, it being a privileged bill, if the Speaker should recognize the gentleman from Ohio he could bring it up by motion, could he not?

The SPEAKER. Yes. There are several ways to bring it up.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, this being also suspension day, if the gentleman from Ohio should move to suspend the rules and pass the bill and two-thirds should vote for it it would pass, would it not?

The SPEAKER. It would, undoubtedly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is the motion to take it up as a privileged matter now in order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is unanimous-consent day.

Mr. LANGLEY. But it is a privileged bill?

The SPEAKER. That does not prevent it being considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. LANGLEY. I know; but unanimous consent has been objected to, and my inquiry is whether or not the gentleman from Ohio could not make the motion to take it up now.

The SPEAKER. It has already been objected to.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GILLETT. If it should be brought up by unanimous consent, it would not be subject to amendment, but if it was brought up to-morrow in the regular order, it would be subject to amendment, would it not?

The SPEAKER. If it is brought up by unanimous consent it is subject to amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. If it is brought up by motion to-morrow, it would be subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes, it would; and it would if unanimous consent were given to consider it now.

Mr. GILLETT. But if brought up under suspension of the rules it would not?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he will not ask for unanimous consent to consider this bill to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. And if unanimous consent is given, why the bill could be speedily disposed of.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois I am instructed by the committee of which I am chairman to ask unanimous consent for this bill. I shall have to consult with the committee. As far as I am individually concerned, I would be willing to make that motion. This bill has been on the calendar since the 27th of February, over two months, and in the meantime 6,250 have died. I am anxious to get this bill up for consideration at the earliest possible moment.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Ohio should move now to suspend the rules and two-thirds should vote to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it would pass the House, would it not?

The SPEAKER. If it got two-thirds, it would.

Mr. GARNER. Why will not the gentleman move to suspend the rules?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will move to suspend the rules and pass this bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. If the House should follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas and pass the bill under suspension of the rules, there would not be any opportunity to amend the bill, would there?

The SPEAKER. The Chair just stated that. The matter voted on when a motion is made to suspend the rules is what is read from the Clerk's desk, and you could not amend it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I hope under those circumstances——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from Ohio to suspend the rules and pass this bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he will yield to me for a question?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. Regular order is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] moves to suspend the rules and pass this bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] demands a second.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Would it be in order now to ask unanimous consent to have an hour's debate on a side, on account of the importance of this bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have a right to ask the question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts agree that the second be considered as ordered?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has 20 minutes and the gentleman on the other side——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] demanded a second?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman from Ohio asked unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Now, was that done?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts agreed to it.

Mr. RUSSELL. But the whole House has a say about it.

Mr. LANGLEY. There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. There is no question as to what the House thinks about. The gentleman from Massachusetts agreed that a second be considered as ordered, and the gentleman from Ohio has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts 20 minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the control of that time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], the ranking minority member on the committee.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUCKER. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. I desire to know if after the 40 minutes' time has been consumed there will be any opportunity to discuss this bill?

The SPEAKER. There will not, unless the House gives unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy very much time on this bill. This bill has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and this is a unanimous report of that committee. The whole question of pensions has been thoroughly discussed for about half a century. Latterly, since the act known as the Sherwood dollar-a-day pension bill was enacted, on the 11th day of May, 1912, the question of system and the basic construction of pensions has been thoroughly settled. This bill disturbs no existing order. It places pensions upon the basis which was adopted on the 11th of May, 1912. The Grand Army of the Republic, which represents about 45 per cent of all of the surviving soldiers of this war, at an encampment which met at Boston last year appointed a legislative committee to have charge of all pension legislation demanded by the Grand Army of the Republic. I was not present at that encampment, but the soldiers of that encampment made me a member of that legislative committee. The legislative committee met in the city of Washington recently before this bill was prepared, and I met with that committee, and this bill was prepared in harmony with recommendations of that committee. This bill carries at present, according to the best estimates—or will carry, if enacted into law by the 1st of July, 1918—just about $21,000,000. Now, there are so many Members who have asked for time on this question, and it is so well understood, that I will not occupy any more of the time of the House.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this bill now before the House meets with the approval of the Grand Army of the Republic?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Well, I have had about 800 letters on the bill, and I have received resolutions adopted by the Grand Army of the Republic in favor of the bill from Ohio to Oregon. Two of these were from the largest Grand Army posts in Ohio—one the Forsyth, of Toledo, and the other an indorsing letter from McKinley Post, of Canton. Here is the resolution that was adopted unanimously after full debate by the Forsyth Post, of Toledo, Ohio. And I want to say further, that I never sent a letter to a soldier, and no propaganda has been carried on in favor of this bill. Whatever has been done has been voluntary. Let me read the resolution of Forsyth Post, Grand Army of the Republic. It is as follows:

TOLEDO, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

HON. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A copy of your recent pension bill was presented to the post at our stated meeting on February 19, 1918, by Comrade Willard Van Wormer, and by verbal resolution the post heartily indorsed its provisions and trust that it may receive the support that it merits and become a law. Thanking you for your past and continued efforts in behalf of the old soldier of 1861 to 1865.

I was instructed by the post to convey to you the above information.

Yours, in F., C., and L.,

J. W. BROWNSBERGER,
Adjutant of Forsyth Post, No. 15,
Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio.

Mr. DYER. Do I understand the legislative committee which represents the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic approves of the bill? That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It is my understanding that a majority of the committee approves it.

Mr. DYER. The commander in chief also?

Mr. SHERWOOD. The chairman of the committee, Mr. Washington Gardner, said we ought to put in a resolution asking for $40,000,000 as a sort of something to aim at, and I agreed to it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to a question?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, whoever of these soldiers has $1,000 a year income does not get the advantage of the provisions of this bill?

Mr. SHERWOOD. No, sir; he does not.

Mr. CANNON. Then, as I understand, all the 19,000 people who are in the soldiers' homes are excluded?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Twenty-three thousand.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe there are that many. There are 19,000, I think, of the Union soldiers in them.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It is 23,000, according to the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. Well, whether it is 19,000 or 23,000, they do not get the advantage of this bill while they are in the soldiers' homes?

Mr. SHERWOOD. No, sir; they do not; and I will tell you the reason why. This is an emergency measure. They are all drawing liberal pensions now. Formerly, when a similar bill passed, it cost the Government $240 a year for every soldier in the soldiers' homes, and now it costs $400, and if you include these soldiers you will give the inmates of the soldiers' homes $400 more in pensions and support than those outside.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a single remark in his time? I am going to vote for this bill under suspension of the rules. It is better than no bill a good deal, but I think it does an injustice to the men who are receiving $1,000 income and to the men in the soldiers' homes, and I think the bill ought to be amended. That is all I want to say. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if it would be in order to ask unanimous consent to double the time on each side?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say that this is an important matter, and many of us want to talk on it. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the time may be extended so that each side will have 40 minutes of debate.

Mr. SHERWOOD. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 20 minutes a side, so that instead of having 20 minutes on a side each side will have 40 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RUCKER. Will it be in order to move——

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the length of time for this debate being doubled, on the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND. Now, I think I had three minutes, granted to me by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], and I would like to ask him if he would make it six minutes now?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there are a half dozen men in this House that would say that this measure meets with their approval, and it seems strange to me that the House finds itself in a position where it can not have the opportunity of amending the bill it is now considering so as to meet the approval of the House. Most of you gentlemen have slobbered over the old soldier in your districts at home; have told him how anxious you were to vote for a dollar-a-day pension. Why, indeed, some six years ago I was running for Congress against a Member who sat on that side of the House, and he rose at a soldiers' reunion and said, "Let me read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. When I was in Congress, not long ago, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that I rose in my seat and the Speaker said, 'For what purpose does the gentleman rise?' and I said, 'I rise to amend the appropriation bill by adding on a dollar a day for the old soldiers.' And," he said, "Gentlemen, what do you think JOE CANNON said to me—your Representative. Why, JOE CANNON said, 'You are out of order,' and I had to sit down."

You do not have to be out of order if you gentlemen are sincere on that side of the House about getting the proper kind of a pension bill reported here. The able gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] last Saturday during the discussion we had on pension matters pointed out clearly and unmistakably how this bill could be considered. We adjourned at 4 o'clock last Saturday afternoon, when it would have been clearly in order for the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee to have obtained recognition for the purpose of moving consideration of this bill as privileged. The gentleman from Connecticut put it squarely up to that side of the House then and you adjourned. And I want to say to you that the fact that you are bringing it up this morning on suspension day shows you are not in sympathy with giving the soldier that to which he is entitled. I do not think the Speaker would deny the right of bringing this bill up here as a privileged matter. It has as high privilege as any bill has before this House to-day, and, under the rules of the House, if the chairman of this committee should on any other day except when higher privileged matters are being considered rise and ask that the bill be considered it could be considered, and then you gentlemen would have the opportunity of offering an amendment to give the dollar a day that you have been promising the old soldier all the time. I am looking into the faces of men on this side of the Chamber who have bills introduced for "dollar-a-day" pensions, and yet you sit still and permit this kind of an affair to be pulled off and bring this bill up under the suspension of the rules and run it over us fellows and make us swallow whole a bill that does not answer the requirements of a pension bill at this time. Of course I will vote for it, for it is all you are going to give us and it provides for an increase, which will help some.

Now, gentlemen, what does this bill contain? It provides for a $25 minimum, the same amount the widows are getting to-day. It provides for a 30 per cent increase, a mere bagatelle, where a man is old and is totally incapable of performing manual labor. It also provides for no increase for a soldier with an income of $1,000 including his pension, and if he is in a soldiers' home he can not get the increase.

As I remember, the chairman of the committee stated that the legislative committee of the Grand Army of the Republic was in favor of this bill. I have in my possession, and I will insert in the RECORD here, if you ask it, letters from the National Grand Army of the Republic officers, which will show that they positively oppose this bill and are for the provisions which are contained in my separate report, which is a copy of the Smoot bill in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. BLAND. The amendment I proposed to offer to the bill includes the provision of the Smoot bill, which provides for a $30 minimum and a $40 maximum, graduated between these amounts in accordance with age and service, and not affecting pensions of soldiers who get more than $40 per month. That is the kind of bill you would get if you permitted that amendment, and that is why you are bringing this bill up under suspension of the rules. That shows the insincerity of that side of the House on the pension question. Some of you are gritting your teeth about it, and some Members of this House on your side do not like the way this bill has come up. Some of you are in favor of giving the soldier more money than the bill provides for. You ought to have the nerve to get up in your places and say so.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman give me some resolution passed by some Grand Army post against the bill?

Mr. BLAND. I will give you plenty of letters in favor of the Smoot bill and my proposed bill, and I will give you strong letters against this bill, which I think you admit yourself is not satisfactory.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Can the gentleman give me any resolution passed by any Grand Army post against this bill? That is the question. Has the gentleman any such resolution?

Mr. BLAND. I have such resolutions in favor of the other bill—the Smoot bill. I have a communication from the National Commander of the Grand Army saying that they are for the Smoot bill, and that is what this House would have passed if the gallant chairman of the committee had been granted permission to call this bill up as privileged when he asked for that privilege.

Mr. SHERWOOD. He is not a member of the legislative committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill, as I indicated when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] was kind enough to yield to me to ask him a question. I believe that a bill of this kind ought to have been considered in the House with opportunity for amendment. If so, I believe it would have been amended in at least two particulars. I believe the $1,000 proposition would have been cut out, and I believe that the men in the soldiers' homes—19,000 or 23,000 of them, as the case may be—would be entitled to the benefits of the bill.

The men in the Army that preserved the Union received all the way from $13 to $15 a month. The men—privates—in the present great world's contest receive $30 a month, and one-half, or $15 more, for the dependent wife and from $5 to $8 more to the children. In addition to that, they get insurance at the rate of $8 per thousand. Now, then, I am glad of it. We all voted for it. But let us recollect one thing, that there are less than, say, 300,000 men now surviving of that Grand Army of 2,200,000 men that saved this Union. It was their force. They are now in their old age. We are spending money by the many billions. Dying, as they are, by multiplied thousands, it seems to me that it is good politics for all the people, Democrats and Republicans, men in the Army and in the Navy in this great war, from the sentimental standpoint as well as the just standpoint, that these people should not be cut out of this pension bill, and it ought to be amended. That is all I want to say. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield back any time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by my colleague from Ohio in charge of the time to yield time on this side. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in accord with the sentiments expressed by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who has just taken his seat. He presents humane reasons, just reasons, for increasing the pension of the soldiers.

I can not agree with the views expressed by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND]. Indeed, I think the gentleman has betrayed his ignorance—and I do not use the word offensively—his want of knowledge, of pension legislation. The gentleman stands here in the presence of a distinguished and gallant old Federal soldier, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as true a friend as those composing the Grand Army ever had [applause], and challenges the good faith of that gentleman because he asks for the passage of this bill under suspension of the rules. He alleges insincerity on the part of Members on this side of the House.

Does the gentleman recall that the Sulloway bill, which provided the highest rates of pension that any bill ever had provided up to that time, was passed in this body by Democratic votes, was sent to a Republican Senate, and there met its death in the arms of its supposed friends—the Senate, with a big Republican majority? Why did not the Senate pass the Sulloway bill? Let the gentleman from Indiana answer. Then following the defeat of the Sulloway bill by a Republican Senate does not the gentleman recall the fact that soon after Democrats came into power in the House this old chieftain, who gallantly and bravely followed the flag for four years, Gen. SHERWOOD, brought in the Sherwood pension bill, under which to-day millions of homes are made happy, because that Democratic pension bill—the Sherwood bill—provides the highest rates of pension ever paid to soldiers in America? Again, does not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] know that the Sulloway bill was passed in the House on a motion, made by a Republican, to suspend rules, just as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] is seeking to do now?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes. But make your question short. I have not the time nor inclination to submit to cross-examination.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman made a statement which I think it is incumbent upon me to qualify. It is true that that bill—the Sulloway bill—went to the Senate, but it is also true that it was objected to by Democratic Members of the Senate.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman's party was in power in the Senate and had the votes to pass the bill regardless of Democratic opposition if it had so desired. Let me say in regard to the widows of old soldiers, the mothers of the boys who are to-day fighting on the firing line in France, that they were taken care of not by Republican action, but by Democratic action, and it remained for my Democratic friend from Ohio, Mr. ASHBROOK, to bring in the best, because the most liberal, bill ever passed granting pensions to widows.

Mr. BLAND. Who does the gentleman think should be entitled to the most credit for the last widows' increase?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think the amendment the gentleman refers to should have passed in the form it did. It is discriminatory and unfair, as most all things are which are done by Republicans. Nobody should get credit for it. Everybody responsible for it should be blamed. If it had included other meritorious classes of widows I would gladly give it my approval. Let us get rid of this rubbish.

The gentleman from Indiana ought to revise his knowledge of pension legislation before he assaults on the floor of this House one of the best friends the soldier ever had, Mr. SHERWOOD, or the Democratic Party, which has done more for the veterans of our wars than the Republican Party ever did. But I am not advocating the passage of this bill under suspension of rules. The bill ought to be amended, and as it can not be amended under this motion to suspend the rules I am going to vote against it. If the pending motion is voted down, the bill can again be called up, as it is privileged, and then we will have opportunity to at least consider amendments. Unlike my friend from Indiana, I am not seeking votes. I am seeking only to discharge my duty as I see it. I will not vote for the motion to pass, under suspension, this bill in its present form, and I will tell you why. No one will seriously question my fidelity to the soldier, his widow or dependents. I do not object to increasing the pensions of soldiers where an increase is justified or merited, but I do object to passing this measure without the privilege of offering amendments, because there are some things in the bill that are radically wrong. [Applause.]

When I tell you the provisions I object to my Republican friends probably will not applaud, because I think the gentleman who applauded never applauds anything which is really right. [Laughter.] I object to the pending bill for this reason: Under it and as it is written about $1,000,000 will be taken in the form of taxation from the people of the United States, in addition to all the great burdens that have already been placed upon them, and will be sent to foreign lands to pay increase of pensions to men who have not gazed on the Stars and Stripes, many of them, in 25 years—probably not in 50 years.

Not only that, but some five or six hundred men living in Germany and Austria-Hungary, where our boys are to-day being slain on the battle line, will draw increased pensions if this bill passes. Those who prefer to live in a country which has insulted the dignity of our flag, murdered our citizens, destroyed our commerce, and challenged the sovereignty of this great Republic would be beneficiaries under this act. I, for one, speaking for myself alone, will never vote to tax an American citizen to pay more money into the coffers of people who have turned their backs upon America and who prefer to live in Germany or Austria-Hungary. I will not vote for this bill for these reasons, and I give notice now that when the general pension appropriation bill comes before the House I will offer amendments which, if agreed to, will cut every foreigner off our pension rolls. I have stopped voting to tax American citizens to pay pensions to foreigners.

Let me say to my Republican friends, who always profess love for the soldier, when you had opportunity and power to really prove your friendship for the soldier you never brought in such a bill as this. Why, when my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was Speaker of this House—and everybody knows his will was the supreme law, and it, perhaps, ought to have been, because he is the best man among you and knows more than all of you, and I speak with great respect for him—you did not do then what we have done since. It was not until there was a Democrat in the Speaker's chair and a Democratic majority in the House that the initiative was taken, the one long step which brought joy and relief to the soldiers of our land. I repeat, nobody questions my friendship for the soldier. I have done as much work for the worthy old soldiers in my district as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] has done for those in his district. I have visited every home in my entire district where affliction abides, where poverty dwells, where pain is felt. I have gone into the homes of these old soldiers and I have come back to Washington impressed with a sense of my duty, and I have enjoyed the pleasure of casting a little sunshine across the threshold of many a soldier's home, and I am proud to boast of it. But before I vote for this bill I claim the right to amend it, or at least to take the judgment of this House as to whether we shall tax our people to-day, in addition to the many billions we are now putting upon them, to send money into Germany to pay people who are more enamored of German kultur than they are of the glorious liberty guaranteed to all by that flag and the blessing of world democracy for which our boys are at this moment making the supreme sacrifice.

Mr. GALLIVAN, Mr. DYER, and Mr. BLAND rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUCKER. I yield first to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], and then I will yield to the others.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Does the gentleman think any money is going to any pensioner in Germany at this time?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no; its transmission is suspended temporarily, but you enact this bill into law, and as soon as we lick the devil out of the Kaiser American money will go to Germany again, and you know it, and I, for one, am not in favor of its going now or hereafter.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my colleague what his judgment is with reference to sections 3 and 4 of the bill—whether he thinks they are good legislation?

Mr. RUCKER. Section 3 is the one I am talking about.

Mr. DYER. Section 3 is the section which provides that no pensioner shall receive any benefits under this act if his net income from all sources, including his pension, is $1,000 or more per annum.

Mr. RUCKER. I have an amendment which I hoped to offer and put into this bill which provides for a minimum income of $1,200 instead of $1,000, as written in the bill. I think $1,200 is low enough.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman knows he can not amend this bill.

Mr. GALLIVAN. You can by unanimous consent.

Mr. RUCKER. But the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] knows we can not get unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. Is the gentleman going to vote not to give the old soldiers in his district whom he has visited the benefit of this increase simply because he can not get what he wants?

Mr. RUCKER. No; the gentleman knows that is not my attitude.

Mr. BLAND. That will be the result, will it not?

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman knows that I will exercise my right as a Member of the House to introduce a bill and have it referred to the committee of which this gallant old warrier [Gen. SHERWOOD] is chairman, and that committee will report it out if found to be meritorious. I will introduce bills for every meritorious soldier or widow in my district, and that committee will report those bills to the House and they will pass. I will take care of the old soldiers in my district.

Mr. BLAND. Then the gentleman relies upon special bills to take care of those in his district?

Mr. RUCKER. I want to take care of every one who needs taking care of, because that is right; but it seems the gentleman wants to take care of those who vote, because he may need votes. I do not care a fig whether they vote or not. I am for all soldiers and widows who need help, whether they vote or do not vote.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am sure the gentleman does not want to leave the impression that this bill carries any new legislation that would provide for the payment of pensions to those who are citizens of a country which is now at enmity with us.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not want to create the impression that the pending bill carries any new law in that respect, but I do want to leave the impression that it increases the rates of pension allowed to them under existing law. Is there any question about that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It increases the rate of pension which they are drawing under present law.

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; it proposes to increase the pensions which foreigners are drawing under present law, and that is what I am opposed to. I am opposed to increasing the pensions of foreigners one penny. If I had my way about it I would never again take one single dollar out of the Federal Treasury to pay pension to any man who has established his home in a foreign land. [Applause.] Gentlemen can make what they please out of that. Our people who continue to rally around the flag have to pay the taxes, and those who have lost their love for this country, its sublime privileges, its matchless blessings, and its glory, should learn to depend upon the bounty of that Government they find most congenial to them.

If this bill was being considered under the ordinary rules of the House, I would offer the following as a substitute for section 3:

SEC. 3. That no pensioner shall be paid the increase of pension herein authorized for any period during which he shall be an inmate of a State or National home for soldiers, nor shall the provisions of this act apply to any pensioner whose net annual income, including the pension he now receives, is $1,200 or more, nor to any pensioner not engaged in the service of the United States who has for five consecutive years last past resided beyond the limits of the United States and its possessions.

Mr. REED rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. RUCKER. I had yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman's time is rather limited, so I will give way in favor of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED. What percentage of our pension money goes to nonresidents of the United States?

Mr. RUCKER. Roughly speaking I would say about $1,000,000 out of about $140,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. At the conclusion of the discussion on this bill I want to ask if under the rules of the House it would be proper to move to recommit with instructions to amend?

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is a very peculiar one. There are half a dozen motions which do not apply to it, and the motion to recommit is one of them.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of the debate I be allowed to make a motion to strike out section 3.

The SPEAKER. Of course, by unanimous consent anything can be done.

Mr. MAPES. I submit that request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that he be permitted at the end of the discussion to make a motion to strike out section 3. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the proper time I may make a motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object, Mr. Speaker, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. Debate has not yet expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Ohio control the time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent to ask two questions of somebody who knows something about the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to propound two questions to somebody who knows something about the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this is a committee bill, and it has been reported unanimously from the committee, except that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] presents minority views. The bill does not represent the wishes of some members of the committee. It was passed by a majority vote of the committee and has been reported here now, and the only question is whether we are going to do anything for the relief of the old soldiers by way of increasing pensions on account of the greatly increased cost of living. That is what this bill is for. To-day we are either going to pass this bill or nothing will pass the House.

Of course the bill must go to the Senate. After the Senate has acted on it it will undoubtedly go to a conference committee, and the bill that finally becomes a law, if any, will be the bill reported from the conference committee. I am myself opposed to section 3, putting a limitation on the increase going to those who have an income of a thousand dollars and those who may have been compelled to seek refuge in a soldiers' home. I would like to see those two provisions eliminated from the bill before it becomes a law.

I am also in favor of the dollar-a-day pension for every old soldier who served his term of enlistment and received an honorable discharge. I think the minimum ought to be $30, and when the bill comes back from the Senate and from the conference committee I hope that the minimum will be placed at $30 and that section 3 will be eliminated from the bill. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, of course, as this bill now comes up under motion to suspend the rules, it is impossible to have any amendments considered at this time. I am therefore decidedly in favor of passing the bill now, as it is, and leave the question of amendment to the Senate. If it were in order I would offer or support an amendment to make the minimum pension $30 per month and to strike out the provision denying the increase to those who may happen to have an income of $1,000 and to those who may be any part of the time in a soldiers' home, and this for the reason that such provision would require proof to be made in every case, and thus cause delay and hardship to every old soldier who would be entitled to the increase. In my opinion the extra work entailed on the Pension Bureau and the extra cost would far exceed the amount saved to the Government by reason of those provisions. Even a more serious objection is the delay that would be caused in adjudicating the many cases that would be presented to the bureau. Most of the old soldiers need this increase, and need it now. The law should operate immediately and automatically, without the necessity of making any new proofs, so that the increase granted would be received in the lifetime of the beneficiaries. Under this bill as it is presented here thousands otherwise entitled will have passed away before the new proofs required could be completed and their claims passed upon by the pension officials. So I hope that when the bill comes back from the Senate it will not contain the provisions to which most of us are opposed. What relief we give to the old heroes of the Civil War should be given now, with no strings attached. In these days of stress and trial it is fitting that we should deal justly and generously with the still surviving soldiers of a former generation, who gave or offered all they had for their and our country. We are now engaged in another great war, the greatest and most fearful of all time. As we deal with the country's defenders of the past, so may the young heroes of to-day know that they will ever be held in grateful remembrance by a free and liberty-loving people, who will back them, if need be, with the last dollar while they are fighting the battles of humanity, and for all time in the future.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that there is any appearance, even, of partisanship in the determination of this question. I think I have the right to say, as the gentleman from Missouri has said, that it is a matter to be regretted that this bill comes before us under such circumstances as prevent its amendment. It could have easily been presented so that it would receive full consideration of the House and give the Members an opportunity to express their real views in regard to the matter. I believe personally that the amounts contained in the bill are too small. I think there are two or three provisions in the bill that are unfair and unjust.

I concur in the criticism of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] on this bill. I think there are other criticisms, but I am certainly so strongly in favor of increase in pensions and so anxious that it shall be brought about as quickly as possible that I can not take the responsibility of voting against the bill. I shall vote for it, regretting the fact that it does not more nearly express the real ideas and views of the membership of this House. I regret that it comes before us under the circumstances that will prevent amendments being offered.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Is it not a fact that your party caucused on this bill?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Does not the gentleman think that that would have something to do in creating the bitterness and feeling along that line?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say that it might. I am not now voicing any reproaches as to anybody regarding anything that has been done. I am expressing my personal regret at the circumstances under which this bill is presented. I can not believe that the gentleman from Ohio would, for the purpose of recrimination, do an unjust act in this body by putting the bill through without an opportunity for amendment. I do not believe it fair or just that the bill should be put through under suspension of the rules so as to prevent amendment and allow an opportunity for the House to express its real sentiments.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the time has been equally divided between the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Kentucky. Let the gentleman from Indiana get his time from one of those gentlemen. I object and will continue to object to any such request.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for these three minutes primarily for the purpose of putting a question to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], in charge of the time on the Democratic side. Would this bill, if enacted into law, result in the payment of increased pensions to any citizen of Bulgaria, Germany, Austria-Hungary, or Turkey?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think without doubt it would increase the pensions of all soldiers alike, but their pensions are held up pending this war. At the conclusion of the war I presume they would be entitled to receive the increase.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But if we do not pass this bill the Union soldiers who are now residents of Ireland or England or France would also have their increases held up?

Mr. COX. Oh, no; they are getting their pensions right along to-day.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But their increases would be held up?

Mr. COX. No.

Mr. ASHBROOK. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Gentlemen can see why I have asked the question. There seems to be a difference of opinion as to what the defeat of the bill would mean.

Mr. COX. Mr. Saltzgaber before the committee said that all foreign soldiers were getting pensions except those living in Germany and Austria.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but this bill provides, in effect, for increases for all of them except those living in enemy countries, and therefore if the bill should be defeated the Union veterans now living in England, France, or Ireland——

Mr. ASHBROOK. Or the United States.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Or the United States, would not receive increased pensions.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Therefore, I am going to vote for the bill, because, in my judgment, any man not now an enemy of the United States or living in an enemy country, who in the awful years of 1861 to 1865 risked his life to help save this Republic is entitled to everything that can possibly be given him, in justice, from the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.] But the gentleman from Missouri, Judge RUCKER, in criticizing the bill, declared that he is not willing to pay pensions to men now living in other countries, men who, as he said, "do not live under that flag." And yet I presume that in the dark days of 1861 to 1865 the gentleman was entirely willing that those soldiers should go out under that flag to protect him and to save from destruction the country of which he is now a citizen. He did not, at that time, say to those brave men, "Before you go forth to fight we want to know whether you are always going to live here, because if you are not always going to live here when we come to pension the saviors of the Nation we will omit you."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, in the years to come I am sure I will look back upon my service in this House and rejoice over the fact that I have never lost an opportunity to favor by speech and vote every measure in the interest of the Union soldiers and the widows of those who have passed away. It has always been a labor of love with me to aid by legislation the brave men who preserved this great Republic, the envy and admiration of all the rest of the world. While our new soldiers are now on the soil of our sister Republic of France, fighting to make the world safe from German military conquest and misrule it is well for us here in Congress to pause long enough to honor and do justice to those in our midst who fought and suffered on the battle fields that the American Union should not perish and that the blessings of liberty, justice, and equality should be handed down to us and our posterity. This is the richest and most prosperous country in all the world; its resources and wealth unequaled. This has been made a reality by the courage, sacrifices, and lives of the Union soldiers led to victory by Grant, Sherman, and Thomas on land and by our naval commanders, Farragut and Porter. This Nation has never paid in full and can not its great debt to those who followed the Stars and Stripes from sixty-one to sixty-five. The bill we are now considering, entitled "Increasing rates of pensions of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War," seeks to do justice, but it does not go far enough, and the rules of this House do not permit an amendment except by unanimous consent, and this has been refused.

Mr. Speaker, when this bill returns from the Senate, in my judgment, it will carry an amendment providing a minimum pension of $30 and a maximum pension of $40, an increase of 50 per cent. Such action on the part of the Senate will place the Members of this House in the attitude of originally opposing these figures, and in the end we will agree to the Senate amendments. Therefore I think it is unfair, under the parliamentary procedure of the House, that we can not do in the beginning that which we will in the end be forced to do, if we have any legislation on the subject, and the credit for a just pension increase will redound to another body of Congress. None of the pensioners under the provisions of this bill are less than 70 years of age, and when we consider the high cost of the necessities of life, the increased rates in this bill, in the judgment of every just, impartial man, are not sufficient. In normal times, prior to the present war, the Grand Army of the Republic favored a minimum pension of $30—$1 a day—and I have no doubt that Members on both sides, in and out of Congress, approved and indorsed that just proposition, and not only favored it but would have so voted had the opportunity presented itself. If it was just and reasonable in times of peace to have a minimum pension of $30, how can we escape an approval of the proposition that in these extraordinary times, when everything entering into the living of an ex-soldier, now beyond the period of earning capacity, is tremendously higher—higher than ever before—the man over 70 years of age should receive an increase and should have more than the minimum pension—$25—now paid to the widow of a soldier.

This may be the last general pension bill the American Congress will pass for the fast-disappearing members of the Grand Army of the Republic, and this should be an additional and convincing reason why the measure should be absolutely just, free from criticism, and a well-deserved tribute to the valor, the courage, the heroic work, and the invaluable services of the brave American soldiers who saved and preserved the Republic and who will remain with us but a very brief time.

Not only should a 50 per cent increase be provided for existing pensions, as advocated by the Ed. Maynard and the McKinley Grand Army of the Republic Posts, of Knoxville, Tenn., and thousands of similar organizations throughout the country, but the objectionable section 3 in the pending bill should be stricken out. I am confident we can rely upon the Senate to perform this meritorious act, even if we are not permitted to do so here under the parliamentary rules governing this body without defeating the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I will say that, while the pending bill does not go far enough in the way of increases, it means legislation for the interest and benefit of the survivors of the Union Army, and with all their other friends I will cheerfully vote for its passage, confident the Senate will return it, and that in the end it will meet the full expectations of the soldiers and their friends in and out of Congress.

The action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in reporting and pressing this bill should be an inspiration to the Committee on Pensions to get busy and redeem the promises made to the soldiers who served in our War with Spain. Justice and fair play demands that they be given their day in court, and the reasonable legislation they have requested at the hands of the American Congress be passed before the final adjournment. [Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take just one minute of the time in my control for the purpose of stating that I am advised by friends on the other side of the House that my answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] as to whether or not the benefits of this bill would apply to soldiers residing in all foreign countries alike had been misunderstood. I thought I made myself clear that this bill does apply to all soldiers alike, and, of course, those who reside in countries at war with this country will not now receive the increase under this bill, but neither do they receive the pensions due them under existing law, but at the conclusion of the war they doubtless will be entitled to the pension due them under existing law and the benefits of this bill, if it becomes a law, as I hope that it will.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then I desire to use one minute more. I want to say that for some time past that I have been giving a good share of my attention to the widows of old soldiers, and have a bill on the calendar to amend the widows' pension law, and hope to secure its passage to-day, but I am just as much in favor of good liberal pensions for the old soldiers as their widows. I am strongly in favor of this bill, because I believe it is the best bill we can hope to pass at this time, but I would vote for larger pensions if I thought it would not endanger the passage of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think the old soldiers do not need any reassurance from me that I am their friend and am in favor of liberal pensions. During my 11 years of service in this House I have availed myself of every opportunity to do all that I could to help cheer and brighten the homes of the old veterans and their dependents. I feel that it is as little as I can do to do all that I can for those who risked their lives to preserve the Union of States. These old veterans were paid a pittance in cheap money for hardships and sufferings the younger generation, I fear, too often fail to appreciate. And now in their last days, when they are dropping off at the rate of more than 3,000 per month, with their energies spent, practically all helpless and dependent, I would feel that I was not a good loyal American citizen should I fail to champion their rights justly due them from this great Government which they preserved. I am in favor of paying the boys who are engaged in the present great struggle for liberty and humanity liberally and to provide every comfort possible as a slight recompense for their sacrifices, but we must not, even during this great emergency, forget the old boys of sixty-one to sixty-five, who are sitting helpless and dependent waiting for the final roll call, which is near at hand for all of them. But, Mr. Speaker, I will not be a party to any camouflage that will likely defeat a pension bill at this session of Congress by voting for a big pension which I know will have little chance to become a law. I have done everything I could as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to hasten this legislation. I believe this is a very good bill, and I am therefore glad to support it. When the bill comes from conference I will cheerfully vote for any bill the conferees agree upon. I am in favor of liberal pensions, but I am for a half loaf rather than no loaf at all.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the charge of lack of fairness against the veteran of this House, the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, should have come from my own State of Indiana, if I understood it right. I believe when my colleague considers the matter, he will change his remarks in that respect and give credit to our colleague, this old veteran——

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I have not the time.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman does not want to be unfair.

Mr. BARNHART. I can not yield with only two minutes.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman does not want to put that statement in the RECORD, does he?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not interrupt the gentleman without his consent.

Mr. BARNHART. The provisions of this bill are a great improvement over the pension law now existing. I understand that it carries an increase of practically 30 per cent in the pension rating. I wish it might be amended in one respect, and that would be by striking out the bar of pensioners with incomes of $1,000 or more. I have never been in favor of penalizing thrift. It has always seemed to me that when you find a man who has so conducted his affairs as to provide a little security for the proverbial rainy day of old age, he ought not to be denied the same reward as his fellow comrade and that the increase in rate should be given only to those who have not been quite so frugal or so careful about the future. I trust this provision of the bill may be amended. The other feature which bars from the provisions of this bill the residents of soldiers' homes appeals to me as fair and right. A man who takes refuge in a soldiers' home, I understand, is given about $400 a year in subsistence by his Government.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It costs the Government that much.

Mr. BARNHART. It costs the Government $400 a year to support him in the soldiers' home. Now, the man who remains at home and supports himself certainly ought to have a higher rate of pension than the one who depends upon the Government for his living. [Applause.] Justice between man and man fixes that clearly as this bill does if I know justice when I see it.

I wish this increase might be larger, but the committee feels that this bill probably takes as much from the Treasury as Congress and the country would approve at this time of so much need for money, and when everybody is being asked to deny themselves by helping their Government to win the war which now besets us.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to register my protest against this seeming effort to play politics against the Democratic Congress, which has given the old veterans and their widows large increases in their pensions. It always seems to me sacreligious to attempt to play politics with religion and unpatriotic to play politics with the interests of the veterans who fought to save our country. The inferential charge here by some of my colleagues from Indiana that the Democratic administration is unfriendly to old soldiers is unwarranted, and I believe that every fair-minded old soldier in our country will so regard it.

Let us give these deserving old veterans all we can possibly afford, but let us do it with patriotic gratitude rather than with political design. Gen. SHERWOOD, who won his way to a generalship from the rank of private, may be depended upon to treat his comrades liberally and fairly, and I believe he is doing it in this bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, it is quite a lot of nerve for the Democrats to claim credit for pension legislation when their action in this matter, as well as in others, is so apparent. There are individual Democrats of this House as good friends of the veterans as are the Republicans, but the Democratic Party has not been, and its record is against the veterans and pensions. I cite facts and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to prove this. The Sherwood bill—the act of May 11, 1912—has been referred to in this debate, and the Democrats claim credit for it in toto. Let us see what are the facts as to this: The answer is that, on the passage of the Sherwood bill in a House in which the Democrats had a majority of 69, only 97 Democrats out of a total membership of 225 voted for the bill, while 130 Republicans voted for it, and of the 93 votes cast against the bill 90 were Democrats. This was in the Sixty-second Congress. The Senate was in control of Republicans. There, on the passage of the bill, 40 Republicans voted for it and only 11 Democrats. All of the votes cast against the bill—16—were cast by Democrats.

On the conference report the vote in the House is equally significant. The conference report was agreed to—yeas 176, nays 57. Of the 176 votes for the report, 99 were Republicans and 77 were Democrats. All but one of the 57 votes against the report were cast by Democrats; the other negative vote was cast by Mr. KENT, an Independent. There was no record vote in the Senate on the conference report. If anybody doubts the accuracy of these figures, let him examine and analyze the votes for himself. They may be found on pages 284, 285, 4015, and 6242 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the second session of the Sixty-second Congress.

The bill was approved by a Republican President—Taft—on May 11, 1912.

Mr. Speaker, upon the single fact that Gen. SHERWOOD, a Democrat, reported the age-service pension act from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, every Republican member of which supported it enthusiastically, rests the entire claim of the Democratic Party to the credit of passing that law. Whereas if it had not been for Republicans, who have always consistently been the real friends of the soldiers, the law would not have been passed. Even with the name of the distinguished Gen. SHERWOOD attached to it, there would have been no hope of its passage without Republican support. As an individual I give Gen. SHERWOOD all due praise, and I commend the Democrats who followed him. But the action of these individual Democrats is an exception that proves the rule. The historical attitude of the Democratic Party as a party has been and is opposed to a liberal pension system, as shown by the votes of a majority of Democrats in Congress whenever the matter has been put to the test. Because certain individual Democrats have voted now and then for more liberal pensions that does not reflect the true position of their party. Certain individual Democrats may justly be proud of their own votes on pension legislation, but they can not point with pride to the record of the Democratic Party as a whole. For that record, covering over 50 years' time, will not sustain their claim. On the contrary, it is not a record of which any Democratic friend of the soldier—even Gen. SHERWOOD himself—can boast or to which he can point with pride.

I am for increasing the pensions of the old soldiers to the extent that not a single one of them or their dependents shall be in want. But I am opposed to section 3, which withholds the benefit of this increase from the veterans who have an income of $1,000 a year or are living in soldiers' homes. This will work a hardship on many, as some of them have wives and other dependents that they are bound to support. The House voted against a similar provision in a pension-increase bill several years ago after due consideration. We want to do the best we can for these old heroes. Politics should not enter into discussion of this bill, and I have regretted to see politics even hinted at by my colleague, Judge RUCKER, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. BARNHART. Both of these gentlemen are friends of the old soldiers. No one doubts that. So are those on the Republican side friends of the veterans. Watch the vote to-day and see where the votes come from that oppose this increase. You will not find a single one on the Republican side, but there will be some on the Democratic side.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that we must consider this bill in the present manner, but every effort has been made not only by the distinguished chairman of this committee, Gen. SHERWOOD, whom every man in this House loves and respects, but every effort was made by gentlemen of the committee on this side—Mr. LANGLEY and Mr. BLAND—to have this matter considered in the House in such a way that amendments might be offered and considered and voted upon, but the Democratic leaders upon the other side did not want this bill considered that way. They are men who generally have always voted against pension legislation of every kind for the old soldiers. They have taken the whip hand and refuse us the permission to do that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to the so-called Sulloway bill of the Sixty-first Congress, which passed the House and failed in the Senate. That bill was an age-and-service bill; it required a minimum service of 90 days and allowed very liberal rates of increase. The bill passed the Republican House without a record vote. It has been contended by Democrats that the Republican Party was responsible for its failure in the Senate. This is untrue, and, in support of what I say, I refer to the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], who is as familiar with the facts as he is with pension legislation, having had long experience in such matters both in the Pension Bureau and in Congress.

Mr. LANGLEY, on May 18, 1914, said:

> The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows repeated efforts of Republican Senators to get the bill considered and passed and that these efforts were blocked by Democratic Senators. I ask you to look at page 2883 of the RECORD of February 18, 1911. Senator Scott, of West Virginia, a Republican, asked unanimous consent to take up the bill, and Senator OVERMAN, a Democrat, from North Carolina, objected. Thereupon Senator Scott moved to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection. There were 49 votes in favor of this motion, and 46 of them were Republicans; there were 35 votes against the motion, and 28 of them were cast by Democrats. The RECORD also shows that the action of the Democratic Senators prevented a final vote on the passage of the bill at that time. Again, on the 4th of March following (see pp. 4320–4321 of the RECORD), the last day of the session and the last chance the bill had to become a law in that Congress, a Republican Senator, Mr. CURTIS, of Kansas, asked unanimous consent to take up the bill, and objection was made by Mr. GORE, a Democrat, from Oklahoma. A Republican Senator then moved to take it up notwithstanding this objection, and the vote on that motion showed practically the same political alignment as it did on the other occasion referred to, on February 18. I wish that every soldier in the country and their relatives and friends knew the exact truth about the entire procedure in connection with that bill.

Mr. Speaker, actions speak louder than words. Belated declarations of latter-day Democrats can not change the record. Our splendid pension system, which has no precedent in the world's history, and no peer in justice and generosity among the nations of the earth, is a distinctively Republican institution.

> Words are but leaves;
> Deeds are fruits.
> Words are easy, like the wind,
> Faithful friends are hard to find.

The Republican Party points to its deeds in behalf of the Nation's defenders and their widows as a guaranty that it still holds to the sentiment which on a great banner met the gaze of the soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy who marched down Pennsylvania Avenue, in this city, May 27, 1865:

> There is one debt this Nation owes which it can never pay; that is the debt it owes to its soldiers and sailors.

[Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. How much have I?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-two minutes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, how many minutes were there to each side.

The SPEAKER. Forty.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have that time, but I am afraid a mistake has been made in the calculation of time. My understanding was that we had 40 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. You did have; the gentleman has more time than he thought.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for the pending bill. However, it is not satisfactory to me in some respects. I regret that no opportunity will be afforded under the rules to offer an amendment to strike out section 3. I regret no opportunity will be afforded to propose an amendment to increase the minimum to $30 a month.

Ever since I have been a Member of this body I have contended that what was going to be done for soldiers of the Civil War, what was going to be given them to lessen their burdens in their declining years, should be accorded without delay, in view of the fact that, very naturally, the mortality rate was increasing each succeeding year. I have believed all the time that proper increases should be provided for by an amendment of the general law rather than to leave it to the uncertainty and delay of providing for manifestly meritorious cases by separate bills introduced for the relief of a single veteran. Even in such cases as these it has been the observation of Members who have enjoyed considerable service that the great majority of those so provided for have lived but a short time to receive the benefits. I have all the time regarded as fallacious and cold-blooded and very unjust that justice to the soldiers of the Civil War in the form of pensions should be deferred for the reason merely that the aggregate of appropriations for all purposes for the particular session of Congress would be too large to permit of it, when a humane consideration would commend granting to these patriots their just meed, though it be required that bonds be issued for that purpose, which would not have been required.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for this bill just as it is, containing the features objectionable to me, because the parliamentary situation will not permit of an amendment, and that there will be no other opportunity afforded during the present session to take up and pass it under a rules situation more favorable than that which now exists. But I shall vote for it in contemplation or expectation that the Smoot bill will be passed in the Senate, and that a conference will result on the two bills whereby the better provisions of each will be adopted with the objectionable features eliminated. I hope this may result in the adoption of the minimum of $30 contained in the Smoot bill and at the same time the preservation of the maximum of $50 contained in the Sherwood bill. I am opposed also to the restriction contained in section 3 of the Sherwood bill denying the benefit of the act to the pensioner whose net annual income is more than $1,000, one of the principal reasons being the incumbrance which would thereby be added to the administration of the law by the investigations to be made of the amount of net incomes of all pensioners covered by the act, with the consequence of great expense and delay in granting the benefits to those found entitled thereto.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment an increase of the rates of pensions of soldiers of the Civil War is very desirable, not only so but highly expedient, and I favor passing the Sherwood bill now. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, there is more demand in my section of the United States for a reasonable increase of pensions to the old soldiers than any other one piece of legislation except actual war legislation. The purchasing power of a dollar has decreased to less than 60 cents on a dollar, and yet we have not increased the pensions of the old soldiers to keep up with that decrease. They are dying at the rate of 33,232 per year, which was the death rate during 1917. If we do not do something for them now we might as well abandon all intention to do anything for them, because they will soon all be gone. Here we have this pension bill in a position to-day so that we can not amend it or properly consider it. Forty minutes to consider a pension bill when there are 62,133 veterans in Pennsylvania demanding consideration of this bill and favorable action thereon.

It is simply a parliamentary outrage that this bill is to be put through to-day under suspension of the rules, which forbids amendment, instead of having it taken up to-morrow under a rule for that purpose, when we could amend it. It ought to be amended to increase it to $30 a month as a minimum rate for every soldier, no matter what his service may have been or the duration of such service, provided he had an honorable discharge.

Let us now briefly review the provisions of this proposed act.

This pension act is designated as H. R. 9959, entitled "A bill increasing the rates of pensions of all sailors and soldiers of the Civil War."

The bill is confined to and deals only with the soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and increases the pensions of these as follows:

Section 1 provides that any person who served in the naval or military service of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged and who is now in receipt of a pension or who shall hereafter be granted a pension, under the provisions of any general or special law, and is entitled to a pension of less than $25, shall hereafter be $25 per month. This provision will, of course, grant the minimum sum of $25 a month to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Civil War who served 90 days.

Paragraph 2 of section 1 provides that in case such person attain the age of 70 years and had served one year his rate shall be $26 per month; for one and one-half years, $28 per month; two years, $30 per month; two and one-half years, $31 per month; three years or over, $32.50 per month. This, of course, pensions all soldiers and sailors who have attained the age of 70 years according to the amounts given.

Paragraph 3 of section 1 provides that all who have attained the age of 75 years and served 90 days shall be pensioned at $27 per month; those who served six months, $29 per month; one year's service, $31 per month; one and one-half years, $35 per month; two years and over, $39 per month. This applies to all the veterans of said war who are over 75 years of age and served as above stated.

Paragraph 4 of section 1 provides that any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty, resulting in his disability, is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid at the rate of $39 per month, without regard to length of service or age.

This is a very important provision and is intended to cover all who served in the Civil War and were honorably discharged, and who from wounds or disease resulting in disability which rendered them unable to perform manual labor shall receive $39 per month regardless of length of service or age. This is a provision intended to take care of the disabled veterans of the Civil War and is in the direction of what is just and fair. The only criticism I have to make of this provision is that it is not sufficient. It ought to, taking into consideration the purchasing power of money, be at least $50 per month. The purchasing ability of the dollar is now reduced to 60 cents, measuring by the necessaries it will buy, hence this pension instead of being $39 per month is, in truth and in fact, only $26 per month, deducting the one-third as the depreciation of the dollar in its purchasing ability. Hence this is not sufficient to support in comfort the veterans who are disabled. This item should be increased to $50 per month in all fairness.

Section 2 of this bill states a mathematical problem as to the method of increasing pensions, and provides that all honorably discharged soldiers of the Army and Navy of the Civil War, and who are now pensioned at the rate of $20 per month, shall receive in lieu thereof a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in multiples of 50 cents nearest approximating 30 per cent additional, and provides that the increase shall not exceed $50 and that no pension heretofore granted shall be reduced. The method of stating this increase is rather obscure. The purpose of this section is to give 30 per cent increase of all pensions over $20 per month nearest the multiple of 50 cents. That is, if the pension is $20 per month, the rate will be $26; if it is $22 per month, it will be instead of $6.60, $6.50, or $28.50 per month; if the pension is $27 per month, instead of the increase being $8.10 it will be $8, or $35 per month.

Section 3 of the bill is a limitation providing that no pensioner shall receive the benefit of this act for any period while he is an inmate of any State or National soldiers' home, and that no pensioner who has a net annual income from all sources of $1,000 per year shall receive the benefit of this act. This section is wrong and should be stricken out entirely.

Section 4 provides that the increase shall begin from the date of the approval of this act, and in cases of original pensions hereafter allowed from the date of commencement of such pensions.

Section 5 provides that no attorney shall be recognized and no attorney fees shall be paid for the presentation or prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act.

This detailed analysis of the bill makes clear its several provisions and purposes.

A brief application of its provisions to the facts will enable those interested to determine whether this is the best possible act that could be devised for the relief of the soldiers and sailors of the Civil War. It is not. It falls far short of meeting the needs of our veterans.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the year ending June 30, 1917, shows that there are now on the pension roll 673,111 pensioners of all classes, and that during the fiscal year 1917 the loss by death amounted to 33,232, or a decrease of 9.2 per cent, and that this rate of losses is slightly less than the annual loss for each fiscal year back as far as 1910, the death rate varying from 33,000 to 36,000 per year in round numbers. Hence the number of pensioners is rapidly decreasing, and with their advancing years their wants are naturally becoming more pressing, and the high cost of living and the depreciation in the purchase power of money has caused their wants to become more acute and the suffering of these old veterans to be keener each year. For them to procure the necessaries of life in many instances is becoming a serious task.

It is very important, therefore, that when we come to the question of legislation for their relief as a class that the relief proposed should be adequate and sufficient.

By the act of October 6, 1917, all soldiers' widows who married prior to June 27, 1905, were granted a pension of $25 per month, which in many instances is more than the soldiers themselves receive. I am not criticizing this; it is right. Congress, however, did not intend to act unfairly with the old sailors and soldiers of the Civil War. It is therefore obligatory now that this apparent inequality be promptly cured by increasing the soldiers' pensions.

The application of this bill to the veterans would be as follows:

Increase to $25 per month (72,619 men)	$6,556,077
Increase on account of age and length of service (223,209 men)	20,159,970
General law and special acts increased 30 per cent (30,519 men)	2,999,520
Total (326,347 men)	29,715,567

By this increase the veterans who would have an income of over $1,000 a year would be stricken from the pension roll, and those who have died since June 3, 1917—probably 25,000—would also reduce the aggregate amount of the pensions, so that if it is a question of what it will cost to put this act in force it would entail an increase in pension appropriations of only about $22,000,000 the first year, which amount would decrease rapidly with each passing year.

This certainly is not very much money to appropriate for the soldiers and sailors of the War of the Rebellion, who preserved this Nation, when we are appropriating billions of dollars at this time, and increasing the pay rolls of Government employees because of the high cost of living. I submit that the pensions of Civil War veterans should be figured on a basis of the minimum of $30 per month, or a dollar a day for each soldier. I shall vote for any amendment that will bring about such increase in this bill; that is, I believe the basis upon which these pensions should be figured because of the high cost of living and the low purchasing power of money at this time.

Our debt to the soldiers of the Civil War can never be repaid, no matter how much we proclaim our gratitude or how much money we give them. The average age of the Civil War veterans is now 73 years.

If Congress intends to help them in their declining years, now is the time. Every dollar in the Treasury of the United States is there because the soldiers of the War of the Rebellion fought and suffered and died to put it there. We have our country because our soldiers made it possible for us to have it. I am going to vote for this bill because it is better than the present law and for the further reason that I believe that the Senate will amend it and in some measure do justice to our heroes of the Civil War. We have been liberal with our soldiers who are now fighting in this righteous war. Now let us be but just, for we can never be too liberal with our honored veterans of the Civil War.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have a rather extensive acquaintance among the members of the Grand Army of the Republic in the United States. I have attended their national conventions a great many years. There have been some criticisms which I feel I am in position to say are unfounded, and one of them is that there is any lack of appreciation of the distinguished services of the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, in the matter of pensions. He is regarded as a tried and true friend of the soldiers and his comrades of the Civil War. There is also a very kind feeling toward the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], the author of the widows' pension bill. Those two measures have been of immense service.

This bill will, even if it is finally agreed to in its present form, be a great improvement on the present law, and it seems to be about the only thing that we are in a position to get at this time. I am greatly in hopes that it will come back from the Senate in such a way that we can get rid of this section 3, which reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That no pensioner shall be entitled to receive any benefits under the provisions of this act for any period during which he shall be an inmate of any State or national soldiers' home; and the provisions of this act shall not apply to any pensioner whose net annual income from all sources, including his pension, is $1,000 or more.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] spoke about the righteousness of cutting out the members of the soldiers' homes. The gentleman should take into account that the members of the soldiers' homes very often have families, their faithful old wives, who are dependent upon them and who live outside.

Old soldiers do not become members of the soldiers' homes except as a matter of extremity. When they do, if they have aged wives living, they are compelled to break up their own homes, and the wives go to some relative or take a little cottage near the soldiers' home of which the husband is a member. The soldier's pension then becomes the reliance for a frugal living for the wife, and it is difficult to conceive a more worthy employment for it.

There are now a few more than 300,000 Civil War pensioners on the rolls, and they are passing away at the average rate of about 100 per day, 3,000 per month, or 36,000 per year. Their average age is above 73 years. These honored men, in their youth the brave defenders of our country, will not long be with us. Let us honor ourselves as we honor them by making the evening of their lives as serene and free from care as it is possible to do with a fairly liberal pension. I would, if it rested with me, make the minimum pension $30 per month, running up to $50, in accordance with length of service and physical disability. I would cut out both the provisions of section 3, which deprive members of soldiers' homes and men with an annual income of $1,000 or more of pension.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this bill to increase the pensions of soldiers. It is certainly no more than justice to do so. We have increased the salaries of the Government officials, all upon the theory that it is impossible for them to live as formerly on account of the increased cost of living. The cost of living has increased within the last few years on an average of 40 per cent, and this pension bill only makes a general increase of 30 per cent.

The old soldiers are now very few indeed. They are all aged and many of them require attention as well as food and nourishment. It is quite impossible for them to maintain themselves in the way we want them upon the old pension basis since the high cost of living has become so great in this country.

These men, who were willing to go to the front and protect the Stars and Stripes, are entitled to every consideration on the part of a great and beneficent Government. We are now engaged in one of the greatest conflicts the world has ever known. We are engaged in this conflict as a mighty Nation, extending from north to south and east to west. Through this great union of all of our people we are able to wage this war as perhaps no other nation as young as ours could have done. It is largely through the efforts of those who fought in the Civil War and thereby maintained the Union that we are able to bring together this great mass of people and enter them into the conflict as a solid and united Nation.

There should be no politics whatever in this controversy. It should be the desire of each and every Member of this House, as I am sure it is the will of the citizens of this great country, that these men be treated absolutely fair and just; that they shall not want for anything in their old age in the way of attention, nor food, or anything that is necessary. I shall, therefore, vote for this bill with a great deal of satisfaction, feeling that we should take care of those who at such a critical time in the history of our Nation helped maintain and preserve it as one great people, able to-day to stand for the freedom of the people and democracy throughout the world. It was through these veterans and those who have gone to their long home that we were maintained a great Nation. Nothing is too good for them, and I am proud that God has so prospered us that we can do them justice.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended one minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended one minute, not to be charged against the time so far granted, so that he can ask him a question. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret that this is the one bill at this session of general interest affecting the interests of so many thousands that has been put in a parliamentary straitjacket, to be run through so that deliberation can not be had on it, and no amendment can be made except by unanimous consent. I desire to amend this bill. I shall present an amendment, and hope that there will be no objection to its consideration; if given consideration, I am confident that it will prevail.

There are many thousand young men who served from 30 to 90 days in the Union Army toward the close of the Civil War. In fact there was an army, coming from every State in the North, whose addition to the Union forces became so impressive to the leaders of the South—Davis, Lee, and Johnston—that they helped to bring the war to an early conclusion. I shall move to amend, giving $25 per month to all who served not less than 30 days nor more than 90 in the Union Army and were honorably discharged.

I am opposed to two features of this bill, but I expect to vote for this bill, as it is the best we can get at this time. I expect further to vote for a better bill after this has passed here, has gone to the Senate, and come back through conference. If we do our duty by the members of the Grand Army now we in effect will say to the boys abroad, "We propose to treat you right; we show you definite evidence of it when we treat generously the members of the Grand Army of the Republic." Twenty years hence Congress will be treating right the members of the supreme Army of the Republic when victory has been achieved and they shall come home. [Applause.]

The Smoot-Bland bill should be considered here and substituted for this one. Every soldier who served 90 days should receive a dollar a day pension. We can stand it; it will not be long. Forty-minute debate on a side. During that time the lives of five Union defenders will have passed away. Five "white robes will have been exchanged for faded coats of blue."

The Smoot-Bland bill provides a graduated scale of from $30 to $40 per month. This would amount to an increase per annum over present law of $40,000,000. We saved that much the other day by our cutting down the wild-cat mineral bill that amount.

There are two highly objectionable features in this bill which if it was being considered in the regular way would be cut out by a majority vote of this House. But, of course, we know that to save these provisions is the reason for this bill coming in an unamendable form. The first of these features is the clause which denies the veteran the benefit of this act while he is an inmate of a State or National soldiers' home. That is another way of branding as charity what should be considered the just and generous recognition for age attained and service rendered. I resent it. What business of ours is it if the State of Nebraska or other State sees fit to provide a comfortable home for its resident Civil War veterans? Moreover, if this increase be given to those who stay part of the time in a soldiers' home it would enable them to take longer furloughs to visit with their friends, and so enjoy more fully their sunset walk of life. Are these State soldiers' homes of such a character that the inmates should under this bill in effect be penalized from $10 to $15 a month for being found in one of them? The reason given seems to be, "For your lack of thrift evidenced by your being sent to a soldiers' home you are penalized."

The second feature which should be taken from this bill is that which denies the soldier its benefits if his net annual income, including his pension, exceeds $1,000. The blind soldier, who has walked in darkness since the close of the war and whose pension is $72 per month, would take nothing under this bill on account of one of its limitations.

Of course I do not believe or charge that this bill was put into this inflexible parliamentary groove to beat the blind, but it could have that effect. We can not remove the limitation. It forcibly illustrates why the bill should have been thrown open to amendment. So would its favoring provisions be denied any soldier who by thrift could accumulate enough money to buy a liberty bond, contribute to the Red Cross, or become subject to the Government income tax.

Contrast for a moment these two features. In each case the Civil War veteran is penalized. In the first, penalized for his lack of thrift; in the second, punished because of his thrift.

It reminds us of the old doctrine:

If you can, you can't;
If you will, you won't;
You'll be damned if you do,
You'll be damned if you don't.

The logic of this bill and these two ill-sorted provisions would start a grin in a Griffin and draw a smile from a satyr. Such logic would overturn the multiplication table, revoke the rule of three, and repudiate Euclid.

Why mar this act intended to be just and generous with these two unjust and ungenerous provisions? They can be considered by the recipients as a "fly in the ointment" and a "hole in the doughnut."

They can work out only as the means of vexatious delays in considering, proving, and determining the case of each beneficiary. As you present this rose of beauty and fragrance to a grateful recipient, why insist upon including this malignant and exotic thorn?

I trust that when this bill returns it will have shed these two malignant features, that the minimum for soldiers of 90 days' service or more shall be $30, with generous maximum, and that those young soldiers who came into service near the close of the war and who heretofore have had no recognition shall be given a pensionable status, because it was not their fault, but to some extent their credit, that the war closed so soon and their terms were so short. If this be all done a generous people will approve and the grateful veterans will rise up and "call you blessed." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I feel like apologizing for taking the time of the House. I will vote for this bill. I have always supported generous pension legislation and expect to continue to do so. It seems to me, however, that modesty would suggest that when such unscarred veterans as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] and myself discuss pension legislation on the floor of this House we should hesitate to question the good faith of men who actually served on the field of battle, as did our distinguished colleague from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD. [Applause.] I have followed the general's lead on pension legislation and many other questions, because I have always felt that he was one Member of this House whose Americanism could not be questioned. [Applause.] I feel that when he comes here and presents a pension bill that vitally affects the men who fought with him on the field of battle we are justified in believing it is the very best legislation that can be obtained under the circumstances. I therefore do not apologize for voting for this measure under suspension of the rules. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for one minute.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I came to this Congress and voted for the Sherwood bill in the Sixty-second Congress. As a small boy I remember many of the men who went to the front during the years of 1861 to 1865. I am probably one of few men here that do. But I know what those men did, and therefore I have been in favor ever since coming here, on every occasion, of doing whatever I can for them.

This bill is better than the law which we now have on the statute books, and I shall vote for it. I had been in hopes that the minimum rate on this bill would have been $30, and if another body shall amend it, it will give me pleasure to sustain the conference committee if they will agree to it.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the motion to suspend the rules and pass this bill, although I think it ought to be amended in two important particulars. It is unfortunate that the parliamentary situation under which the bill is brought before the House is such as to prevent offering amendments. Section 3, which exempts inmates of soldiers' homes and any soldier having an income of $1,000 per year from receiving the benefits of the bill, ought to be stricken out and the minimum amount of pension that any soldier who served in the Civil War shall receive ought to be increased.

There is no doubt in my mind but what a majority of the Members of the House favor a substantial increase in the pensions of the old soldiers, and if given the opportunity they would increase the minimum fixed in the bill and strike out the whole of section 3. It is unfortunate that the bill is presented to the House under such circumstances as to make it impossible for the Members to express themselves on these two important questions. It may be that this is the best that the friends of the old soldiers on the Committee on Invalid Pensions could do for them. It is quite possible that they could get no other opportunity to bring the bill up, but the fact is to be regretted just the same.

However, there is nothing for the individual Member who is in favor of increasing the pensions of old soldiers to do but to vote for the bill. It is better than the present law, and for that reason I shall vote for it although it is not as good as it ought to be. I would like an opportunity to amend it, and I regret that my request for unanimous consent to make a motion to strike out section 3 was objected to. Nevertheless the bill is here and must be voted up or voted down as it is. Every Member must accept the situation and do what is best under the circumstances. Once the bill is through the House there is a well-grounded belief that the Senate will raise the minimum and strike out the restrictions in section 3. If that is done, those who are in favor of that action will have a chance to express themselves when the bill is sent to conference. I shall vote for the bill with this in view, because it is better than the present law and with the hope that before the legislation is finally enacted into law the bill will be changed in the manner I have suggested. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MAPES. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that this measure as it is drawn is satisfactory to a dozen men in this House. Therefore I think it is very unfortunate that opportunity is not given to amend it to make it more satisfactory.

There is no one here who has a higher regard for our distingushed friend and patriot from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, than I. I know that for years and years throughout this whole country he has been acclaimed as the friend of the old soldier. I know that they believe that he has been and is still continuing to do his utmost to better their condition. They have looked upon him as being the one man before all others who would eventually bring them a dollar a day. I regret more than I can express that the friend of the old soldier who has been looked to all this time can not now see fit to stand as the sponsor of that for which he has been given credit throughout all these years and give them now a dollar a day.

The old soldier is passing very rapidly. More than 6,000 of them have crossed the line since this bill was introduced. One of them has been dying each 18 minutes since we have been in session here this morning. The State of Indiana enlisted 224,000 men in that Grand Army of the Republic. Of that number but 18,000 remain, so that they are going very fast, and what relief is to be afforded them must not be very long delayed.

The private during the Civil War who served four years received for his entire service but $624. If we were simply equalizing the pay to-day, the amount of $1 per day would be a mere pittance in comparison with the payment that the soldier boys are now receiving, and we are all in favor of their receiving what they are getting. I believe on reflection that none of us would be willing to vote against an equalization, if that were possible to make. I know that this bill will be a disappointment to every Grand Army post in the United States. I know it will be a disappointment to the commander in chief of the Grand Army, who lives in my State. I was talking to him a few days ago in New Hampshire, when he said that the boys throughout the United States were looking to this Congress to pass what is known as the Smoot bill. With that the old veterans will be content, that is what they are expecting, and that is the least they should have. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, on the first day of this Congress I introduced a bill to increase generally the pensions of Civil War veterans; those drawing less than $30 per month would be increased by a sum equal to 40 per cent of the pension now received; those drawing $30 or more and less than $40 per month would be increased by a sum equal to 33⅓ per cent of the pension now received, and those drawing $40 or more and less than $55 would be increased by a sum equal to 20 per cent of the pension now received, with a minimum pension of $30 per month.

On January 11 last I made a speech expressing my position relative to this matter, and I think I have placed a copy of that speech in the hands of every Member of this House. So my position is well known. I desire to call the attention of the House at this time to the fact that while we increased the pensions of the Civil War veterans substantially in the Sherwood bill, yet when you look at the increased cost of living since 1890, when the dependent pension bill was passed, the Sherwood bill only kept pace with the increased cost of living up to 1912, regardless of the increased age of the Civil War veterans. The cost of living continues to mount skyward, and we must give greater consideration to their increased age, as they are practically all now 72 and upward. The passage of this legislation, or the passage of a bill at this time generally increasing the pensions of the Civil War veterans, will likely be the last time that the Congress will ever have an opportunity of expressing its gratitude in the shape of pension legislation for any considerable number of the old Civil War veterans, as the next decade will find only a negligible number remaining.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the chairman of the committee, Gen. SHERWOOD. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentlemen who have been criticizing the action of the chairman of the committee, that this morning by the unanimous action of my committee I was authorized to ask unanimous consent to have this bill considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and if not given that unanimous consent I was ordered by my committee to move the suspension of the rules. No member of that committee will deny that fact, so I am acting under instructions of the committee. The Speaker will verify my statement that I tried to get this bill up in such a way that it could be amended, but was not successful. The bill has been on the calendar for over two months, during which time 6,250 old soldiers have died. I want to get this bill over to the Senate. It was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this was a parliamentary outrage. I did not commit the first parliamentary outrage. That was committed on the 10th of January, 1911, when the Sulloway bill was reported out under suspension of the rules, carrying $75,000,000, and my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] was in charge of that bill, and he refused on the floor of the House to accept any amendment whatever. Now, gentlemen, when this bill comes back from conference you will all have a chance to discuss the report of the conferees. In 1912 we passed a bill here after three days' debate and sent it over to the Senate, and when that bill got through the conferees there was not a Member of the House who could recognize the bill. [Laughter.] I have worked for this thing for four years, as my Republican friends know, and I never made a political speech on pension legislation on the floor of the House. I regret that my friend from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], a member of the committee, should have reflected upon the chairman of this committee, but I can take care of myself among the old soldiers all right. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield there just for a question right on this point?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I do not yield. I have only three minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I should like to ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that Gen. SHERWOOD's time be extended two minutes, not to be charged up. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I object.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Now, if you want to know how the old soldiers stand on this bill, I can give you some indication. When the gentleman from Indiana stated that the old soldiers were opposed to this bill, he could not produce the record of a single Grand Army post in the United States that was opposed to this bill, not one. That shows how the old soldiers stand on it, and I think, probably, I know nearly as much about the sentiments of old soldiers as does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND]. [Applause.] I do not claim that the pending bill is adequate to meet the high cost of living at this time, but it will help. It will give hope and cheer to many an old veteran now staggering to a near-by grave. He will know by this legislation that the Congress of the United States appreciates the heroic sacrifice in the great war of over a half century ago, and that there is a spirit in this Congress to alleviate the woes and hardships under which he is now laboring in his old age. It is a patriotic measure, and a grateful offering to every one of my old comrades with whom I touched elbows in the four years of that terrible war, to know we do not propose that the gallant men, who from 1861 to 1865, fought in nearly 2,000 battles shall be turned out to frost-bitten grass and cold neglect like a worn-out dray horse.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred the Smoot bill to this bill, and for that reason I regret that there is no opportunity of amending the bill under the parliamentary status. If that opportunity were afforded, there would be amendments offered, because my good friend and distinguished colleague, Gen. SHERWOOD, just now suggested that he is not satisfied with the bill as written. But I am now convinced that this is all we can get. It is a good deal better than what we already have, and I shall join the General in supporting the measure. However, I wish we might have the opportunity to amend it, so as to make the minimum at least $30, and the maximum at least $50. I would also strike out the provision which forbids a pensioner receiving any pension should he become an inmate of a soldiers' home. I would also omit that part of the bill that refuses a pension to a person whose annual income is $1,000 from all sources.

Mr. Speaker, we should regard this roll of men not as a charity. That feature I know appears in the Government's gratuities, but a debt is due these veterans, and simply because one has been more successful than another in this world's affairs is not conclusive against his being placed on this roll. Such legislation in its discrimination makes the pensioner take on the character of a suppliant, and has the tendency to set him apart as an object of governmental charity. This is unfair to those who receive it, and it is also unfair to those who are denied it. These are among the reasons I regret a situation has been forced upon us which forbids amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL].

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, this bill in its present form is a disappointment to me, and in my judgment will be a disappointment to the Grand Army of the Republic. I do not believe it meets with the approval of the majority of the House. Yet, on account of the parliamentary situation it can not be amended, and no amendment can be even offered, except by unanimous consent, which has already been refused.

We are therefore put in the position of having to support the bill in its present form or not at all. I shall support the measure, hoping that it will be revised by the Senate and in conference so as to more nearly meet the present needs of the soldiers.

Early in the session I introduced a general pension bill providing for $50 per month for all Union soldiers of the Civil War who had served 30 days or more and who had received an honorable discharge. The bill I introduced read as follows:

[H. R. 6973, 65th Cong., 2d sess. In the House of Representatives, Dec. 5, 1917. Mr. VESTAL introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.]

A bill fixing rate of pension for soldiers of the Civil War.

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer of the Army, including Regulars, Volunteers, and militia, or any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, or any enlisted man, however employed in the military or naval service of the United States or in its Marine Corps, whether regularly mustered or not, and who served for a period of 30 days or more in said Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Civil War, and who has received or may hereafter receive an honorable discharge, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to receive a pension at the rate of $50 per month upon proof of the fact of his service in said Army for the time hereinbefore indicated: Provided, That any person who is now on the pension rolls of the United States for services rendered in said Army shall be entitled to the pension herein provided for without any additional proof.

SEC. 2. That this act shall in no wise reduce the amount of the pension now being received by any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War where said pension is in excess of the amount provided for herein.

This bill was indorsed by practically every Grand Army post in my district and by numerous posts over the country, and I received scores of letters from old veterans in favor of the measure. I understand, of course, that such a bill has objectionable features, but no general pension bill that we could frame would be absolutely free from criticism; and it does seem to me that if we ever intend to do justice to the defenders of the Union that still survive now is the time to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I was not particularly wedded to my bill. I am for any measure that will substantially increase the soldiers' pensions. I am not averse to a pension bill based upon service, but I do not believe such a bill should cut out certain classes of men, as this bill proposes to do.

At the close of the session we passed a bill increasing the pensions of the widows of old soldiers to $25 per month. I voted for that measure because it was right, but there are scores of old veterans under the present pension law that are drawing less than $25 per month.

Mr. Speaker, it is admitted by everyone that the purchasing price of a dollar to-day is only about half what it was in normal times. Admitting that the soldiers were properly cared for by the present pension laws in normal times, we should at least increase their pensions to the extent of the difference in the cost of living now and under normal conditions.

This bill does not do that. It fails to provide any increase of pension at all for two classes of soldiers, and the increases it does provide are not, in my judgment, sufficient to meet present conditions.

If amendments could be offered to this bill and voted upon, I am sure the House would pass a bill giving substantial relief.

If permitted, I would offer an amendment striking out section 3 of the bill and also fixing the minimum pension at $30 per month, and increase this amount on the basis of service to a maximum of $50 per month. I want to express my appreciation of the old veterans of the Civil War in dollars and cents and not in mere words of praise for their heroic deeds. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, for a number of years I have attended Memorial Day exercises and have heard men tell of the heroic deeds of the men from '61 to '65; how they went forth to sacrifice their lives, if need be, to save the Union. Probably not a single Member of this body but what has spoken to the old soldiers of his district, praising their valor and patriotism, all of which is just and proper; but the old soldiers can not live on fine phrases or beautiful rhetoric; it takes something more substantial, and, so far as I am concerned, I would like to show my appreciation of the sacrifices of these men by giving them a substantial increase in their pensions, so that in their last days at least they would feel that the Government for which they fought and sacrificed had kept its faith with them.

Mr. Speaker, section 3 of this bill ought to be stricken out. Thousands of soldiers have gone to soldiers' homes because the meager pensions they receive would not keep them. If they were given substantial pensions, many of them would leave the homes at once and feel that they were not wards of charity. I do not believe that any soldier goes to a soldiers' home from choice. They are compelled to go because of the small pensions they receive.

The $1,000 clause should, in my judgment, be stricken out. Why should a soldier who has given, say, two and one-half years of his life to the cause of the Union be refused an increase in pension because he has been thrifty and has an annual income of more than $1,000? Is a man's income, or lack of income, to be the determining factor as to his service?

The bill proposed here carries an increase of about $29,000,000. If section 3 should be stricken from the bill and the bill amended to make the minimum $30 per month, with a maximum of $50 per month, based upon the length of service, it would carry an increase of probably $60,000,000 to $70,000,000. But should we refuse, or even hesitate, to take from the Treasury, which these men sacrificed to save, a sufficient amount to help them in their declining days?

Mr. Speaker, I have great love for the South. I have great admiration for the men who suffered and died, many of them, for a cause which they believed to be just. But, nevertheless, it is these men for whom we are legislating to-day, with thousands of their comrades who have passed to the great beyond, who made it possible for us, in this great crisis, to have a united country. More than 50 years have passed since that struggle, and I thank God to-day that no semblance of bitterness or strife exists. We have long since learned that there is no geography in American manhood and that there are no sections in American patriotism.

On this very day, in many a vine-clad cottage in fair New England and in old plantation homes in North Carolina and Tennessee, may be seen hanging over the mantelpiece, bound together in love and honor, two crossed swords, carried to battle, respectively, by one who wore the blue and one who wore the gray.

Only a few years ago the sons of the northern soldiers contested in friendly rivalry with the sons of the gray on the fire-swept steeps of El Caney. We have seen the sons of the gray carrying the Stars and Stripes over the Spanish intrenchments in Cuba, Porto Rico, and the far-away Philippines. We have seen the day when the sons of the blue and the sons of the gray bivouacked together on the hills overlooking Santiago, and have seen their blood mingled in a common cause in the trenches around that stricken city.

And to-day thousands of men from the North, the South, the East, and the West, knowing but one country and one flag, are offering their lives on the sunny plains of France that military autocracy shall forever be destroyed and that the peoples of all nations, great and small, shall have individual political freedom. They are offering their lives for the life and existence of our Nation, the same Nation for whose existence these veterans of the Civil War offered their lives.

We have justly appropriated billions of dollars to care for the present defenders of our country in a war waged not alone for self-defense and self-preservation, but for humanity. Shall we longer delay just pensions to the defenders of the Union and the flag we love?

The Nation owes a debt of gratitude to these men that it can never repay, no matter how great the pensions.

I shall support this bill, sincerely hoping that section 3 will be stricken out and a more liberal increase granted by the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of liberal pensions for all of the soldiers of the Civil War who have an honorable service and have been honorably discharged. And while the Sherwood bill now under discussion by the House does not in all respects come up to my idea of what a liberal pension is, I am going to vote for it, as it is more liberal than the law now in force.

It is unfortunate, indeed, that this bill had to come up under suspension of the rules, so that it is, as has been well said in this debate, in "a parliamentary strait-jacket," not subject to or open for amendment, and we have to vote for it or against it as it stands. I would like to see the bill amended to give the soldier a dollar a day as a minimum pension and to strike out that section of the bill that excludes the soldiers in soldiers' homes and those who have an income of $1,000 per year, for the reason that it will take so much time to adjudicate and determine the amount of the various soldiers' incomes that many of these deserving veterans will have passed to their reward before the Pension Bureau will have been able to settle upon the amounts of their various incomes.

We can never as a Nation repay the soldiers of the Civil War for the many hardships and privations which they had to undergo during that terrible struggle, and now that they are old and many of them are helpless I feel that we should give to them that which is justly their due without having any unnecessary strings tied to it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill because it is the best we can get at this time. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] has been attacked by Democrats because they say he has talked politics in connection with the bill. Well, his forceful remarks in behalf of the old soldiers may not be pleasing to Democrats, but everyone here knows that he has done more than all the rest put together to bring this bill before the House in the proper way. [Applause.] His brief but splendid speech last Saturday aroused the House to the danger threatening the bill and paved the way for bringing the bill early and properly before the House, and his effort, continued to-day, would have been successful but for the determined opposition of the Democratic leaders, whose course was approved on that side of the House. I object to the feature of this bill which excludes from its benefits soldiers who are in soldiers' homes. Everyone knows that soldiers in homes are there on account of extreme poverty, and they of all others should have the benefit of the increase of pensions. I object to the feature which withholds the benefits of this law from those who are enjoying incomes of $1,000 a year or more. I have time to speak of only one objection to this feature, and that is the difficulty in determining the amount of a soldier's income whether or not he is entitled to the increase. I have had some experience in pension matters, and those which have given most trouble are those requiring investigation to determine whether or not a widow was entitled to a pension; whether or not she was enjoying an income of $250 a year. I think that ought to be stricken out. It ought to be eliminated.

I object further because this bill is not automatic; because, if it becomes a law, soldiers will be required to furnish proof as to age and length of service, and thus suffer long delay and much inconvenience. The law ought to be so drafted that the increases will be allowed without further proof and without application by the soldiers. But in spite of these defects I shall vote for the bill, hoping that the Senate will pass the Smoot bill, and that the House will later have sense enough to accept the Senate bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE].

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I shall support this bill. I very much hoped that we would have an opportunity to offer some amendments, or at least that I should have an opportunity to support some amendments to its features. I regret exceedingly the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves this morning, which makes this impossible. I believe that there should be a minimum of $30 per month. I believe this country is too big and too grand not to offer this small compensation to the soldiers who protected that flag. I would like also to see the maximum amount raised to $50 a month.

I extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a letter with resolutions adopted by a Grand Army post in Colorado, favoring, in preference to this bill, the provisions of the Senate "Smoot bill," which provisions I had hoped to have opportunity to support to-day rather than the bill before us. The letter is as follows:

GEORGE H. THOMAS POST, NO. 7,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
DEPARTMENT OF COLORADO AND WYOMING,
Fort Collins, Colo., April 30, 1918.

To Hon. J. F. SHAFROTH and C. S. THOMAS, Senators, and to the Hon. B. C. HILLIARD, C. B. TIMBERLAKE, EDWARD KEATING, and EDWARD T. TAYLOR, Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: At a regular meeting of the George H. Thomas Post, No. 7, the Department of Colorado and Wyoming, Grand Army of the Republic, the matter of pensions for the survivors of the Civil War being under consideration, a committee was appointed to draw up a suitable appeal to our Senators and Representatives in Congress to assist and advance the interests of the veterans in the matter of increasing their pensions. In accordance with this action may we not submit the following premises: At the outbreak of the "War of the Rebellion" the loyal sons of the North responded to the call of President Lincoln with a firm and resolute determination to preserve the Union of States. For more than four years the conflict was waged with varying success, and the success of the Union Army justifies the assertion that the cause was just. Our Government has rendered tardy justice to these men who saved the Union. Now, after a lapse of more than a half of a century, and in their declining years, they are unable to maintain themselves by their individual efforts, and many of them are wholly dependent upon the insufficient bounty now bestowed upon them by our Government to meet the ever increasing cost of their daily sustenance.

In view of these facts they hereby most earnestly appeal to you and to this great Nation to grant them an increased pension sufficient for their support during the few years remaining to them, and we most earnestly request your hearty support and earnest endeavors to enact into law the "Smoot bill" now before Congress, that being, as we believe, a just increase in their behalf.

Most respectfully submitted.

R. Q. TENNEY.
H. I. GARBUTT.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for this bill, because it is the best we can get at this time. I regret that the bill can not be amended and enlarged. I am sure if the House had an opportunity it would amend the bill and increase these pensions.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am exceedingly glad that the House is finally able to take up the question of the passage of a bill to increase the pensions of the soldiers of the Civil War. I expect to cast my vote in favor of this measure, which grants an increase in pensions of approximately 30 per cent. The bill provides for a minimum of $25 and a maximum of $50.

The bill is, of course, in charge of the majority party, and since it is up under a suspension of the rules, no amendment can be offered without unanimous consent, which has already been refused. It seems to me that this legislation was of sufficient importance to justify the bringing of the measure before the House in the usual way, so amendments might have been offered and considered. The minimum should have been raised to $30, and I had intended, if the bill had been so brought before the House as to be subject to amendment, to offer an amendment to increase the minimum to $30. I think the section should be stricken out that deprives the man with an income of $1,000 from the benefits of the bill and which deprives the soldier who has been unfortunate enough to go to the old soldiers' home of its benefits. Why should either class be omitted? They both served the country well and faithfully. The wages of skilled employees have been greatly increased; the scale of wages for unskilled labor has been advanced, and increases have been given to Government employees.

The reason for this was on account of the increase in the cost of living. When the cost of living was not so high the amount of pension received by the soldiers under the former laws went a long way toward furnishing them with the necessaries of life; but the cost of living, of food, clothing, fuel, and all of the necessaries of life, has advanced by such leaps and bounds that the amount paid the soldier becomes a mere pittance and is soon gone. The amount of the increase ought at least to have been sufficient to have met the difference in the cost of living now and in normal times.

This Congress has appropriated billions of dollars for the purpose of carrying on the present war, and no word of criticism is heard against these vast and unprecedented appropriations. Every American wants his country preserved, the rights of its citizens protected, and its flag saved from dishonor. Our hearts swell with just pride as the youth of to-day go forth to battle for our common country. During the past year no honor has been too great to heap upon the young soldier—God bless him—who leaves his peaceful and happy pursuits to go forth in battle array for his country. How proud we are of his gallant bravery; but while our eyes are turned toward these new patriots these old battle-scarred heroes of the past must not be neglected or forgotten.

There was a time, over a half century ago, when these men for whom this legislation is being passed stepped with light step and stood erect—the flower of the youth of that generation. My father, James Sanders, volunteered in Company F of the Thirty-first Indiana Infantry before he was 16 years of age, and served for four and one-half years—and until the country was united by the victory of the Union Army. He and many of his comrades have passed away; they no longer answer the roll call here, but must respond to the roll call over yonder. Soon they will all be gone. In this grave crisis, when we are assembling our might to fight the new battle, America must not forget that it is because of the victories achieved by the men of '61 and '65 that we enter this mighty struggle a united people with the united resources and wealth and power of these United States.

I have heartily supported and advocated the passage of legislation to care for the new soldier in khaki, to protect those dependent upon him, and to lighten the burden of those at home who are bereft of his kindly care. Let us also care for these old comrades in blue, whom the Almighty has spared these many years; their presence and counsel has been a source of profound inspiration to us when we of the present generation have been called upon to pay the cost for a secure and respected Nation. Let us cheer them in their declining days and keep them here as long as we can. When the American soldiers abroad shall have fought their last battle on the bloody fields of France, crushed the foe of civilization, and come back at last to their native land these old patriots will join the heroes upon their triumphant return, and in a grand review they shall march together, these noble heroes of two wars, all equally honored and praised and loved by the peoples of this Republic which they have preserved and defended. [Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK].

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, I believe there are two reasons why the pensions of the soldiers of the Civil War should be increased at this time. The first reason is that nearly all the soldiers have reached the period of life where they are unable to longer do any work or to help themselves. The next reason is that when we passed the war-risk insurance bill we so generously provided for the soldiers engaged in the present war and for the widows of the Civil War veterans, then it becomes the duty of Congress to now look after the veterans of the war of 1861.

It is estimated that there are now only 300,000 soldiers of the Civil War left on the pension roll of the Government. The average age of these pensioners is estimated at 73 years.

This body of men are all that are left of those who carried on that great war for the preservation of the Union. They are becoming feeble and are now wholly unable to work and are therefore entitled to just and generous treatment.

In discussing what kind of pension legislation should be adopted at this session of Congress, I have often expressed the opinion that the minimum rate should be $30 per month with an increase as to age and length of service in the war on a basis similar to that in existing law.

However, the pending bill was favorably reported to the House by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and has been brought up to-day for consideration by a motion made by the chairman of that committee to suspend the rules. Therefore, under the rules of the House, having been brought up in this way, it can not be amended. It, however, carries a substantial increase of pension to the soldiers of the Civil War.

It affords the only opportunity I have had to help these soldiers to secure any increase in the rate of their pensions and I shall therefore gladly take the opportunity of voting for its passage.

I do not favor the provisions of section 3, providing that the law shall not apply to any pensioner whose net annual income from all sources, including his pension, is $1,000 or more. If this provision is adopted, it will require the pensioner to offer proof upon this subject and the question will be left to the decision and interpretation of some officer in the Pension Department.

My experience with similar provisions, heretofore carried in the pension laws, is that they have led to great delay and sometimes to injustice.

The men who receive the benefit of this law, as I have already said, are now quite old and will not live long to enjoy the pension it provides for. If they are to receive help at all, it must be given at once.

In my judgment it is wrong to adopt a policy that will lead to delay. What is needed most of all is a law that requires just as little proof as possible and requires no interpretation.

It has been stated several times in the course of this debate that this bill will be amended in the Senate. I wish to express the hope that it may be amended in the two particulars to which I have called attention, the elimination of the provision in section 3 and the raising of the minimum rate to $30 per month.

I wish to close these brief remarks as I began, that I am supporting this bill not because I think it is the best that could be adopted, or all that the soldiers ought to have in the way of a pension at this time, but because it is far better than the existing law and grants a substantial increase of pension to men who deserve it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BESHLIN].

Mr. BESHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Invalid Pensions has submitted the pending bill to the House for its consideration and favors its early enactment into law. Every Member has had in mind doing full justice to the old soldiers who served in the Union Army during the Civil War. Those who survive are fast disappearing. I understand that there are less than 300,000 now living and that they are passing away at the rate of one every 18 minutes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. There are 306,000 now living.

Mr. BESHLIN. So before long this great army responsible for the preservation of the Union will have entirely passed away. The committee, under the leadership of its chairman, the gallant gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, recognizing not only the service of these men to their country in its hour of trial but also their advanced years and infirmities of age, desires to provide a substantial increase in the pensions allowed under the existing law. The estimated cost under the prepared bill the first year is over $22,000,000. The maximum amount per month payable under this bill is $39 and the minimum amount $25. On account of the increased cost of all necessaries of life, the advanced age of all survivors of the Civil War and their consequent disability, I favor a minimum of $30 a month and would gladly vote for it. I am aware that the minimum of $25 per month increases the pension of short-term soldiers about 50 per cent, while the long-term soldiers will get an increase of only about 30 per cent. All men who enlisted and served their country during the Civil War were paid only about $13 or $14 per month, while those now serving in the armies of our country are receiving a minimum of $30 per month and $15 more for a dependent wife and $5 to $8 for dependent children. The Government in addition provides insurance at the rate of $8 per thousand. The amount now paid is little enough for the services required. Surely the Government, in view of this statement, should provide liberally for these old soldiers and thereby relieve them from anxiety in their declining years.

Mr. NORTON. Did the gentleman say that this was the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. BESHLIN. I understand so.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman has apparently not read the report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, in my portion of the very limited time allowed for the consideration of this bill it is impossible to analyze it and to point out and emphasize what seem to me to be its inadequacies. I resent that the majority should force upon us a parliamentary situation which prevents full and free discussion and forbids offering amendments to increase the rates provided or to eliminate objectionable features from the bill.

The provisions of the bill, the number of persons affected, and the increased appropriation called for by its terms may be summarized as follows:

Section 1 of the bill proposes a minimum rate of $25 per month to survivors of the Civil War deriving title under any general law or special act and higher monthly rates on the basis of attained ages and lengths of service, as follows:

70 years and service of—
1 year	$26.00
1½ years	28.00
2 years	30.00
2½ years	31.00
3 years or over	32.50
75 years and service of—
90 days	27.00
6 months	29.00
1 year	31.00
1½ years	35.00
2 years or over	39.00

The latter rate is extended to cases of unfitness for or inability to perform manual labor due to disability of service origin, without regard to length of service or age.

Section 2 proposes increase in general law and special act rates of $20 per month or more, by multiples of 50 cents, to amounts nearest approximating 30 per cent additional, but with the proviso that no rate shall exceed $50 per month.

Section 3 withholds the proposed benefits from inmates of State or National soldiers' homes and pensioners whose net annual income from all sources, including pension, is $1,000 or more.

Application of the terms of sections 1 and 2 of the bill to Civil War survivors on the roll at the close of the last fiscal year at rates of less than $50 per month affords results as to numbers affected and annual increase in cost as follows:

	Number.	Annual increase.
Increase to $25 per month	73,619	$6,556,077
Increased on account of age and length of service	221,209	20,159,973
General law and special acts increased 30 per cent	30,519	2,999,523
Total	326,347	29,715,567

By the act of October 6, 1917, all widows of soldiers who drew Civil War pensions or had a pensionable status and who married the soldiers prior to June 27, 1905, were granted a pension of $25 per month. This is not too much, but it is manifestly inequitable that tens of thousands of soldiers still living, many of whom are burdened with dependents, should receive no more than the widows of other soldiers. Our veterans have lived to see and to feel the burden of abnormal prices in all the necessities of life. It is said that the purchasing power of the dollar to-day as compared with May, 1912, is no more than 40 cents on the dollar. It is estimated that this bill will increase the purchasing power of the soldier's pension to about 72 per cent of its purchasing power in 1912. It leaves the pensioners worse off than they were in 1912 with the prices and the pensions then prevailing. More than 95 per cent of the veterans receiving pensions have little or no income in addition to their pensions. Practically all of them are over 72 years of age. They are passing away at the rate of more than 3,000 each month, and soon all will have answered to the last call. In recognition of this fact and of these changed conditions, this bill should carry a minimum of at least $30 per month and a maximum based on age and service of not less than $50 per month. To do less than this is to fail signally in our duty.

Section 3 of the bill, providing that the increases should not be available to those having an income of $1,000, should be stricken out. Less than 5 per cent of the pensioners have such an income. The retention of this provision in the bill means long delays and vexatious inquiries in every case. I prefer that the small percentage of pensioners having already a living income should enjoy the benefits of this bill than that all our old soldiers should be subjected to the annoyances incident to the administration of such a provision. I am likewise opposed to excluding those in soldiers' homes from the benefits of the law. I do not feel that the veterans who are so unfortunate as to have no homes of their own or who are without those able to care for them should be penalized by exclusion from the benefits of this bill because they have sought entrance to the one refuge open to them.

In spite of the fact that the bill falls far short of my hopes I shall support it, for it will bring some relief to the men whom we owe so much.

"And they came to the gate within the wall, where Peter holds the keys.
'Stand up, stand up, now, Tomlinson, and answer loud and high,
The good that ye did for the sake of men or ever ye came to die—
The good that ye did for the sake of men in little earth so lone!'
And the naked soul of Tomlinson grew white as a rain-washed bone.

"This I have read in a book," he said, "and that was told to me,
And this I have thought that another man thought of a prince in Muscovy"—
And Peter twirled the jangling keys in weariness and wrath.
"Ye have read, ye have heard, ye have thought," he said, "and the tale is yet to run;
By the worth of the body once ye had, give answer—what ha' ye done?"

To such a challenge what answer can we give for the veterans of the Union Army. In our hour of stress as young men they gave up opportunities, careers, homes, and all that men hold dear. They suffered and sacrificed for human rights and the preservation of our Union. All that America is to-day is due to them, and on America hang the hopes of the world.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, during the last Congress I had the honor of serving on the Committee on Invalid Pensions of which the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] is the chairman, and who now has charge of this bill before the House. While I served on that committee I made a special study of pension legislation and of the needs of the veterans of the Mexican and Civil Wars. I introduced and got through the committee and Congress a great many special bills for the relief of the old soldiers and the widows and orphans of old soldiers. No service that I have performed here has given me more pleasure than to procure for them this needed and well-merited relief.

In studying the needs of these veterans I came to the conclusion that a general increase in pensions should be granted. Since the Sherwood bill was passed granting a maximum of $1 per day, conditions have changed. Not only has the dollar lost about half of its purchasing power, but the veterans have grown older, more helpless, and require more to minister to their needs and comfort. The bill before the House grants an increase of 30 per cent. That helps, but it is not enough. December 5 last I introduced a bill (H. R. 6981) granting an increase of $15 per month over the rates in the Sherwood law of 1912. Since introducing this bill I have received many letters from old soldiers in the district I have the honor to represent and from at least a dozen different Northern States indorsing my bill.

I regret that under the rules under which this bill is being considered no amendments can be offered. If I had an opportunity to do so, I should offer my bill as a substitute. As the bill now before the House is the only one that can be considered and offers a considerable increase, though not enough, I shall take pleasure in voting for it with the hope that the Senate will grant additional increases. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I ask to have printed H. R. 6981, the bill introduced by me December 5, 1917, and which is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6981) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912, so as to increase certain pensions $15 per month.

Be it enacted, etc., That the first and second paragraphs of the act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $28 per month; six months, $28.50 per month; one year, $29 per month; one and a half years, $29.50 per month; two years, $30 per month; two and a half years, $30.50 per month; three years or over, $31 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $30 per month; six months, $30.50 per month; one year, $31 per month; one and a half years, $31.50 per month; two years, $32 per month; two and a half years, $33 per month; three years or over, $34 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 90 days, $33 per month; six months, $34 per month; one year, $35 per month; one and a half years, $36.50 per month; two years, $38 per month; two and a half years, $39 per month; three years or over, $40 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $36 per month; six months, $37.50 per month; one year, $39 per month; one and a half years, $42 per month; two years or over, $45 per month. That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability, is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $45 per month, without regard to length of service or age.

"That any person who has served 60 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the War with Mexico, and has been honorably discharged therefrom, shall, upon making like proof of such service, be entitled to receive a pension of $45 per month."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this pension measure because it is the best we can get at this time. In both the last Congress and early in this session I introduced a bill providing for $30 per month flat, regardless of length of service or age. I would rather now vote for that bill, and if I had the opportunity would offer it as an amendment. However, under the circumstances I will support this bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted Mr. BROWNING to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS].

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a little more than a year has now passed since that fateful April day when the Congress of the United States declared that a state of war exists between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government. Never in the world's history has a more stupendous task come upon a people; never has the spirit of a free people been aroused so signally, nor has the spirit of a free people ever manifested itself so significantly in terms of such a high-born ideal. During the months that have passed the courage, the ardor, the initiative, and the generous devotion of the people to a sacred cause have found nobler expression than has ever been recorded in the history of nations. Looking about one can not help but be impressed with what the American people have felt, and how they have translated their feelings into action. When war was first declared there were those who doubted the response that would be made, but those who questioned the propriety of entering upon this great war or doubted the wisdom of the step were not long in being convinced that the American people were not only determined that German insolence would no longer be tolerated but that America would take a stop forward and declare for world democracy. Never, perhaps, has there been such an exhibition of a people's generous attitude as has been shown in the subscription for billions of liberty bonds, in the indorsement of the project of a selective draft which enrolled 10,000,000 men, and in sanctioning the appropriation of billions of dollars for the support of the Army and Navy and other war-emergency activities.

Within a comparatively short period more than a million men have been assigned to cantonments scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land. These men have been clothed, armed, and equipped, and are being transported to the seat of war as rapidly as circumstances permit. The voluntary agencies which asked for support from the American people met with a response that thrilled the heart and cheered the spirit of every American citizen. Millions of dollars for the Red Cross, for the Young Men's Christian Association, for the Knights of Columbus, and for other organizations were contributed with generous hand.

It is a fine tribute to the spirit of democracy which is unalterably opposed to the doctrine of militarism that it should be able to rally its social and economic forces in so short a time with so little confusion and with such practical unanimity. The spirit of sacrifice has found expression on every hand—whether in the crowded city, with its teeming thousands, or in the thinly populated country places—everywhere the American people have given ready response. Mothers and fathers have dedicated their sons, and wives, with tear-stained eyes, have not counted the cost too great to submit to long and perhaps timeless separation. From farm and fireside, from store and factory, from city and hamlet, from all the marts of trade, industry, and commerce the legions have come, willing and glad to pay, if necessary, the price of life for the cause of eternal liberty.

And while the men and boys have been massing for active participation, the women of the land have given examples of unparalleled devotion in ministering to the physical needs and comforts of Army and Navy. The future historian will write as one of the significant pages in history that which describes the heroism of the women of the land, who not only gave their sons and husbands and brothers but organized aid, comfort, and relief on a scale such as never has been paralleled in the annals of time. All that has been done, all that will be done, and all that can be done is but the latent spirit of a free people expressed for the purpose of perpetuating the doctrine of individual liberty. It will ever be the crowning glory of America that in the year 1776 she began the work of putting kings out of commission. Since that time the business of being a king by Divine right has had a precarious existence, and when the final blow of the struggle in which we are now engaged is struck the autocratic king business will be dead and damned beyond the hope of a political or civil resurrection. The one clear dominating note above the "tumult and the shouting" is that which proclaims the right of every nation to say how it will be governed and the right of every human being to be a participant in the government that holds its protecting flag over him. Such is the purpose of America in the war, and in the attainment of that purpose we shall not falter or fail while the American spirit so manifest now renders tribute to its ideals and traditions.

But while we contemplate with satisfaction the splendid spirit of America's millions of patriotic and self-sacrificing men and women, we must not close our eyes to the fact that within our borders there exists an element not openly and avowedly disloyal, but secretly intent on undermining the principles upon which the superstructure of our cause rests. By a most insidious propaganda that element sows the seeds of sedition, encourages proselyting, disseminates false news, disuades people from subscribing to loans, lays plots to destroy our munition plants, and in a hundred devious ways give aid and comfort to the enemy The Government in its treatment of this disaffected element has exercised a leniency that has reached its limits. There is now no middle ground. Every inhabitant of the United States is either for or against the Government. The people have spoken and they demand that those who in secret traduce the Government by plot and intrigue shall be treated as enemies of the State and be summarily dealt with. It is the blindest of follies to tolerate any form of treasonable conduct within our household at any time. Much greater is the folly when the masses of the people in a nation are staking their lifeblood and treasure in a crisis that imperils human freedom. A neutral citizen in the United States to-day is an anachronism. Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are vouchsafed to him who stands by the flag and what it represents. Patriotism can have no dual personality; treason alone is the hydraheaded monster. The cause is too sacred, the issue too momentous to tolerate longer in any community those who by insidious arts and schemes would prey upon the vitals of the country. And if I sense aright the spirit of the people, they demand that the severest penalties should be imposed upon those who would jeopardize the success of our Army and Navy. To suffer enemy plotters in this country to poison liberty at its very fountain head is to trifle with the tolerant and patient spirit of the people To impose mild Federal imprisonment or internment may well accord with judicial sanction in time of peace, but treason in time of war demands a sterner retribution. To strike a swift and sure blow now will serve to show that the traitor and his treasonable conduct can have no abiding place in this Republic.

I have been profoundly impressed with the fine ardor and splendid spirit manifested among the people whom I represent. Everywhere I have found them loyal, hopeful, considerate. From every roof tree flies the service flag. The daughters of the communities are in the Red Cross organizations, the mothers helpful in the clubs and at the firesides, the sons in the trenches, the fathers on the farms and in the factories, each doing not merely his "bit," but his very best. What is being done among my own people I have a feeling is being done in varied and varying degrees in every congressional district throughout this broad land. Who can escape the sense of pride when he contemplates his country, 100,000,000 strong, definitely pledged to break the tyranny of autocracy and committed to enthrone the ideal of free government in the hearts and consciences of humanity. The cause is a sacred one, and the American people will justify themselves in their splendid support of all measures that tend to eliminate distinctions and strengthen the bonds of universal brotherhood.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have yielded to other gentlemen practically all of the time I happen to have control of because I wanted to emphasize the view I have always entertained, that where a gentleman by reason of his committee status or otherwise happens to be fortunate enough to control some of the time for debate he ought to realize that it belongs to his colleagues, and that he ought not try to hog it himself. I shall utilize the little time I have left for the purpose of saying one or two things that I shall elaborate on at a later date under the leave which I have obtained heretofore to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this question. In common with a number of my colleagues on this side of the House who have spoken on this bill, I wish to state that I would be glad to have the opportunity of voting for an amendment to the bill fixing the minimum pension at $30 a month. The RECORD will show that ever since I became a Member of this body I have contended for such a law. We have talked for all these years about a dollar-a-day pension bill and many soldiers were led to believe that they had it, only to discover later that they had been misled. I am not going to indulge in any criticism of the majority that is not just and fair, but it is no answer to the argument that we ought to have a chance to vote for amendments to liberalize this bill, to say that in times past and under entirely different conditions the Republican Party brought up pension bills under a suspenson of the rules, as has been done to-day. I might add in this connection that the amendments that gentlemen desired to offer to the Sulloway bill, which has been referred to frequently in this debate, were not designed to liberalize the bill, as we are seeking to do to-day, so that the fact that the Republicans, when they controlled the House, invoked a suspension of the rules does not show any unfriendliness to the old soldier, as the proceedings of the majority here to-day do show.

As I recall it, the Grand Army of the Republic and the soldiers of the country were satisfied with the Sulloway bill, and did not want it amended, while according to the best information I can get as to their attitude on this bill they do want it amended in some particulars. I have not the remotest doubt that if we could get the privilege of offering an amendment providing a minimum of $30 a month this House would adopt it with an overwhelming vote. The old soldiers of the country and their friends will not fail to note that with complete unanimity the Republicans of this body have to-day sought in every parliamentary way to get a chance to liberalize this bill, and that these efforts have been uniformly blocked by gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House. My genial friend from Ohio [Mr. KEY] suggested a while ago that the action of the recent conference of the Republican Members of the House approving the Smoot bill is responsible for the partisanship and acrimony which has developed in this debate. Of course I take it that the Democrats of the House have never been guilty of similar action. I am unable to understand how the decision of the Republican Members of the House, that they favored the Smoot bill, which is a more liberal bill than this one, stirred up our Democratic friends and invoked partisan discussion, if it be true, as some of them contend, that the Democratic Party is friendlier to the old soldiers than the Republican Party. Of course, everyone who is at all familiar with the history of pension legislation knows that such a contention is absurd.

My distinguished friend from Missouri, Judge RUCKER, who is always eloquent and usually fair in debate, referred to the Sherwood Act of May 11, 1912, as an evidence of the friendliness of the Democratic Party to the veterans of the Civil War. I have not the time to go into an analysis of the vote on that bill, but I beg to remind the House that with 225 Democratic Members of this body at that time, only 97 Democratic votes were cast for the bill, while practically the entire Republican vote was cast for it.

An analysis of the vote shows that but for the loyal and unwavering support which it received at the hands of the Republican membership the bill would have been overwhelmingly defeated in the House of its alleged friends. The vote in the Senate was of a similar character, and the vote in both Houses on that bill shows unmistakably and unanswerably, as I have heretofore said in this body, that the Republican Party as an organization has been the constant advocate and loyal supporter of liberal pensions for those who fought under the Stars and Stripes in every conflict in which our flag has been carried, and that the Democratic Party as an organization, with here and there an exception, has been, particularly since the Civil War, against liberal pension legislation. And mark this prediction, gentlemen, and I am willing to renounce all claims to the gift of prophecy if I miss it: I predict that there will be a lot of Democratic votes against this bill, which vote would be considerably larger but for the political exigencies involved, and that there will not be a single Republican vote cast against it.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I do not believe my colleague from Indiana, Mr. BLAND, intended to question the loyalty to the old soldiers of Ohio's grand old man, Gen. SHERWOOD, and I think the language that the gentleman used was in the heat of debate, more or less perverted for one purpose or another. I have served for many years on the Invalid Pensions Committee with Gen. SHERWOOD, and I am glad to say that I do not think the soldiers of the country have a more faithful or a more loyal friend in this body than he. [Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak or who have spoken on this bill be granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken upon this bill or who may speak upon it be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, a great many gentlemen have not had the opportunity of speaking on this bill who would like to, and I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you and the House for the short time allowed me to express my approval of pensions for our veteran soldiers.

May I be permitted to say at the outset, if there ever was a policy to which the United States was fully committed it is the policy of liberal pensions for our veteran soldiers?

Abraham Lincoln had their welfare at heart, and it was he who stated that this country should devote itself to binding up the wounds of the afflicted and caring for the widows and orphans of our veteran soldiers. Schuyler Colfax was likewise a sincere friend to the veteran soldiers and favored pensions as a war policy. And, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to state that as a reward for valuable services this Nation owes a debt to its veteran soldiers which can not be paid alone in gratuity, but in rewarding them in part for the sacrifices they endured and the services they performed.

Indeed we would have no united Nation to-day if it had not been for the veteran soldier. Probably the lesson of their sacrifices in enlisting is brought home closer to us to-day than it was before the present European world war started.

Now, we see young men not only leaving home and everything dear to them, but also leaving behind opportunities of making a success in business pursuits, just as the soldiers of the Civil War did. Many of them give up their hope of education, quit their studies, close the college door, and exchange their books of learning for a knapsack and rifle to learn the art of war.

We are at war. There is no use of evading that fact. Every man who formerly was for peace should now be for war. The very life of our country and its institutions are at stake, as well as the safety of our homes and the welfare of our families.

We may learn a lesson from heroic, patriotic, and noble Belgium. Its people made the supreme sacrifice. Few Belgians are now living in that desolated country. Those who are able to work were driven by the Hun hordes into bondage, to make munitions, to raise food, and some of them to serve under penalty of death in the German military establishment. What a scene! What a sacrifice Belgium made! Are we now less patriotic or strong in heart?

It is a long way from peace to a war basis; but we must devote ourselves wholly to war until victory comes. Our sons and young men have gone to war. The morale of our people and the fighting disposition of our people must support them. We must do everything we can here at home in this country to encourage and support them. Spies must be hung, traitors must be shot, sedition must be quelled. Unity of purpose and unity of action there must be. We are fighting a terrible war—one-half of the world against the other half—but with righteousness and justice upon our side, surely as the sun shines in the sky, we will be victorious in the end.

May I further say that I have always favored a dollar-a-day pension for the veteran soldiers? I think that is little enough. In my first campaign I spoke in favor of the Sherwood dollar-a-day pension bill and voted for it here in the House. That bill passed the House, but was amended by the McCumber amendment in the Senate to a double standard age and service bill, allowing pensions according to the time of service and age of the veteran. I think the time has now come when every veteran who served in the Army of the United States and offered his life for his country should be put on the pension roll. I likewise believe that every veteran soldier who is in humble circumstances and not able to earn a livelihood and needing frequent and periodic attention ought to receive a pension sufficient to support him and furnish him medical care and attendance in order that he might not be reduced to want and have the thought of poverty haunting him or on his mind in his last days.

I am pleased that this bill makes a horizontal increase of 30 per cent over the amount of the pension now received by the soldier. The increased cost of living makes an increase of the pension absolutely necessary; and while 30 per cent increase in his pension will not meet half the increase now in the cost of living, it will help some and be a recognition for the valuable services performed by him in the dark and perilous hours of our Nation.

When the boys enlisted—for they were mere boys—they were told that they and their dependents would be cared for by the Nation, and I am pleased to see this promise being kept. I think the provision of the bill stating that any soldier who has an income of $1,000 a year should not be entitled to an increase should be stricken from the bill. And if the lowest pension granted to any soldier was $1 a day I would be more pleased in giving my support to it. But it is the best we can do. The bill comes under a rule curtailing debate and allowing no amendments, so that in the House all we can do is to pass it as it is.

It is stated on the floor of the House by Gen. SHERWOOD, chairman of the Invalid Pension Committee, that this bill has the favor, support, and recommendation of many posts of the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States. He presents many letters in support of this contention. I have no doubt but that this bill carries the indorsement of a large majority of the Grand Army of the Republic of our Nation, although I wish they had made the minimum pension $30 instead of $25.

Mr. Speaker, let me voice my appreciation of the manner of providing for our present soldiers fighting in the great European war by giving them an insurance policy of $10,000 at the low rate of practically $7 per month. In case of death this amount is paid to their dependents. In case of injury they draw an amount approximating $60 per month. This takes care of the pension situation for our present Army. Those not injured contribute to those who are injured, and under it ample provision is made for our soldiers against want and privation.

Our glorious country is now passing through the shadow of the greatest war of our history. Let every man who remains at home do his duty as well as the boys at the front are doing theirs, and our flag will continue to wave over the land of the free; our Nation, with its many opportunities, and our homes, with their pleasing hearthstones, will be forever secure and safe in the years to come against any tyrant and all barbarians. [Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to no man in this House in friendship for the old soldier. I have sometimes said that it would be a disgrace to this Government to permit any of the old veterans of the Civil War to go to the poorhouse or suffer for the necessaries of life. I feel so now. This bill provides for a 30 per cent increase of all pensions now paid to Union soldiers of the Civil War, which is necessary and justified by the present high cost of living, and I hope it will be promptly passed.

I am sorry to see that there is some disposition on the part of some of the gentlemen in this House to inject politics into this discussion to-day. I served in this House while the Republicans were in power, and during that time two general pension laws were passed. We are assailed here to-day because this bill comes up under suspension of the rules. Of the two pension bills that were passed by the Republican Party while they were in power, during the time that I served in this House, one of them was the increase of the widow's pension from $8 to $12 per month. That was passed on February 3, 1908. It was taken up and passed under suspension of the rules, just as this bill is to be passed to-day.

Efforts were made to amend it without avail. It was a privileged bill, as this is. You had in the chair at that time the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], whom we all respect, and I know him to be a friend of the soldier and of the soldiers' widows at all times. You were asked to-day why we did not call this bill up as a privileged bill and pass it in that way? Why did not the Republicans call up the widows' bill as a privileged bill and pass it? Because they wanted it passed as it was brought into the House by the committee and did not want to throw it open to amendment. Another bill was passed while the Republicans were in power, while I was a Member. That was the Sulloway bill. It was passed on January 10, 1911. The same conditions exactly obtained at that time. It was brought up under suspension of the rules. It was a privileged bill. You had a friend in the chair, but you did not call it up as a privileged bill. You brought it up under suspension of the rules, as we have done with this bill to-day. An effort was made by no less distinguished a man than the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. WEEKS, then a Member of the House, to amend it, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER], who had charge of the bill, objected, and no amendment was permitted at that time. Why do you censure us to-day for doing what the Republicans did all the time while they were in power? I call attention to the fact that the Sulloway bill, the purpose of which was to pay pensions to all soldiers of the Civil War, although passed in this House, was defeated in the Senate, and never while the Republican Party was in power did you give the old soldiers of this country any relief, but it was the Democratic Congress that first passed the Sherwood bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This was the first general pension bill that provided pensions for all the soldiers of the Civil War who fought for the preservation of the Union. I do not deny that you Republicans are now friendly to the old soldiers, but the fact remains that after long years of political power you failed to give them relief, but the Democratic Party promptly did so by the passage of the Sherwood bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have not the time. After that bill was passed by a Democratic House it was cut down in amount by a Republican Senate, and now they tell us that the Senate will have to improve this bill by giving us the Smoot bill. The Senate never did improve a pension bill that was sent to it by this House. [Laughter and applause.] The Sulloway bill was defeated entirely, and the Sherwood bill was largely reduced. Is not that true?

Mr. LANGLEY. Will not the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; for a short question.

Mr. LANGLEY. All right. Is it not a fact that there were 225 Democrats in the House when the Sherwood bill was passed, and they only gave 97 votes, and that every Republican in the House who voted was recorded for that bill? I have reference to the record.

Mr. RUSSELL. My friend from Kentucky is mistaken. When the Sherwood bill was passed such distinguished Republicans as Payne of New York and Hill of Connecticut and Gardner and McCall of Massachusetts all voted against it, and when the Sulloway bill was passed by the House the Republican leader on the floor, Mr. Payne, made a speech against it; and the present Republican leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], Senator WEEKS, of Massachusetts, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] all spoke against it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is not the gentleman talking about the Sulloway bill? I am speaking from recollection. I know nearly all of them voted for it, and I thought they all did.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know how many Republicans voted for it. I know it is quite a habit of Republicans to make speeches against bills and then vote for them. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] They may have done it in this case. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARNER. Is it not probable that a great many regrets have been expressed here to-day while entertaining the hope that the bill will pass as it is?

Mr. RUSSELL. Absolutely. There is no Republican in this House to-day who will vote against this bill. I am satisfied of that. They know it is a good bill, and yet they have undertaken to try to criticize the bill and chastise us for trying to suspend the rules so as to get it through promptly.

I was surprised when my friend from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] said that all the credit of getting this bill up in the House to-day is due to the tireless efforts of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] because he agitated the question on the floor last Saturday. Why, God bless you, my friends, the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD and Mr. ASHBROOK] and myself had already before that time gone to the Speaker of this House, who is a friend of the old soldier, and he had promised us before last Saturday that he would recognize Gen. SHERWOOD to-day to do just what we have done. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, to submit a unanimous-consent request. I have an amendment on the Clerk's desk, and I ask to have it read and acted upon, providing for the reduction of the time of service from 90 days to 30 days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to offer an amendment——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I regret not to accommodate the gentleman from Nebraska, but I think we had better vote on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana makes the point of order there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] A hundred and fifty-six gentlemen, not a quorum, are present. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Will the vote be now upon the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill. Those in favor will vote "aye" and those opposed will vote "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 242, nays 46, answered "present" 2, not voting 140, as follows:

AGE OF CANDIDATES FOR NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3402), to fix the age limit for candidates for admission to the United States Naval Academy.

The title was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman withdrew it the other day for the purpose of offering an amendment. I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has any amendment which he wishes to offer?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. I wanted to offer an amendment, in lines 4 and 5, to strike out the words "between the ages of 16 and 20 years on July," and ask unanimous consent in lieu thereof to insert "not less than 16 years of age nor more than 20 years of age on April," so that it will read:

That hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy must be not less than 16 years of age nor more than 20 years of age on April 1 of the calendar year in which they enter the academy.

Mr. GILLETT. How does that change it from the present law?

Mr. PADGETT. I was going to state it. At present we have two laws on the subject of nominees made by Senators and Members of the House, and they provide that they must not be less than 16 nor more than 20 at the date of the examination.

Now, they hold two examinations every year and sometimes three. The examinations are usually held in February and April. The law with reference to admission from the service provides for another date for entering the academy, so that there are varying dates. This is simply to leave the age limit the same and to fix April 1 as the date of determining the age. I selected April 1 because at present the practice is to hold examinations in February and in April. They hold them sometimes, I think, about the first or second Tuesday in April.

Mr. STAFFORD. Always the third Tuesday of February and the third Tuesday of April.

Mr. PADGETT. So that this is a fair mean between those two examination dates.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand the present age limit is 22 years. Why the discrimination? Why limit it to 20 years?

Mr. PADGETT. The question has been before the committee a number of times, and all the naval people have advocated reducing the age to 18, making it 15 to 18, claiming that the younger ones adapt themselves to the service far better than the older ones. But we have kept the age the same and are proposing to have the 1st of April fixed as the definite date for the entry.

Mr. CANNON. It does not apply to this year?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. KEARNS. The maximum is 20 years?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the maximum is 20 years. This does not affect that now.

Mr. KEARNS. You say there is a movement on foot to reduce it to 15 years?

Mr. PADGETT. I say it has been advocated before the committee for several years, but the committee has never recommended reducing the age.

Mr. KEARNS. I understand in the last examination scarcely any of the boys who were high-school boys passed the examination. I am speaking of the April examination.

Mr. PADGETT. I have not heard anything about the April examination. That was not the case with respect to the February examination.

Mr. KEARNS. I was told that the April examination was the most difficult one they have had in years. If a boy 18 years old could not pass it, I do not know how a boy 15 years old could.

Mr. PADGETT. We have not advocated placing the age at 15. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy must be between the ages of 16 and 20 years on July 1 of the calendar year in which they enter the academy: Provided, That the foregoing shall not apply to candidates for midshipmen designated for entrance to the academy in 1918.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: Page 1, lines 4 and 5, after the word "be," in line 4, strike out "between the ages of 16 and 20 years on July," and insert "not less than 16 years of age or more than 20 years of age on April," so that the bill as amended will read:

"That hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy must be not less than 16 years of age or more than 20 years of age on April 1 of the calendar year in which they enter the academy," etc.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the proposition? What age limit is being fixed?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not changing the age limit. This fixes a definite date to determine the age.

Mr. MADDEN. They must be from 16 to 20 now when they make an application. This is for the examination?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. This is when the examination is held. One is held in April and one in February, and sometimes they hold them in June. In another law as to those who come in from the service it is the date of entering the academy. This is to determine a uniform time for entry.

Mr. MADDEN. So that if a young man were appointed, for example, in March for examination in April, and he was 20 years of age on the 1st of May he would not be admitted?

Mr. PADGETT. He would be admitted. He would have to be 20 years of age prior to the 1st day of April.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose a young man became 20 years of age on the 1st of April, and I was not able to appoint him for the April examination and wanted to appoint him for the June examination?

Mr. PADGETT. We do not regularly have June examinations. They are very rare. We have had only one June examination in a number of years past.

Mr. MADDEN. They examine them specially in June. I have had it done.

Mr. PADGETT. They may be special examinations.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not say regular examinations. What would happen to a boy in that case?

Mr. PADGETT. If he were over 20 years of age on the 1st day of April he could not enter, and if he were under that he would enter. It only fixes a definite date, whereas now we have a fluctuating, varying date, according to the examination and then under two different laws.

Mr. MADDEN. What advantage is there in the new scheme?

Mr. PADGETT. The department says it will save an immense amount of misunderstanding and confusion all over the country, and will save them a vast amount of correspondence explaining the situation from time to time.

Mr. MADDEN. What misunderstanding could they have, for example, if I were going to nominate a young man for examination to the Naval Academy? I would ascertain all the facts in the case and would know whether the young man was within the prescribed age, and I would not nominate him if he were not. How would that affect the department?

Mr. PADGETT. It affects the department by people writing to the department from all over the country as to when a young man can enter.

Mr. MADDEN. But the people have nothing to do with the appointment.

Mr. PADGETT. I know; but the people have an interest in knowing about it, and they write to the department asking as to eligibility and age, and the department writes replies and tells them it is between the ages of 16 and 20, and then they want to know when that 16 and 20 is to be determined.

Mr. MADDEN. That would determine itself, would it not.

Mr. PADGETT. It would determine itself if you had reference to a time fixed to determine it. For instance, if a young man is more than 20 years of age in February, he would be too old.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, nobody would appoint him.

Mr. PADGETT. But if he came to take the examination in April he would not be too old if he attempted to take it in February, but he would be young enough to take it in April if he were 20 years of age a day or two after the examination.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the enactment of this law prevent people from writing to the department?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. It just gives a definite date and leaves a great deal more to be explained.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it will make a bit of difference about the annoyance to the department, if they consider it an annoyance when the people in the country ask them questions. Of course, you can not account for what military and naval people think is an annoyance. Ordinarily people in the public service, like Members of Congress and others in the civil branches of the Government, do not consider it any annoyance to have people ask questions; but as a rule naval officers and those in the military branch of the service, whenever you ask a question, say, "What are you interfering in this thing for?" They really seem to think they are omnipotent and that we are here by sufferance, and that we are just necessary nuisances with whom they have to put up during the period of the congressional session. Of course, if they feel that way about a Member of Congress, I do not wonder that they feel annoyed when a citizen asks them a question.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I want to move an amendment to the amendment by changing April 1 to July 1. That is practically the time of admission to the academy, and I do not see why it is not the better date.

Mr. PADGETT. The department recommended July 1, and I had it July 1 in the original bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PLATT moves to amend the amendment by striking out the word "April" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "July."

Mr. PADGETT. That was in the original bill, but when it was discussed here the other day you will remember it appeared that the effect will be to shorten the term instead of to lengthen it. I think we had better leave it April.

Mr. PLATT. What is the reason for making it April?

Mr. PADGETT. It simply extends the benefit of the time from July to April.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will not a vote in favor of the Platt amendment be the same as a vote against the Padgett amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. Just exactly.

Mr. PLATT. I understand this is to make uniform the different dates of admission—to make the law uniform?

Mr. PADGETT. The department submitted July, and the committee reported July, but when we had the discussion here the other day it appeared that it would be more accommodating to have it April; and as a result of the discussion here, to adapt it to the trend of opinion at that time, I have suggested April.

Mr. PLATT. That is to give three months longer to each applicant.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the effect of it is that if you put it in July you shorten the time.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that.

Mr. PADGETT. You shorten the age limit within which a man may enter.

Mr. PLATT. That is what the Navy Department want to do.

Mr. PADGETT. I know; they suggested July, but we thought we ought not to reduce the 20 years. So we are making it April, which leaves it practically 20 years, as the law now exists.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield three minutes to me?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this matter was considered at some length on the last Unanimous Consent Calendar day. The chairman of the committee withdrew the bill for the purpose of providing for the hiatus which the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] would create and for this reason: There are some instances where boys have been selected for next year's appointments who become 20 years of age after the third Tuesday in April. Now, the amendment of the gentleman from New York would absolutely preclude those boys from taking the examination, because on July 1 they would be more than 20 years of age, but they would not be 20 years of age on April 1. There are some cases where boys have been preparing, mayhap for years, to take this examination, and to pass this bill with the proposed amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] would absolutely preclude them, because while under existing law they are now privileged to take the examination if they are not 20 on the third Tuesday in April, if they become 20 between the third Tuesday in April and the 1st of July, as proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from New York, they would be excluded. Certainly the gentleman does not intend that.

Mr. PLATT. But the law at present provides that.

Mr. PADGETT. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to, but that the date, April 1, will be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The amendment to the amendment of Mr. PLATT was rejected.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that there is any sense in the passage of such a law as this, not a bit. It does not do any good, and it may do a lot of harm. Every Member of Congress who has the power to nominate a boy for admission to the Naval Academy knows that under the law the boy is not eligible unless he is between the ages of 16 and 20, anyhow. Now, why fix a definite date when he must have reached the age limit? We might select a man for admission to the Naval Academy for examination in June. We might select him for an examination in January, or in February, or for examination in April, or at any time, but we all know that when we do select him he must be within the age limit. The fixing of a definite date when he must have reached the age limit will work a great hardship in many cases. Men may by the passage of this law be excluded from the possibility of getting into the Naval Academy at all; and if the only purpose of the enactment of the law is to prevent an annoyance to those who are paid by the Government of the United States to answer the questions of the citizens of the United States, it ought not to be enacted. They are in office for the purpose of transacting the public business, and they ought to consider it a pleasure and a privilege to answer questions asked by citizens of the United States. I know of no person so humble, anywhere in America, that I would not be glad to answer if they appealed to me for information, if I had the information. I do not want ever to consider myself so important that I will become annoyed by being asked a question.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Under the law as it is now, the Member nominates a candidate for midshipman and the boy becomes 16 years of age before admission, he can be admitted?

Mr. MADDEN. Any time he is nominated, if within the age limit.

Mr. RAKER. Before he enters the academy?

Mr. MADDEN. Any person who has sense enough to nominate the boy for admission to the Naval Academy certainly has sense enough to know whether he is within the age limit. What I want to impress upon the gentleman and others is the fact that Members of Congress are supposed to have enough sense to know when a man is within the age limit, and not to nominate him unless he is within that limit. I have no patience with men who sit in these swivel chairs in the Navy Department who are annoyed because somebody asks them questions for information. You do not very often get information when you do ask for it, anyhow. Most of the time they send you back one of those old-time printed slips, with somebody's name at the bottom of it, giving you information generations old instead of answering the question you asked. And then you do not always get that. Sometimes it is two or three weeks after you have written your letter. I got a letter the other day in reply to one I sent on the 26th of March. I got my answer on the 4th of May. It did not give me any information then. When I called up to find out why it took six weeks to write a letter that did not give the information, they said they were trying to find out what the reply should be, and they did not succeed in that. So I say that legislation of this kind ought not to be brought up in the House for consideration. Leave it to the good judgment of the Member of Congress who is authorized to nominate and let him decide when the boy is eligible and when he is not, and not leave it to some man in the Navy Department to say whether the Member of Congress has properly performed his duties. I am opposed to any such legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I have stated heretofore the purpose of this bill. We have conflicting legislation, and this is simply to give uniform time so that everybody can act upon it. The gentleman's own statement answers the question. Under the law as it is now, if Members of Congress nominate, the law says the candidate must be between the ages of 18 and 20 at the date of examination. Now, in one year that is one day and in another year it is a different day. It varies. If a man goes in from the service, it says that he must be between the ages of 16 and 20 at the time he enters the academy.

All that this does is to say that he must be between the ages of 16 and 20 on the 1st day of April of the year in which he enters the academy. Examinations have been held in February and in April, and if the 1st day of April is fixed, it is a fair date with reference to nominations by a Member of Congress. It does not change the age limit at all, but the change is from July to April for the reason that it would give the benefit of the difference between April and July in the age limit in favor of the boy entering.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KINKAID. Does the bill as worded apply to candidates entering next year?

Mr. PADGETT. It says that it does not apply to the present year.

Mr. FREEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FREEMAN. Why not fix it on the third Tuesday of April, because the candidate for next year may become 20 between April 1 and the third Tuesday of April?

Mr. PADGETT. We have to have some date. We had it July at first, and then we fixed it the 1st of April, because we thought it would give a better chance for the boys.

Mr. FREEMAN. A Member may have a candidate in view to appoint next year who will become 20 between the 1st day of April and the third Tuesday of April.

Mr. HASTINGS. He would be eligible under this act. If he was under that age on April 1 of next year, it would not exclude him.

Mr. PLATT. Would not exclude those who become 20 between April 1 and the third Tuesday.

Mr. HASTINGS. On April 1, if he is under 20, he would go into the academy.

Mr. HICKS. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question, not exactly pertinent to this subject but one in which I think the House would be interested. Why the distinction between the age limit in the Military Academy and in the Naval Academy?

Mr. PADGETT. It originated many years ago. In the Army the retiring age is 64 years and in the Navy 62 years, and it was on the theory of 40 years' service before retiring.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, it started from the end of the race and worked backward?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 54, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 261, nays 2, not voting 167, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization.

MANNING OF VESSELS SUBJECT TO INSPECTION LAWS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1545) to amend the act of March 3, 1913, entitled "An act to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas just what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill that came to the House and was referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It only does one simple thing. It adds to existing law four words. The officering and manning statute required a certain number of watch officers on board vessels of a thousand tons, a certain number on those of 200 and less than a thousand, and a certain number on those of 100 and less than 200. It included in vessels requiring those watch officers wrecking vessels, and it excepted from its watch-officer requirements certain vessels by the following words:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, yachts, or motor boats as defined in the act of June 9, 1910.

Now, what this bill here does is to add to the proviso these words "or to wrecking vessels." It is to cure a manifest oversight. If it had been thought of when the original law was passed, it would have been known that wrecking vessels do not need alternate watches because they are chiefly stationed about some vessel being salved.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think it too important a bill to be taken up under unanimous consent, and I ask the gentleman if he will not allow it to remain on the calendar.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will permit me to say this, that the department recommended and every interest involved asks for it. It has lain over since the last Unanimous Consent Calendar day. There is to the bill absolutely no objection, and the committee reporting it is unanimous after a full investigation.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. I will.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I am positive if the gentleman from Illinois understood the situation he would not object. Now, if the gentleman will allow me. Heretofore the law compelled all ships of whatever character to carry a certain number of employees for the safety and welfare of the men on ship, as well as the property. It was found that wrecking vessels were laid up alongside of a ship for days, and it was really a great hardship to compel that character of boats to carry extra employees, and that it was entirely unnecessary to have such employees aboard. That is what this bill does, it simply relieves them of that necessity.

Mr. MADDEN. Is this to make an exception of that kind; is that the only object in the law?

Mr. HARDY. Absolutely the only object. It simply adds these words "or to wrecking vessels." I will read it to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. Regular order!

Mr. MADDEN. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4463. No vessel of the United States subject to the provisions of this title or to the inspection laws of the United States shall be navigated unless she shall have in her service and on board such complement of licensed officers and crew, including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated, as may, in the judgment of the local inspectors who inspect the vessel, be necessary for her safe navigation. The local inspectors shall make in the certificate of inspection of the vessel an entry of such complement of officers and crew, including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated, which may be changed from time to time by indorsement on such certificate by local inspectors by reason of change of conditions or employment. Such entry or indorsement shall be subject to a right of appeal, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of Commerce, to the supervising inspector and from him to the Supervising Inspector General, who shall have the power to revise, set aside, or affirm the said determination of the local inspectors.

"If any such vessel is deprived of the services of any number of the crew, including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated, without the consent, fault, or collusion of the master, owner, or any person interested in the vessel, the vessel may proceed on her voyage if, in the judgment of the master, she is sufficiently manned for such voyage: Provided, That the master shall ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same grade or of a higher rating with those whose places they fill. If the master shall fail to explain, in writing, the cause of such deficiency in the crew, including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated, to the local inspectors within 12 hours of the time of the arrival of the vessel at her destination, he shall be liable to a penalty of $50. If the vessel shall not be manned as provided in this act, the owner shall be liable to a penalty of $100, or in case of an insufficient number of licensed officers to a penalty of $500."

SEC. 2. That the board of local inspectors shall make an entry in the certificate of inspection of every ocean and coastwise seagoing merchant vessel of the United States propelled by machinery, and every ocean-going vessel carrying passengers, the minimum number of licensed deck officers required for her safe navigation according to the following scale:

That no such vessel shall be navigated unless she shall have on board and in her service one duly licensed master.

That every such vessel of 1,000 gross tons and over, propelled by machinery, shall have in her service and on board three licensed mates, who shall stand in three watches while such vessel is being navigated, unless such vessel is engaged in a run of less than 400 miles from the port of departure to the port of final destination, then such vessel shall have two licensed mates; and every vessel of 200 gross tons and less than 1,000 gross tons, propelled by machinery, shall have two licensed mates.

That every such vessel of 100 gross tons and under 200 gross tons, propelled by machinery, shall have on board and in her service one licensed mate, but if such vessel is engaged in a trade in which the time required to make the passage from the port of departure to the port of destination exceeds 24 hours, then such vessel shall have two licensed mates.

That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent local inspectors from increasing the number of licensed officers on any vessel subject to the inspection laws of the United States, if, in their judgment, such vessel is not sufficiently manned for her safe navigation: Provided, That this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, yachts, or motor boats as defined in the act of June 9, 1910, or to wrecking vessels.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for the master, owner, agent, or other person having authority to permit an officer of any vessel to take charge of the deck watch of the vessel upon leaving or immediately after leaving port, unless such officer shall have had at least 6 hours off duty within the 12 hours immediately preceding the time of sailing, and no licensed officer on any ocean or coastwise vessel shall be required to do duty to exceed 9 hours of any 24 while in port, including the date of arrival, or more than 12 hours of any 24 at sea, except in a case of emergency when life or property is endangered. Any violation of this section shall subject the person or persons guilty thereof to a penalty of $100.

SEC. 4. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Did I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that this exception only applies to wrecking vessels when they were laid alongside of crafts?

Mr. HARDY. The idea is that it does not apply to wrecking vessels at all. They are not involved i.. carrying passengers, and it was a hardship upon them, being mainly engaged in still work to require them, if they happened to be a large vessel, to have three watches. The parties in interest, every shipbuilding interest, consulted about it say that it is unnecessary to have these employees on these vessels.

Mr. WALSH. One further question. Is there a section of law in which the term "wrecking vessels" is defined so as to apply only to a certain kind of craft? Of course, very many times ordinary towboats, tugboats, go on wrecking expeditions, and I wondered if it applied to steam lighters or just vessels which are engaged exclusively in wrecking work.

Mr. HARDY. My idea is that the term "wrecking vessel" has a definite and popular meaning.

Mr. WALSH. I thought that might be the case.

Mr. HARDY. I do not think it is defined by law. I am sure it is not; but I do not think any vessel would be exempted from having the officers required by present law, through the passage of this bill, except a vessel that was being used as a wrecking vessel.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is this bill intended to apply to boats that run on the rivers of the interior of the country not connected with salt water?

Mr. HARDY. The original act, if the gentleman will permit, was passed in 1913. Section 2 of that act deals wholly with ocean-going or seagoing vessels. It is not an inland measure. The bill we are asking to pass copies existing law and adds to it the four words I have mentioned.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is on page 4, line 12?

Mr. HARDY. On page 4, line 12.

Mr. ROBBINS. The four words "or to wrecking vessels"?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then it does not apply to inland streams, like the Ohio and the Monongahela Rivers?

Mr. HARDY. If you will look at the existing law, it says:

That the board of local inspectors shall make an entry in the certificate of inspection of every ocean and coastwise seagoing merchant vessel of the United States—

And so forth. And the law continues, stating how many officers they are required to have. Then there is a proviso exempting certain kinds of vessels from its requirements:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, yachts, or motor boats.

We simply add "or to wrecking vessels" to the proviso.

Mr. ROBBINS. I do not believe it applies to inland streams.

Mr. HARDY. No. The original act did not apply to anything except ocean-going vessels. And this exempts wrecking vessels from the provisions of the act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does it not apply to the Great Lakes?

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman will bear in mind that this bill is not enacting any new legislation. This was the original officering and manning act, which applies to the ocean-going vessels. I do not think the original act, or section 2 of it, applied to anything but ocean-going vessels. Part of the original act applies to all vessels of the United States. It is section 4463 of the Revised Statutes, but section 2 of section 4463 applies only to seagoing vessels and it is the proviso to this section 2 which we are amending. The whole thing is to relieve wrecking vessels from being required to keep a useless and burdensome number of officers or employees.

When this bill was before the Senate, it was referred to the Department of Commerce, and was approved by this letter from the Secretary to Senator FLETCHER:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 18, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of yours of the 14th instant, inclosing S. 1545, "To amend the act of March 3, 1913, entitled 'An act to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States.'"

Section 4463, of which the proposed bill is an amendment, provides the number of licensed mates vessels are required to carry under certain conditions. Excepted from the provisions are fishing or whaling vessels, yachts, and motor boats. The proposed bill adds to this list of exceptions wrecking vessels, as no good reason is perceived why they should be included within the provisions of the section. This bill has the approval of the department and I recommend that it be enacted into law.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARDY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

READMISSION OF CERTAIN ALIENS.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 255.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 255) authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces.

Resolved, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, excluding from the United States aliens who are likely to become a public charge, or who are physically defective, or who are contract laborers, or who have come in consequence of advertisements for labor printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country, or who are assisted by others to come, or whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another or by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, or who are stowaways, or who are illiterate, aliens lawfully resident in the United States when heretofore or hereafter enlisted or conscripted for the military service of the United States; and aliens lawfully resident in the United States who, prior to April 6, 1917, declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, and who have enlisted for service with Czecko-Slovak, Polish, or other independent forces attached to the United States Army or to the army of any one of the cobelligerents of the United States in the present war, who may, within one year after the termination of the war, apply for readmission to this country, after being honorably discharged or granted furlough abroad by the proper military authorities, or after being rejected on final examination in connection with their enlistment or conscription, shall be readmitted; and that any alien of either of the two foregoing descriptions who would otherwise be excluded under said section of the immigration act on the ground that he is idiotic, imbecile, feeble-minded, epileptic, insane, or has had one or more attacks of insanity, or on the ground that he is afflicted with constitutional psychopathic inferiority, tuberculosis, a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, or mental defect, shall be readmitted if it is proved that the disability was acquired while the alien was serving in the military forces of the United States or in an independent force of the kind hereinbefore described, if such alien returns to a port of the United States within one year after the termination of the war; and that the head tax provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917, shall not be collected from aliens readmitted into the United States under the provisions of this resolution: Provided, That if any alien readmitted to the United States in pursuance of the terms hereof shall at any time thereafter become a public charge the expense of maintenance and care shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has 20 minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution measures up to the much-abused standard of a "war measure." It is a resolution that has been urged on the attention of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization—and it is an immigration measure, by the way—by the Department of State and by the Secretary of Labor through the Commissioner of Immigration. I have here, and I shall print it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, with the consent of the House, a letter from the Solicitor of the State Department, Mr. Polk, who complains that the bill does not go quite far enough. Originally it was the idea, I believe, of my friend, the chairman, as it was the desire of the Department of State, that these lawfully resident aliens who had gone from this country and engaged in war against our enemies in Europe should be permitted to return, whether they had declared their intention to become citizens or not. Now, we have not gone quite that far. Our bill merely proposes to grant men who were aliens and who have enlisted, or may be hereafter enlisted, or have been conscripted or may be hereafter conscripted into our service, permission to come back into the United States without regard to the ordinary immigration restrictions, basing this right upon the fact that they were here lawfully before and that they have joined us by going to Europe to help fight our enemies.

It also proposes that aliens lawfully resident in the United States prior to the declaration of war and who had declared their intention to become citizens, who have joined the Czecko-Slovak, Polish, or other independent forces cooperating with us in the war against Germany or Austria-Hungary, to come back to the United States without regard to the usual immigration restrictions.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution is reported to the House with a unanimous recommendation that it be agreed to as a simple act of justice to certain persons who were lawfully residing in the United States prior to the declaration of war against the central powers on April 6, 1917.

It is quite the custom now to support every proposed act, from the local and trivial to the most important, with the statement that it is a war measure. For that reason I hesitate to use a phrase so much abused, although this is in fact a real war measure. It is evident on its face that it is. The Department of State, in letters to Chairman BURNETT, of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and to me, ask its passage as such. Letters approving it have also come from the Department of Labor and the subordinate Bureau of Naturalization.

The committee did not accept it because administrative officers indorsed the central thought of the bill. They did not, in fact, accept it as those officials wanted it. It is not as liberal as some of them would like to have it. The aim of the committee has been to do justice to the classes whom it seeks to relieve from certain embarrassments and hardships that grow out of the war and to restrict its concessions in such a way that it will be acceptable to the Congress. I believe that we have succeeded in doing so.

When the war began there were a number of aliens lawfully residing in the United States who were not citizens, who are not citizens now, although many of them had declared their intention to become citizens. Among these resident aliens were many immigrants from Polish territory under the control of Germany, Austria, and Russia, as well as the Czechs, or Bohemians. They are virile, aggressive, aspiring representatives of the great Slavic family, and instinctively and racially hostile to the Governments of Germany and Austria-Hungary. Only a negligible number of these people are loyally attached to the countries to which they owe a nominal allegiance. In the countries of their birth and in the lands of adoption they nurse hostility to their traditional enemies—the Germans and Austrians—and are eager to fight them when there is the faintest hope of success.

Some of them had declared their intention to become citizens before the 6th of April, 1917, and some had neglected to do so, although all probably meant to do so ultimately.

When the call to arms came in 1914 many Poles, Czechs, and other Slavs went to Europe and joined the forces of Serbia, Britain, France, and Russia to fight the Governments they had been taught to regard as the oppressors of their people. It seemed to be a way to correct the injustice done to Poland when her sovereignty was killed and her territory divided in 1795, and to settle old scores with ancient enemies. Bohemians believed that the time had come when their national aspirations might be gratified.

For all that we only owed them sympathy and admiration. Americans have always admired and sympathized with struggling people who aspire to independence. But that was the affair of their kinsmen across the sea and of themselves, so far as they cared to make it so. However, for those who have gone or may go into our Army since their enemies have become ours the situation is altogether different.

Important armies have been formed out of these brave and patriotic people who voluntarily abandoned comfort and security in the United States and in other countries to go back to Europe and fight against governments who are our enemies as well as theirs. France has given official recognition to one such army. By a decree of the French Republic, dated December 16, 1917, the Czecko-Slovak Army, which, I am told, has more than a hundred thousand men in it, is made a part of the military forces under French command, although autonomous and fighting under its own flag.

Remember these people have thrown off forever all allegiance to the Government of the countries of their birth. They need adoption by some country in the struggle for democracy. Otherwise their hazard is double. They may be killed in battle and if captured they are certain to be shot as traitors. It is our duty, as it is our interest, to give those who were in this country all the protection the law can afford. Even in this resolution we do not go as far as we should. Although we fall short of our full duty what we propose here should be done, and done as quickly as possible.

Among those who will benefit by this resolution, if it shall become law, there are, in addition to Czecko-Slovaks, large numbers of Jews, Armenians, and Syrians who were residing in the United States a year ago, who are now in Europe or Asia fighting for liberty and democracy.

This resolution provides that aliens who were here before we declared war on the central powers and who have heretofore been conscripted for service with the Army of the United States, or who have volunteered, or who may hereafter go into it voluntarily or by draft, may be readmitted to the United States if they apply for readmission within one year after the close of the war. This class of aliens will be permitted to return notwithstanding the fact that they have not declared their purpose to become citizens.

The resolution also authorizes the return to the United States, within one year after the termination of the war, of aliens who were residing here prior to April 6, 1917, who had declared their intention to become citizens and who have enlisted for military service with any one of the cobelligerents of the United States in the present war, or with Czecko-Slovak, Polish, or other independent forces attached to the United States Army, or to that of any one of the cobelligerents of the United States, after being honorably discharged or furloughed abroad by proper military authority.

In a word, the resolution only proposes to give these aliens the status and rights they had as lawful residents of the United States prior to April 6, 1917, but in recognition of their service in a cause in which Americans are sacrificing blood and treasure it proposes to waive the immigrant head tax that would otherwise be collected when they return.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization was unanimous in its vote directing that this resolution be favorably reported. It does not go quite as far in the way of relief as the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SABATH, the author of a similar measure, or the Department of Labor thought desirable, but it will do an act of justice to people whose services are valuable and who by associating themselves with us, or with the allied powers in Europe, incur unusual peril.

Here is what the Department of Labor has to say about this resolution:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, February 28, 1918.

Hon. JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SLAYDEN: The commissioner general has advised me that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House, at its meeting of this morning, directed you to report favorably the joint resolution introduced by you on February 19 "authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces."

While this resolution does not go as far as this department had hoped Congress might be disposed to go in granting exemption to alien residents of the United States who enter the Army of this country or the army of one of the countries associated with the United States in the conduct of the war, it will aid materially in the handling of cases that will surely confront the Immigration Service during the continuance of the war and for some months after its close. I wish, therefore, to express to you the hope of the department that the resolution may be adopted by the House at a very early date.

Respectfully, yours,
LOUIS F. POST,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, no American should forget that to some of these people we owe a peculiar debt of gratitude. In our days of trial, when we were few and weak, when we were struggling to establish our independence, two gallant Poles came to America and associated themselves with George Washington. They became an indelible and glorious part of the history of the United States.

Thaddeus Kosciusko, with a letter from Benjamin Franklin, joined Washington, and our great chief made him a staff officer at once, and in recognition of his worth and high talents assigned to him important duty as an engineer. He remained to the end, and Congress, in 1783, made him a brigadier general "for long, faithful, and honorable service in the American Army."

Pulaski, who began fighting for liberty as a youth and continued it to his heroic death, was a firm believer in the doctrine of "self-determination," or, as we phrase the same thought, the right to government by the consent of the governed. He also came to our country with letters from the great and learned Dr. Benjamin Franklin and joined the American Army in 1777. He distinguished himself at Brandywine, defended Charleston in 1779, and was killed at Savannah in the same year, greatly admired and beloved by his commander in chief, Washington.

Remembering these things, can we refuse to grant this act of justice to his countrymen of to-day, who are fighting shoulder to shoulder with Americans?

THE SOLICITOR FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 8, 1918.

Hon JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SLAYDEN: I notice in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that House joint resolution 255 was recently been called up in the House, and I desire to call to your attention one point which occurs to me in respect to it.

Our cobelligerents have informally interested themselves in the question of return to this country of their citizens or subjects who leave the United States to serve in their armies and by reason of some incapacity received in such service are prohibited from returning to the United States under the present immigration laws, even though they have lived for many years in the United States and have established their families, residences, and businesses here. Our cobelligerents have been anxious, therefore, to have some leniency shown in respect to the return of such persons into the United States after the completion of service abroad.

As I read House joint resolution 255, it applies to aliens who enter the military service of the United States, or aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, but does not cover the class of aliens who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States and have gone abroad to enter the military service of their own country or one of the cobelligerents. I presume there are not many aliens of this class, but would it not be possible to show consideration to our cobelligerents in this small matter by making House joint resolution 255 applicable to citizens or subjects of our cobelligerents who have gone or shall go abroad to serve their own country or one of the allies in the same cause in which we are so earnestly and deeply engaged?

House joint resolution 212, introduced in the House by Mr. BURNETT January 10, 1918, had the approval of the State Department as well as the Department of Labor and appeared to be broad enough to cover the class of aliens which I have mentioned.

Yours, sincerely,
FRANK L. POLK.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the vital objection to this bill is not the authorization feature granting to those aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens and who have joined independent organizations to fight in behalf of the allies in foreign fields the right, notwithstanding physical defects that they may have acquired or other objections that would be sufficient to exclude them under the existing naturalization law, to be readmitted to this country, but that provision contained in the proviso of this resolution which levies upon the National Government the support of all these aliens regardless of whether their injuries have been the result of war or not, whether abroad or whether in this country. I direct the attention of the Members of the House to the wording of that proviso, and I wish to advise the House that that was no part of the original resolution when it was presented to the attention of the Department of Labor and the Department of State, but was incorporated in the committee. The language is as follows:

Provided, That if any alien readmitted to the United States in pursuance of the terms hereof shall at any time thereafter become a public charge the expense of maintenance and care shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

There is no objection to this resolution without that proviso. We are placing in an unfortunate position those who wish to safeguard the Treasury, especially in these times when we need every dollar, but wish to oppose this resolution because of this proviso, which seeks to establish for all time the policy that, regardless of how these aliens become pauperized, regardless of the way in which they may have acquired the injury from which they are suffering, are to become a public charge at the expense of the National Treasury.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has well known the opposition of some members of the Committee on Appropriations to this bill solely because of that proviso, namely, because it was establishing this precedent, never before recognized by the National Government. This bill could have been passed a month ago under unanimous consent if that proviso had been eliminated. Instead of the respective localities taking care of the burdens of these persons who may become public charges, by this proviso, it is intended to levy that exclusively upon the National Government.

And I call your attention to the fact that that is regardless of the question as to whether the injuries have been received in war or not. They are not part of the National Army. They are fighting our cause, it is true, in connection with the allies, but they may come back here strong and able-bodied, and later they may suffer some accident in connection with industrial employment, or they may become addicted to some vices that may make them paupers, and under such circumstances the burden of maintaining them under our laws has always been on the State and local community. Now you intend, regardless of the character of the injury they receive, to throw that burden on the National Government.

No opportunity is given, if you pass this bill under the suspension of the rules, to amend it and strike out that proviso. If this bill had been brought up in the regular course, a motion to strike out that proviso would have been in order, and this House, by a large majority, might have voted that proviso out, and the main proposal to allow those people to be admitted would have been adopted. But as it is, those who are seeking to protect the Treasury are obliged now to vote against this resolution, because we have no opportunity whatever to amend it by striking out the obnoxious proviso.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. We have provided in the law for certain allowances to be made to soldiers who may be injured, and we expect to provide for further allowances. As I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin, this legislation will create a privileged class, and we will not only allow to them what is allowed in the general law for the benefit of soldiers, but we will absolutely take care of them throughout their natural lives?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not believe the war-insurance act would extend to one class of soldiers who are provided for under this resolution—these persons who are declarants for citizenship and who have joined these Polish and Czech and Slovak organizations, filled with the ambition to do what they can for the support of their different, separate countries abroad. I do not think they would come within the purview of the war-insurance act, because they are not members of the National Army. They are separate and distinct organizations, identified as separate units with the allied forces.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman will note that on lines 3, 4, and 5 of page 2, lawfully resident aliens who have been enlisted or conscripted can come back here, however, without being taken care of under the soldier's allowance.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is correct in that particular. For the one reason that this resolution adopts a policy for caring for these declarants who have enlisted for foreign service when they shall have become paupers, whatever may have been the cause of their injury, at the expense of the National Government. I think this motion to suspend the rules should be defeated.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I wanted to say to the gentleman that I do not think he is quite accurate in stating what he did in reference to the soldiers being cared for by the United States. We have I do not know how many places where we send these unfortunates. We send them to St. Elizabeths, across the river—civilians, soldiers, unfortunates, lunatics, who are taken care of by the Federal Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Such instances are incident to the government of the District of Columbia, but it has never been the policy, as the gentleman will admit, for the National Government to take care of foreigners coming to this country, suffering from injuries that are not related at all to the national service, as this bill proposes.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. But there is not any precedent for this situation, is there?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. That is why I am opposing this proviso. I wish to say to the Members of the House that we can not to-day forecast the burdens that will be thrown upon our Government by this war, and we should not at this moment establish a policy which will come to plague us in the future. This bill should be rejected under suspension of the rules, and then, if the gentleman wishes, under unanimous consent he can offer the bill without this proviso in it, and in that case I do not think there will be one objection. Under those circumstances those who would vote against this resolution under a suspension of the rules would not have their purposes misconstrued, because their purposes will be plain, of voting against this policy that has never been followed heretofore.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If this proviso is adopted, attempting to take care of these aliens who come back here injured or disabled from any cause, it will put a premium upon men who are slightly disabled undertaking to come back to this country and make themselves permanent public charges.

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be many abuses. One class of them would belong to the class indicated by the suggestion of the gentleman from Washington.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have no further objection to offer beyond that so ably stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]—the objection to undertaking to provide now, far in advance, for the care of men who may return to the United States who are in most cases only first-paper citizens, and in some cases not even first-paper citizens. I hope the gentleman in charge of this resolution will be willing to strike out that proviso from the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly if through misfortune some of these aliens after their return are so unfortunate as to become public charges somebody ought to bear the expense of their maintenance, inasmuch as they have gone over there to fight side by side with our own troops.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is agreed that they must be cared for, and in plenty of time proper plans will undoubtedly be made.

Mr. WALSH. Who does the gentleman think should be the proper authority to bear the expense?

Mr. MADDEN. I think, Mr. Speaker, in view of the provision in the last part of this resolution, which places the support of these people who are not able to take care of themselves on the Treasury of the United States, we ought to have a quorum present. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

During the roll call Mr. LONDON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. On this call 252 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have four minutes remaining. I was undertaking when the point of no quorum was made to restate the objections to the provision found on page 3, lines 9 to 13, which is the only part of this bill subject to much objection. The purpose of the bill is to permit first-paper aliens who have gone to war as part of our armies, and certain other aliens, namely the Czecko-Slovaks, to come back to the United States in case they become insane, break down, lose their legs, or are otherwise injured in the service. But there is attached to this bill, you will notice, a provision—that if any alien readmitted to the United States in pursuance of the terms hereof shall at any time thereafter become a public charge, the expense of maintenance and care shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

I understand that there is no serious objection to that proviso going out of the bill, and at some point during this debate, which is, of course, limited, I shall ask unanimous consent to strike that provision from the bill. I hope consent will be granted; because if these men return, and it is then discovered that they must be cared for, and if it is found that they should be cared for by the United States, then will be the time for Congress to make provision for them, including the hospitals, and provision as to the disposition of the allotments and allowances of the pay of those soldiers who have become crippled or insane, and are not citizens of the United States. By this provision we are taking several steps too far ahead, and might provide legislation that would be an incentive for first-paper aliens now in armies to remain as such rather than complete their naturalization as provided in a bill which this House passed only three days ago.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the language at the bottom of page 2. I should like to get the gentleman's version of it and should also like to hear some one in favor of this bill discuss that. I refer to the provision—and that any alien of either of the two foregoing descriptions who would otherwise be excluded under said section of the immigration act on the ground that he is idiotic, imbecile, feeble-minded, epileptic, insane, or has had one or more attacks of insanity, or on the ground that he is afflicted with constitutional psychopathic inferiority, tuberculosis, a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, or mental defect, shall be readmitted if it is proved that the disability was acquired while the alien was serving in the military forces of the United States or in an independent force of the kind hereinbefore described, if such alien returns to a port of the United States within one year after the termination of the war.

My inquiry is this: What does the gentleman think about the propriety or impropriety of admitting men who are idiotic, imbecile, feeble-minded, and whether or not such a state of mind can come to a man while he is in the Army? I always understood that those were diseases attaching at birth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I agree with the gentleman, by and large, but these words follow the phraseology of section 3 of the immigration law, which names classes of aliens to whom admission to the United States is denied. We follow the wording, leaving out only the words "chronic alcoholism," because we thought alien soldiers could hardly acquire that in the line of service, and if they did they should be barred from returning to the United States. But time for debate is limited, and what I want to discuss is the provision that the United States is to pay for all time the care of these afflicted persons. The clause should come out of the bill.

Mr. COX. I am with the gentleman. I think the bill ought to be defeated with that in it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In the hearings on the rehabilitation of wounded soldiers cases were cited where persons suffered from shell shock.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; that is a fearful thing, but I do not want to get into a discussion of that. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of an amendment to strike out the words beginning on line 9, page 3, which amendment I offer.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman ask that at the end of the debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is apparent. Under the present immigration law if an alien formerly residing here joins our Army or joins the Czecho-Slovak forces that are fighting against the central powers, should be shot to pieces and become disabled, and should be granted a discharge while in those countries and afterwards seeks readmission here, no matter how gallant and courageous he may have been, he would be excluded. That is the purpose of the bill. The objection seems to settle around the proviso. I want to state, gentlemen, that the proviso is no pet of mine or of the gentleman who introduced and reported this bill [Mr. SLAYDEN]. It would be perfectly agreeable and satisfactory, so far as I am concerned, to strike it out.

But gentlemen from States where these people will concentrate when they return felt that it would be an injustice to those States to be compelled to support these men who had fought in our Army—and you notice that those who fight with the Czecho-Slovaks have to be declarants, while those who join our Army do not have to be declarants if they should become public charges. Those who join the Czecho-Slovaks and fight the central powers must have been residents in this country, and also they must have taken out first papers before they can be admitted under this bill. There is a distinction there. The first part of it applies to the conditions of illiteracy, and so forth, and the second embraces those who have become idiotic, imbecile, feeble-minded, epileptic, and insane, and so forth, provided that the disability was acquired while the alien was serving in the military forces of the United States or in the independent forces referred to in the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information? In regard to this disability of constitutional psychopathic inferiority, that could not be contracted in the line of duty in the service. I do not know what it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. How does the gentleman know it could not be contracted in the service if he does not know what it is? I want to say that is in the immigration bill, and was put in this bill at the suggestion of the Bureau of Immigration and Department of Labor. This is a Department of Labor bill, as stated by my colleague on the committee [Mr. SLAYDEN], and the State Department indorses it and says it is very anxious for the passage of the bill, because the Secretary of State feels that it is only a matter of justice to these people. I do not care about that question of idiocy, and I do not care about the question of constitutional psychopathic inferiority.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They are features of the law from which we are exempting these people.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; and if no idiocy and constitutional psychopathic inferiority is incurred, we can not hurt anybody by including them, and therefore they are inoccuous.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will pardon me, I understand he has no objection to striking out this proviso at the end of the bill?

Mr. BURNETT. I have not, but I want to tell the House why it was put in there. Some members of the committee from States where most of these people would land or would come after landing felt that it would be unjust to them to have to take care of these people if they afterwards became public charges. That is why it was put in. It struck me with a good deal of force that if aliens who had gone into the Army and made gallant soldiers and incurred disabilities there and were readmitted should become charges in the States of New York or New Jersey or Massachusetts, or any other State, that the Government itself, for which they had been fighting, ought to pay the expenses of their care, and not the States to which they happen to go or in which they happen to be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We passed a bill here the other day, and I thought a very important one, to permit first-paper aliens to finish up their citizenship as they go into the Army.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He does not have to do that, and this would put a premium upon his staying a first-paper alien and have the future possibility of care forever by the United States.

Mr. BURNETT. So far as I am concerned, I am not going to object to striking it out. It is not my baby, but I felt it was perhaps a matter of justice to States where they would congregate. My colleague on the committee, Mr. SMITH of New York, has an amendment which I believe will meet all of the objections and make it perfectly fair, and that is to insert after the words "public charge" the words "by reason of disability incurred in service and in line of duty"; and I can not see, if they incurred these disabilities in the service and in line of duty, how there can be any objection. He will ask unanimous consent to have that inserted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, one year and one month ago to-day when the Congress of these United States declared war against the Imperial Government of Germany hundreds of thousands of Bohemians, Poles, and Slovaks in this country, anxious to show their appreciation of the blessings of freedom and liberty which they had enjoyed under the protection of our great Republic and eager to bestow upon all oppressed nations the blessings of liberty and democracy and to maintain it against the unscrupulous foe that threatens it, organized groups, companies, regiments, and, where the number permitted, whole divisions. Assisted by the Czecho-Slovak, Jugo-Slovak, and Polish organizations they crossed the ocean, joining the allied forces in all the different countries; some in France, some in Great Britain, and some in Italy, so that they could, without delay, immediately engage in the battle for liberty and democracy. [Applause.] They are there to-day, struggling, fighting, sacrificing their lives for our country and for our cause. [Great applause.]

A great majority of these men were still technically subjects of Austria-Hungary, and, in addition to all the hazards and dangers of war, fully realized that if captured they would not be treated as prisoners of war but would be considered traitors to Austria-Hungary and, as such, immediately executed. Notwithstanding this added danger during these 13 months these former residents of these United States have demonstrated to the allies and to the whole world their fearlessness, their determination, their devotion, and their loyalty to the cause to which we have consecrated our all. Reenforced by the thousands of their kinsmen who were able to escape from the Austro-Hungarian armies, they are to-day fighting under their Czecho-Slovak, Jugo-Slovak, and Polish flags, side by side with the gallant French, with the heroic British, and the loyal Italian armies, and, as long as it was possible, fought to death with the tottering Russian armies. Thousands upon thousands of these former residents of our country, fighting under their own banners, have not called for or received any aid or assistance from our Government.

Within the last three months whenever we heard from these men we at all times found them fighting to the bitter end with their slogan, "It is better to die for liberty a soldier than to be executed as a traitor." [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I am proud of their deeds and of their heroism, and when the history of this great war for freedom of the sens, rights of people, independence of all nations and nationalities and civilization is written the names of these brave men, who are sacrificing their lives, will form a large roll of honor. [Applause.] Would to God that they could all come back, but that we know is impossible. Some will have to make the supreme sacrifice, but we do know that some will come back to receive the plaudits and thanks of a Nation who will turn out to receive the saviors of liberty and democracy—true it is, some will come in full possession of their health, others will return minus limbs, minus hearing, or minus vision, but return they will, and when they do we, for whose liberty and safety they fought and bled and suffered, shall by this legislation—the least appreciation we can show—give them the privilege to come back to the country which they left for the purpose of defending its rights, its honor, its safety, and its heritage. [Applause.] With open arms should we receive them, with throbbing hearts and fast-beating pulsations as our eyes fill with happiness at the return of these brave men, and not a single obstruction nor a single restriction shall we place in their way.

Mr. Speaker, I know that our own boys will demonstrate, and have already demonstrated, their courage and their worth; but permit me, if you please, to make this distinction: They are fighting for a country of which they are citizens and a country which is leaving nothing undone to provide for their comfort and for the comfort of those they leave behind; but the men that this resolution is to assist are not our citizens, even though many have declared their intention to become such, and have not received, and as yet are not entitled to receive, the protection of our country and the provisions it makes for the comfort of its own citizens. Our soldiers receive a fair and reasonable compensation and are taken care of by way of our war-risk insurance law and other similar legislation; but those for whom I am pleading to-day receive no compensation whatsoever except the compensation of fighting and dying for a great and noble cause. For them there is no provision made for their dependents nor for pensions, and all that is asked to-day is that when, through their efforts combined with our gallant allies, this war shall have come to a victorious end for the allied forces and the cause of liberty, humanity, democracy, and civilization has triumphed—that when this time comes all these men, those who remain and desire to come back, if maimed or blind or deaf, shall be received and shall not be penalized because in defense of those principles perhaps the sacrifice they made disqualifies them from passing the physical or educational test. [Applause.]

The technical points raised against the resolution are so frivolous they are not entitled to any consideration. As to the last provision in the resolution, I care not whether it is stricken out or not, because I feel satisfied that very few of those who come back will ever become a charge upon our Government, and I know and pledge you my word that very few who are fighting in the Czecho-Slovak or Polish armies will ever become public charges. I know that they will be taken care of by the American-Czecho-Slovak, the American-Polish, and the American-Jugo-Slovak Alliance, who were instrumental in aiding them to have the distinction and honor to fight against the Hohenzollern and Hapsburg tyrannies. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have only feebly expressed my sentiments in this matter and I have only partially explained the provisions of this resolution. I hoped that my first resolution, introduced on February 6, 1918, would receive the favorable consideration of the committee. In this I have been disappointed, but nevertheless I am heartily in favor of the modified resolution and thankful for it. My joint resolution reads as follows:

[Feb. 6, 1918. Mr. SABATH introduced the following joint resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.]

Resolved, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, excluding from the United States aliens who are likely to become a public charge, or who are physically defective, or who are contract laborers, or who have come in consequence of advertisements for labor, printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country, or who are assisted by others to come, or whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another or by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, or who are stowaways, or who are illiterate, aliens lawfully resident within the United States at the time of enlistment or conscription who have enlisted or been conscripted, or hereafter shall be enlisted or conscripted, for the military service of the United States or any one of the cobelligerents of the United States in the present war, or who have enlisted and joined the Czecho-Slovak or Polish Army waging war against any of the central powers, who may, within two years after the termination of the war, apply for readmission to this country, after being honorably discharged or granted furlough abroad in connection with their enlistment or conscription, shall be readmitted; and any such lawfully resident aliens of the United States who would otherwise be excluded under said section of the immigration act on the ground that they are idiotic, imbecile, feeble-minded, epileptic, insane, or have had one or more attacks of insanity, or on ground that they are afflicted with constitutionally psychopathic inferiority, chronic alcoholism, tuberculosis, a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, or a mental defect, shall be readmitted if it is proved that the disability was acquired while the alien was serving in the military forces of the United States or of any one of the nations cobelligerents of the United States, or who have enlisted and joined the Czecho-Slovak and Polish Army waging war against any one of the central powers in the present war, and if such aliens return to a port of the United States within one year after the termination of the war; and the head tax assessed by section 2 of the said immigration act shall not be collected, or, if collected, shall be refunded in the cases of aliens readmitted to the United States in pursuance of the terms hereof; nor shall the absence abroad of aliens readmitted in pursuance of the provisions hereof be construed to interrupt the continuity of their residence in the United States within the meaning of section 4 of the naturalization act approved June 29, 1906, if the commanding officer of the military organization or branch thereof in which such alien has rendered military service certifies, in support of his petition for naturalization, that he has personal knowledge that such alien is a person of good moral character and is in every way qualified, in such officer's opinion, to be admitted as a citizen of the United States, and if any alien readmitted to the United States in pursuance of the terms hereof shall at any time thereafter become a public charge, the expense of his maintenance and care in the public institution to which he may be committed shall be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of the immigration act.

Permit me to say at this time, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the splendid services these people are rendering our cause I feel that it is our duty to follow the action of France and in official and proper manner recognize the cause of their brethren across the sea, and give official recognition to the Czecho-Slovak, Jugo-Slovak, and Polish armies as well as the Czecho-Slovak, Jugo-Slovak, and Polish independence. The French Republic on December 16, 1917, issued the following decree, recognizing the cause for which I am now pleading:

DECREES.

Article I. Czecho-Slovaks organized in an autonomous army and recognizing from the military standpoint the supreme authority of the French high command will fight under their own flag against the Central Empires.

Article II. This national army is placed from the political standpoint under the direction of the National Council for Czech and Slovak Lands, with headquarters in Paris.

Article III. The equipment of the Czecho-Slovak Army, as well as its further maintenance, is assured by the French Government.

Article IV. Provisions governing the French Army as regards organization, military ranks, administration, and discipline are applicable to the Czecho-Slovak Army.

Article V. The autonomous Czecho-Slovak Army is recruited:

1. From Czecho-Slovaks actually serving in the French Army;

2. From Czecho-Slovaks of other jurisdictons who may be permitted to transfer to the Czecho-Slovak Army or who may volunteer for service in this army for the duration of the war.

Article VI. Further ministerial instructions will govern the application of this decree.

Article VII The premier, the minister of war, and the minister of foreign affairs are charged, each in his own department, with the execution of this decree, which shall be published in the Journal Officiel of the French Republic and inserted in the Bulletin des Lois.

Done at Paris, the 16th day of December, 1917.

By the President of the Republic,

POINCARE.
PICHON,
Minister of Foreign Affairs.
CLEMENCEAU,
Premier and Minister of War.

Permit me also to insert, under the leave given me, the following solemn declaration of the General Assembly of the Bohemian Lands, held in Prague, January 6, 1918, which needs no explanation on my part:

[Solemn declaration of the General Assembly of the Bohemian Lands, held in Prague, January 6, 1918.]

In the fourth year of the terrible war which has already cost such immense sacrifices of the wealth and blood of nations, the first tentative peace parleys are going on. We Czech members of the parliament, that parliament which has been by judgments of illegal military courts deprived of many of its Slav deputies; further, we Czech deputies to the dissolved and not renewed Diet of the Kingdom of Bohemia, together with deputies of the Diet of the Margravate of Moravia which has not been convened during the war, and of last Diet of the Duchy of Silesia, ratify the declarations of the Czech deputies in the parliament and we deem it our duty to declare emphatically on behalf of the Czech Nation and of her Slovak branch held down by Hungary our attitude toward the reconstruction of international relations.

When the Czech deputies of our then recently revived nation during the Franco-German War made a declaration with reference to the European international questions, they used in their resolutions of December 8, 1870, the following solemn words:

"All nations, the small as well as the great, have an equal right to self-determination, and their equality in this regard should be respected. Only by recognizing this equality and respecting the right of every nation to shape its own destiny can mankind establish true equality and brotherhood, general peace, and genuine humanity."

We, the deputies of the Bohemian Nation, faithful to these principles of our predecessors, greet with joy the fact that now all the States built on the principles of democracy, whether belligerent or neutral, agree with us in looking upon the right of nations to free self-determination as the guaranty of a general and lasting peace.

The new Russia also in her attempt for a general peace adopted the principle of the right of nations to self-determination as one of the fundamental conditions of peace; she urged that nations should freely choose their own mode of life and determine whether they will construct their own independent state or form one common state with other nations.

As against that the representative of Austria-Hungary on behalf of the four allies declared that the question of the self-determination of nations that have not at present an independent position in any existing state should be solved by constitutional means. We deem it our duty to declare on behalf of the Czech Nation that the attitude of the Austro-Hungarian representative is not our attitude. On the contrary we have opposed it in all our declarations and motions, because from our innumerable bitter experiences we see in it the total negation of the principle of the self-determination of nations. We charge indignantly that our nation was robbed of her own independent state and of the right to determine her destinies and was placed by artfully contrived electoral schemes at the mercy of the German minority and made subject to the rule of German centralizing bureaucracy.

Our Slovak branch became a victim of Magyar brutality and unspeakable violence in a State which, in spite of its seemingly constitutional régime, has remained the darkest corner of Europe, and in which non-Magyar nations forming a majority, are oppressed and exterminated by the ruling minority, robbed of their children, without representation in parliament and administrative posts, without public schools, and deprived even of their private schools.

The constitution to which the Austro-Hungarian delegate appeals tampered even with the fairness of the universal manhood franchise by increasing artificially the representation of the German minority in parliament. Its absolute worthlessness, as far as the rights of the peoples are concerned, was demonstrated in an infamous manner by the brutal military absolutism during the war. Every reference to this constitution means in reality a denial of the right of self-determination of the non-German races of Austria, leaving them at the mercy of the Germans, and it means especially a coarse insult to the non-Magyar races of Hungary, where the constitution is merely the means by which the shameless oligarchy of a few high-born Magyar families maintains its rule, as has been once more proved by the last electoral-reform bill.

Our nation, like every other democracy of the world, desires a general and lasting peace. But it is fully conscious that only that peace will be lasting which will put an end to ancient wrongs, brutal force, and supremacy of cannon, as well as the rule of states and nations over other nations; that peace only will be lasting which will guarantee free development to nations great and small, and which will especially liberate those nations that are still subject to foreign dominion. It is therefore necessary that the right to a free national existence and self-determination of nations, great and small, of whatever State they may now be a part shall be the foundation of future international law, the guaranty of peace and friendly relations of nations, as well as the great ideal possession which will free humanity from the horrors of general war.

We, the representatives of the Bohemian Nation, declare that a peace which would not bring liberty to our nation could not and would not be for us peace, but only the beginning of a new, mighty, and thoroughgoing fight for political independence, in which our nation would employ to the utmost all its material and moral strength; and in this relentless struggle it would not pause until it reached its goal. Our nation reclaims this independence relying upon its historical State right. It is pervaded by an ardent desire that it shall, in its own sovereign, equal, democratic, and socially just State, erected on the principle of equality of all the citizens and within the historical limits of its territories, together with its Slovak branch, contribute to the new growth of mankind, in free competition with other free nations, on the foundation of liberty and brotherhood, granting freely in this national State full and equal rights to racial minorities.

Guided by these principles, we protest solemnly against the rejection of the right of nations to self-determination at the peace conference. We demand that in accordance with this principle all nations, including our own, shall be guaranteed participation at the peace congress and full liberty to defend their rights.

I also desire to insert an article appearing in the Chicago Daily News which, no doubt, will be very interesting to many who are not familiar with the aims and aspirations of Bohemia:

CZECH AND SLOVAK FIGHT FOR VICTORY—PROF. EDWARD BENES TELLS OF THEIR ACHIEVEMENTS AND ASPIRATIONS.

[By John F. Bass, special correspondent of the Evening Star and the Chicago Daily News.]

PARIS, FRANCE, April 5.

Edward Benes, former professor of the University of Prague, Bohemia, and secretary general of the National Council of the Czechs on the international position of Bohemia in the Europe of the future, has prepared a statement on the aims of his nation and their relation to the war.

In reading the statement of Prof. Benes one should not be influenced by the present military situation to conclude that the article is the dream of a deluded idealist and patriot. The forces of national life are far more permanent than those of war. Even now Italy is moving toward a revolution in her policy of 40 years. In Rome there has just been held a convention of the national committees of Austrian Slavs with committees of leading Italians, French, and English. They favor a confederation of Slav States out of Austria-Hungary and an alliance of these with Italy. In 1848 the unity of the Italian nation was as far if not farther from realization than is that of this Slav federation.

Prof. Benes's statement is as follows:

WANT CZECHO-SLOVAK STATE.

"The Czechs and Slovaks have always been hostile to Austria and Germany, and now hope to free themselves by the present war. There are 12,000,000 of them, and they occupy about 40,000 square kilometers. The creation of an independent Czecho-Slovak State would create an insurmountable obstacle to the imperialistic program of the Germans and Magyars (Hungarians).

"This new State would be supported by the Polish State on the north and by the Jugo-Slav State on the south. With the support of Italy this confederation would form a strong barrier against German expansion in the east and south.

"The problem of central Europe would thus be solved in a favorable manner for the allies and a just balance of power would be established. The disappearance of the present Austria-Hungary—and the application of the principles of national independence leads to that logically—means the incalculable weakening of Germany, the abolition of an odious régime, and the end of continual disorder. But in order to erect the barrier it would be necessary to work out in central Europe a new political system which would replace the old Austria-Hungary now allied to Germany. In this system Bohemia would occupy an exceptional position. That position we are about to examine, taking into consideration the part that Italy will play in the Europe of the future.

BOHEMIA WOULD BE CENTER.

"The international position of Bohemia, because of her geographical situation, would be of primary importance for all European politics. Bohemia would be the center around which a certain number of States would group themselves. Their political needs would lead them toward a close union with the Czecho-Slovak State.

"To create an economic Czecho-Polish block means to erect an insurmountable obstacle to 'Mittel Europa.' The Czechs are sufficiently strong economically to defend themselves against Germany. They have at their disposal the vast economic territory of Poland, where they could find an outlet for their industries. They would, on the one hand, grow stronger, and, on the other hand, they would give Poland means of resistance against Germany's economic policy, and at the same time help Poland to create a national industry. This would give Bohemia a port for her use. Dantzig, once in Polish hands, would connect the economic life of Bohemia with the sea, and would associate Bohemia still more closely with Poland, which would be of mutual advantage to both. The political, economic, and moral interests of Poland and Bohemia being the same, there is no danger that Polish and Czech policies could ever be at variance.

"The Czecho-Polish combination would render absolutely impossible a new danger for western Europe—that is to say, the creating of a new triple alliance of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Poland—a danger which would be real if Poland were left all alone at the side of Germany.

"A defensive political and economic alliance against Germany would inevitably be concluded also between the Czechs and Slovaks and the Jugo-Slavs, when the latter are once free. An analogous policy would be put into effect with the Magyars in order to put them into a situation where they could do no more harm.

THEIR RELATIONS TO ITALY.

"In the question of the Adriatic and the relations between the Italians and the Jugo-Slavs, the Czechs and Slovaks are directly interested, and are formulating their ideas on both subjects in a very definite manner. This is how the question looks to them:

"The Czechs and Slovaks consider as one of the essential articles of their own political program the unification of all the Jugo-Slavs without exception.

"The best proof of premeditation on the part of Austria-Hungary is the way in which she has muzzled the non-German peoples, who have never participated in the plans of Berlin or Vienna, in order to assure the domination of the German race. Austria foresaw resistance and prepared for it in advance. Among the people from whom she had most to fear she counted the Czechs.

"Finally the Czech soldiers refused to fight for Austria. During the campaigns of Serbia and Galicia they succeeded in discouraging and demoralizing the Austro-Hungarian Army. To estimate properly the damage that they have done to the Austro-German cause it would be necessary to follow the conduct of the Czech soldiers in minute detail. This conduct of the Czech population and their soldiers led to savage reprisals on the part of the Austrian Government.

"All political life was suspended. The opposition parties were dissolved. All the principal leaders who had not succeeded in getting out of the country were put into prison. Everybody who was considered dangerous—professors, journalists, and publicists—was imprisoned or sent into terrible concentration camps, where life was worse than death.

REPRESENTED IN UNITED STATES.

"In America, Russia, Italy, and elsewhere there are sections of the council. It is above all due to the efforts of the Czechs of the United States that the movement has done so well. Over 1,500,000 Czechs and Slovaks are living in the United States, and at the beginning of the war they set themselves two tasks: First, to raise the necessary money from the Czech movement abroad, and, second, to work against German plans in the United States. In the first they have been successful, though enormous sums have been required. As for the second, the results of their efforts against Bernstorff, Boy-Ed, and other German spies are only beginning to be known.

"The crowning success of all this toil was the constitution of the national Czech and Slovak Army in France on December 16, 1917."

I also wish to insert extracts from a resolution of the Bohemian Socialistic Party of America appealing to the Socialistic Party of America, asking for the repeal of the resolution adopted at the St. Louis convention and declaring in favor of war against the central powers and for the crushing of German militarism and Austrian oppression, showing thereby the proper spirit, patriotism, and loyalty to our country, which appeal should by right be favorably considered by the Socialistic Party, and that without delay:

To the Socialist Party of America:

The Bohemian Federation of the Socialist Party of America considers it its socialist duty to raise its voice at this time to the Socialist Party of America in an urgent appeal that she change her attitude toward the present war in this trying hour of struggle for democratic principles, and that she take a stand, after the example of labor parties in the allied nations, on the side of its own country. The Bohemian Federation of the Socialist Party and the organized Bohemian Workers in America generally felt from the very beginning of the war warm sympathies with the workers of the allied countries and approved their attitude toward the war. The Bohemian Federation of Socialist Party of America welcomed the grave voice of this country when she, after the outbreak of the Russian revolution, as if conscious of the trying moments that were to overtake the Russian people, arose to stand by the side of the young Russian democracy and thus to secure the victory of the Russian people.

The Bohemian Federation opposed, by a great majority of its votes, the well-known resolution of the St. Louis convention and thus testified unmistakably to its fundamentally different view of the present war.

The Bohemian Federation of the Socialist Party of America demands that the standpoint taken in the above referred to resolution be abandoned, for the development of affairs in Russia demonstrated beyond a shadow of doubt its untenability, and particularly the ideas expressed in the following declarations: "It is not a war against the militarist régime of the central powers." "It is not a war to advance the cause of democracy in Europe." "In all modern history there has been no war more unjustifiable than the war in which we are about to engage."

* * * * * * *

We consider it our duty as socialists to urge most earnestly the Socialist Party in the United States to take, now, at least, in the interest of Russia, which is being strangled, an attitude of utmost seriousness, fully appreciative of the demands of this critical moment of history. Shall the great revolution that is marching through the world pass by without the proletariat of this country entering it as an active, progressive force?

* * * * * * *

We demand, with the full weight of our Socialist vote, that the Socialist Party of America declare in favor of the war against the central powers; that it offer this Republic all its loyal assistance and support against the outer and inner enemy everywhere, where the social and democratic interests of this country suffer in any way whatsoever.

Bohemian socialist workers always did and always will stand firmly upon this principle. In the war of nations, which was transformed into the greatest revolution of the suffering masses of humanity, we march on with our American Nation toward the great goal of a better future.

German militarism must be crushed, because "the world must be made safe for socialism and democracy."

CHICAGO, ILL., February 25, 1919.

Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate to the world that we stand by the President and that the entire country is united in this battle for freedom, democracy, and the independence of all nations, and calling attention to the memorable words of our President to the Congress of the United States on the eve of our entrance in this great conflict, wherein he said:

We shall fight for the things which we have carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the rights of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all peoples and make the world itself at last free.

I feel that it is our duty not only to adopt unanimously this resolution, but to also adopt a resolution giving assurance to the oppressed and dominated nations, who have suffered and are suffering to-day for the cause. That we recognize their aims and aspirations and that their cause is our cause and that we stand ready and willing to give them any and all assistance, the same as we are giving the allied forces, and will insist that all these nations shall have their deserved independence for which they have suffered and bled, sacrificed their lives and all. To that end, Mr. Speaker, I shall introduce a resolution providing for the recognition of their independence and assuring them of our loyal, undivided support. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to use some of his time now.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether there will be more than one speech on the gentleman's side?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am going to yield one minute to my colleague, Mr. SMITH, to make a request, and then I shall use the three minutes remaining.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman wish me to yield one minute of my time?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would be very much obliged for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, of the five minutes remaining, which I have in my control, I yield one of them to the gentleman from Texas for his use.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill applies to two different classes, one aliens who have enlisted or been conscripted and the other those of certain nationalities who have joined separate organizations and are not a part of our National Army. The effect of this proviso as to the first class, as has been pointed out here, will be that you will be giving the aliens who have voluntarily enlisted in our National Army or who have been conscripted not only the compensation which is provided by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, which gives compensation to every enlisted man in the National Army, but you give him the additional advantage of maintenance and care on the part of the National Government. That shows the impracticability of legislating at this time on this great question as how the National Government should, if ever, take care of those who have received injuries in service abroad.

Further, under this proviso here the States could go to any extent in maintaining and caring for those individuals regardless, as I pointed out in my opening statement, as to the origin of the injury, and the National Government immediately will be obliged to pay every cent for their maintenance and care. We are not in a position to consider and we should not be considering at the present time the adoption of a policy by the National Government of maintaining and caring for aliens who have voluntarily enlisted or been conscripted, or for those declarants who have joined separate units apart from our Army who are fighting on the battle front. What should be done here is to vote down this motion to suspend the rules and then there will be no objection whatever to the consideration of this bill without the proviso. I believe it will go through under unanimous consent, certainly under suspension of the rules. This idea of having the National Government for the first time bear the expenses of their care and maintenance, not if disabled in battle for any subsequent cause, should be gone over thoroughly by a committee so that we can provide for that situation, if at all, deliberately.

Is there anyone here who maintains that this is an opportune moment that the National Government should bear every item of the expense for maintenance and care of those persons who return to this country within one year after the outbreak of war? That shows beyond question that this proviso should be stricken out and then left to a subsequent committee to report on this separate provision. This proviso has nothing whatever to do with this bill. We all agree that these persons should have the right to be returned to this country regardless of the naturalization law. Why should this extraneous matter be brought in here by somebody, perhaps representing some seaport, who has not given full consideration to the subject? Let us vote down the motion to suspend the rule, and then this bill will go through with the proviso left out.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will now yield to the gentleman from Illinois, if I have any time remaining.

Mr. SABATH. I am not greatly interested in the proviso——

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I will ask unanimous consent——

Mr. SABATH. But I wish to state this, that before these men go over they are examined by three different physicians; they are subject to a full examination, and none but healthy men capable of service are taken abroad.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to suspend the rules be modified to the extent of suspending the rules and passing House joint resolution 255 with the proviso left out.

Mr. RAKER Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I will have to object to that unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California objects.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH] for a minute.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 12, after the word "charge," insert the words "by reason of disability incurred in said service."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this proviso should be amended in many particulars, and for that reason I object.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to imperil the passage of the bill by insisting that the proviso remain. So far as I am concerned, therefore, I am willing to consent to have it stricken out in its entirety. I feel, however, that with the amendment which I have suggested the proviso ought to be inserted. There is no reason why local communities should have to bear the expense of maintaining men who have been fighting the enemies of the United States. And that is the reason why the provision was originally inserted in the measure.

Mr. CRAMTON. Many of the aliens covered by the proposed bill are serving in our own armies and are receiving the same pay as our own citizens serving beside them and are assured the same benefits accruing under our war-risk insurance act. If our own citizens are incapacitated for self-support by their military service the Federal Government assumes no responsibility for their support when they return home other than the aid given under the war-risk insurance act. Anything needed beyond that the local communities will have to supply. Why should the Federal Government extend to these aliens relief greater than it provides for our own citizens?

Mr. STAFFORD. These men are foreigners who, whether they volunteer or are conscripted, will, under the war-risk act, have a pensionable status.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH] has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me. I wish to withdraw my objection to the application of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. I was opposed to this in the committee, and after it was reported out I thought I ought to maintain my position here on the floor. But I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] renews his request for unanimous consent to offer an amendment to strike out the proviso. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the striking out of the proviso.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the Senate joint resolution.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WIDOWS' PENSIONS—AMENDING CHAPTER 470, STATUTES AT LARGE.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of passing the bill H. R. 9093.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9093) to amend the act approved September 8, 1916, chapter 470, Statutes at Large, Sixty-fourth Congress, relating to pensions.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9093) to amend the act approved September 8, 1916, chapter 470, Statutes at Large, Sixty-fourth Congress, relating to pensions.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of Congress approved September 8, 1916, chapter 470, Statutes at Large, Sixty-fourth Congress, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any widow of an officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War whose name was placed or shall hereafter be placed on the pension roll, under any existing law, and whose name has been or shall hereafter be dropped from said pension roll by reason of her marriage to another person who has since died or shall hereafter die, or from whom she has been heretofore or shall be hereafter divorced upon her own application and without fault on her part, shall be entitled to have her name again placed on the pension roll at the rate allowed by the law under which she was formerly pensioned, and the law or laws amendatory thereof, unless she be entitled to a greater rate of pension under the provisions of section 1 of this act, such pension to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act: Provided, however, That where the pension of said widow on her second or subsequent marriage has accrued to a helpless or idiotic child, or a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to renewal under this act unless said helpless or idiotic child, or child or children under 16 years of age, be then a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to said widow payment of pension to said child or children shall cease: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall be extended to those widows, otherwise entitled, whose husbands died of wounds, injuries, or disease incurred during the period of their military or naval service, but who were deprived of pension under the act of March 3, 1865, because of their failure to draw any pension by reason of their remarriage, and to any person who was lawfully married to an officer or enlisted man, who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged therefrom and has since deceased, and who, having remarried since his death is again a widow, or has been divorced from her last husband upon her own application without fault on her part and who, otherwise entitled, was barred by reason of such remarriage from receiving pension under any existing law, or was barred by reason of her having married the soldier subsequent to June 27, 1890.

"This section shall apply to cases where there has been one, or more than one, marriage after the death of the soldier, if it be shown that such successive marriage was dissolved by the death of the husband or by divorce upon the application of the wife and without fault on her part; and this section shall apply to claims filed subsequent to September 8, 1916."

REAPPOINTMENT OF CONFEREE.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Ohio begins, the other day the Chair was informed that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], who was one of the conferees on a House bill, was away and probably would not be back, and he appointed the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY]. It turns out that Mr. AUSTIN got back here on Saturday and actually signed the conference report, and therefore the Chair revokes the appointment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and reappoints the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. LANGLEY. Which is perfectly satisfactory to the "gentleman from Kentucky."

WIDOWS' PENSIONS—AMENDING CHAPTER 470, STATUTES AT LARGE.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks only to clear up and carry out the original intent of Congress when it passed the widows' pension bill. The widows' bill was passed by the House on June 17, 1916, by the Senate on September 7, and signed by the President and became a law on September 8, 1916. I might state that it was the last bill signed by the President before the adjournment of that session of Congress. I believe that I am qualified to speak with some little knowledge and authority when I say it was the intent and understanding of the Congress to do the things this bill now before you will accomplish. I make this statement because I prepared and introduced the bill. I was a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions which considered the bill and reported it to the House. I appeared before the Senate Pension Committee and explained the provisions of the bill to the Senate committee. The report of the Senate committee was almost a verbatim report of the House report, so that it is evident that both the House and Senate had a like understanding of the intent and purposes of the bill. This bill before you to-day, therefore, really contains no new legislation and ought not be long debated or receive a single negative vote. I will therefore be as brief as possible in explaining as best I can the bill now under consideration.

The act of September 8, 1916, undertook to pension four classes of Civil War widows. Only two, however, are under consideration at this time, as the other two provisions of the original bill were satisfactorily construed by the Pension Department. It was clearly intended to pension remarried widows, but the Commissioner of Pensions held, after a large number of cases had been favorably considered and placed upon the pension roll, that a widow who contracted more than one marriage was not entitled to a pension under the Ashbrook law.

If you will refer to the letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, printed in the report accompanying this bill, you will observe that the ruling of the Pension Department was not sustained by the Interior Department until March 27, 1917, and before that decision was announced a large number of claims of widows who had contracted more than one marriage had been allowed and are now on the pension rolls and receiving a pension. Possibly 1,500 or more widows whose claims were not allowed before the decision was made are therefore denied a pension, although their cases are just as meritorious and deserving as those who were fortunate enough to have their claims allowed. This is an injustice that I am sure you will desire to rectify.

I regret that it has been so long delayed. One thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine soldiers' widows died during March last, and, like the old veterans, they are dying very rapidly. I have been striving ever since the adverse ruling was made to have this measure brought before the House, but during the extra session last summer, as you all know, it was impossible to bring any legislation before the House except war legislation. I have been striving ever since December to get this bill up, as the Speaker will corroborate, but, like many other important bills, it had to give way to war measures and bills considered more important. However, I am glad at this late hour to have the opportunity to bring this bill to the attention of the Congress, and I am sure that it will be passed without objection. I am sure that you all appreciate how much these poor women need the pension justly due them in these days of high prices when we can hardly make ends meet on our own salaries. Nearly all are old and unable to properly support themselves. We have to-day given the old soldiers a substantial increase in their pensions by the passage of the Sherwood bill, and now before this good day is ended let us correct the injustice that has been done these faithful old widows who have not benefited by the law which I am proud to have bear my name. There is no dispute on the part of anyone here that it was the intention of Congress that all Civil War widows who were married previous to June 27, 1905, to an honorably discharged soldier who had served 90 days should be pensioned regardless of the number of times she had married.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think—and I base my opinion upon a careful reading of that decision—that technically the commissioner's ruling was probably correct. But I think it was too rigid a construction of the act. If you will make a careful analysis of the language of your original act, I believe that, as a lawyer, you will agree that as a purely legal proposition the ruling was correct, although it was not the intention of the committee or of Congress, of course, that the bill should be so construed.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think that everybody who gave this bill any consideration knows that it was not the intention of the Congress to bar widows who had contracted more than one marriage. But the unfortunate thing about the bill was that it was written in the singular and not in the plural. If it had read "more than one marriage" or "person or persons," the plural and not the singular, the Commissioner of Pensions advised me that this adverse ruling would not have been made.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do.

Mr. SNOOK. Has my colleague any information as to how many widows this will affect? Has he any figures on the subject?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If I am not mistaken, the Commissioner of Pensions told me there are about 1,500 widows who have been denied a pension because they had contracted more than one marriage.

Mr. SNOOK. A small number.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; a very small number.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. What amount of money will the Treasury be required to pay out to make good the proposed pensions intended to be allowed by this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am unable to tell the gentleman just how much money it will cost, but the amount will be insignificant. It was clearly the intention of Congress to give these widows a pension, and whether it will cost $100,000 or $1,000,000 or more, I do not think Congress ought to hesitate to put the correct interpretation upon this law.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is a matter of having the construction placed on the law that was the original intention of Congress when the bill was passed.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There is no doubt but it was the original intention of Congress to include remarried widows or widows who contracted more than one marriage.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that there will be about 1,500 benefited. They are now drawing $20 under the Ashbrook bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman is mistaken; some may be drawing $12 under the old law, but the majority are not now on the pension roll.

Mr. RUSSELL. It will be an increase of $8 per month. You can multiply that by 1,500.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It will certainly include many widows who are not now on the pension rolls.

Mr. ROBBINS. These widows that you propose to pension now are not on the pension roll at all. Is not that the fact?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The great majority are not on the pension roll at all.

Mr. ROBBINS. They go on the roll at $25?

Mr. ASHBROOK. They go on at $25.

Mr. LANGLEY. A good many may have been at some time on the roll and forfeited the pension by remarriage. Then they remarried again, without having been restored to the rolls, as they could not under existing law. It was, of course, our intention to include these, and that is what the pending bill does.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. The intention of this bill is to correct a technical error in the former bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes. That is all.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] in his statement. To my mind, had the Bureau of Pensions given the former legislation just an ordinarily liberal construction this bill would not be necessary. Their decision was based upon the word "widow" up in the beginning of the section; but there was language in the bill that would fully describe just the people whom the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] is now trying to reach; such language as this—

> That any person who was lawfully married to an officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged therefrom and has since deceased, and who, having remarried since his death is again a widow.

There is no limitation as to the number of remarriages; and if there is any virtue in the matter of being remarried, then these widows who remarry twice after the death of the soldier ought to be more sure of a pension than the others. It was only on the strictest policy of construction imaginable that the department made its ruling. I have been in sympathy with the gentleman's efforts. I know how carefully he has worked to right this injustice, and I hope he may succeed with his measure to-day.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] for what he has had to say, and I wish to inform the House that the gentleman from Michigan appeared with me before the Assistant Secretary of the Interior to argue this very case, and I know that he has also made every effort that he could to have the correct interpretation placed upon this law.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to indorse the gentleman's statement, as to the activity of both the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

Mr. ASHBROOK. And I am also glad to include the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and any other gentleman who desires to join with me in helping these needy old women who tenderly and faithfully looked after the comfort and welfare of some old soldier who gallantly responded to his country's call in those dark days of more than a half century ago.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thank the gentleman; but what I wished to say, Mr. Speaker, was that the statement of the gentleman from Michigan does not in fact conflict with what I said, which was, that while I thought it was too strict a construction, technically the commissioners' ruling was correct, and the fact that it had been sustained by the law officers of the Interior Department sustains what I am saying. I served with some of them for several years, and I know they have some excellent legal talent. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is a very able, level-headed man, but I believe he is not a lawyer. I agree with him that the broad, common-sense, liberal view that should be taken of these pension statutes would have warranted the opposite construction, but technically the construction was correct, following the rule of strict construction, which ought not to obtain in cases like this.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I want the House to understand that the Commissioner of Pensions, before this ruling was made, allowed a large number of claims of widows who had contracted more than one marriage, and those widows are now on the pension roll and receiving pensions. After this adverse ruling was made, widows who had contracted more than one marriage were denied a pension. I do not criticize the Commissioner of Pensions, who is an old soldier himself, and I know is friendly to pensions and pension legislation, but must, of course, execute the laws with justice and impartiality. Mr. Saltzgaber has cordially cooperated with me to have the Ashbrook law amended, as is evidenced by the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, December 12, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ASHBROOK: Knowing how you felt about the exclusion of some widows of soldiers who had, after the soldier's death, contracted more than one marriage, I am sending you herewith a provision which contains pertinent language, prepared by one of the most competent persons in the Pension Bureau, to effect the purpose of putting all of those widows upon the roll and to give them the benefit of the pension laws.

This proviso could be inserted as an amendment to the end of section 2 of the act of September 6, 1916, of which you were the author, or it could be added as a clause in the pension appropriation bill.

The decision of the Secretary overruling the Lamb decision occurred March 27, 1917. Before that, under the former practice of the Pension Bureau, there had been placed on the roll a large number of widows who had been married twice or more subsequent to the death of the soldier husband. They were allowed to remain on the pension roll under the well-known rule that decisions arrived at under a former interpretation of the law would not be disturbed. Now we have the anomalous situation of perhaps five or six hundred women, under those circumstances, being upon the roll and receiving the benefit of the said act of September 8, 1916, while there are many hundreds of other women under like circumstances who are excluded.

It will please me very much if you are able to remedy this situation and allow them all to go upon the pension roll.

Cordially, yours,

G. M. SALTZGABER, Commissioner.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under what construction of law does the Commissioner of Pensions deny applicants who have married more than once and yet retain on the pension roll several hundred others having the same status who have been awarded pensions? If there is no authority of law for granting pensions to the applicants, why is there authority of law to pay out money to those who have been granted pensions under an erroneous construction of the law?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Under what the commissioner claims to be an erroneous construction of the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under what the commissioner claims to be an erroneous construction of the law.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that it is the policy of the Pension Department that when a claim has been allowed if some other construction of the law is later made the claims that have been allowed will not be disturbed.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many are now on the pension rolls who are receiving pensions under former constructions of the law where subsequent constructions would not entitle them to pensions?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have no doubt that there are a great many. In this particular instance I believe there are more who are now receiving pensions under the first construction of the widows' law than will be benefited by the passage of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a very peculiar administration of the pension law, that when a department head construes the law to mean that there is no warrant for a certain payment of money they will continue to pay the money out to persons in an identical status, but will decline to pay to those who apply subsequently.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say further to the gentleman that I have here a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, dated December 12, 1917, from which I quote:

The decision of the Secretary, overruling the Lamb decision, occurred March 27, 1917. Before that, under the former practice of the Pension Bureau, there had been placed on the roll a large number of widows who had been married twice or more, subsequent to the death of the soldier husband. They were allowed to remain on the pension roll under the well-known rule that decisions arrived at under a former interpretation of the laws would not be disturbed.

Mr. BURNETT. Has that been the uniform rule?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; I believe it has.

Mr. BURNETT. I know a number of Confederate soldiers who were taken out at Rock Island and sent to fight on the frontier, and the commissioner first held that they were entitled to a pension. HOKE SMITH decided that they were not, and they were taken off the roll. Another commissioner decided that they were, and they were put back onto the roll; another commissioner decided differently, and they were stricken off the roll; and then another decided another way, and they were put on and are still there.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Possibly, the gentleman is right. I know of one or two instances where the soldiers were on the roll, but were stricken off and are not now receiving a pension.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to say that those cases are of an entirely different character. There was involved in those cases questions that are not in any sense on all fours with this case.

Mr. BURNETT. There is one further question I desire to ask. Is this bill retroactive? Under a correct interpretation of the law, would it give those widows pensions who would have been entitled to a pension?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The original act says that the pension shall begin from the filing of the application. My opinion is that if this interpretation which we seek to put upon the act becomes a law they will receive a pension from the time they file their application.

Mr. FIELDS. If there is any question about the construction, ought it not be remedied in the bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. There can be no question of construction about it, as I understand it. The author of the bill and the Pension Office officials have agreed upon the phraseology that will accomplish the objects we have in view.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The original law says from the date of the application. Of course, widows who have not filed an application would not receive a pension until they did file the application.

Mr. FIELDS. Why should it not say following their application under the law of 1916? Many of them had filed applications but they were rejected for the reason that they were married twice.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Those who have filed their applications will hardly be required to file another application.

Mr. FIELDS. That is what I wanted to be sure of.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman think that the bill ought to read that such pensions shall commence from the date of filing the application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act as herein amended? Because Congress has not passed a law authorizing this, or it would not be passing it now.

Mr. LANGLEY. This is a bill to construe the other act.

Mr. BLACK. Will not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to modify the bill so that the claims will date from the passage of the act as herein amended?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I should object to that. The effect of that would be to keep out all of those widows who remarried from the time of the adverse ruling up to this time. All those claims are now pending, and it would be absolutely unjust.

Why should they be kept out; why discriminate in favor of some and not others?

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not understand that that would be the effect of it. If it is, I am against it, of course.

Mr ASHBROOK. As I understand, the gentleman's object is to do the very thing that the bill will do.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Texas says "after the passage of the amended act." That would cut out all those who had contracted marriage in the meantime.

Mr. FIELDS. You might say "after the passage of the act of 1916." Was it not the gentleman's opinion that the widows would be pensioned under the other act?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; but I will admit that, in the light of my past experiences, I am not much of a prophet on the construction the legal department of the Pension Office may take on this or any other pension bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Can the gentleman tell how the Pension Bureau will construe it?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that I first introduced a bill and submitted it to the Commissioner of Pensions. He reviewed it, made suggestions relative to the things I sought to do, and I then acted upon his suggestions and reintroduced the bill, and it has the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I call the gentleman's attention to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas. If he desires to accomplish what he seeks by his suggestion, he must do it by adding another section to the bill. He could not jump it into the middle of the bill in the manner he seeks to do without affecting the interpretation of the entire measure in other particulars.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, before I reserve the balance of my time I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry. The bill as reprinted after it was reported to the House contains an error. On page 3, line 16, the word "each" occurs, when it should read "such"; and, if necessary to offer an amendment, I wish to now offer it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to correct the wording of the bill, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk says that in the print that he has there is no word "each" in line 16.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is, line 21.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Evidently I have a different print.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman thinks the word "each" ought to be substituted for the word "such"?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the confusion is due to the fact that the bill was first placed on the House calendar and was stricken from that calendar and placed on the Union Calendar, which changed the lines.

The SPEAKER. Which bill is it that the gentleman has?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I did have the bill which was on the House Calendar, and the amendment should properly come in line 21 of the bill on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. How much time for debate is there on each side of this question?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes. The gentleman from Ohio has used up his time, but the Chair thought he would put this motion if he could find out where it is.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, in the bill on the Union Calendar No. 8, report No. 254, on page 3, line 21, the word "such" should be "each."

Mr. CRAMTON. Does not the gentleman think the language should be "each such successive marriage," using both words?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am quite willing to take the advice and suggestion of the Commissioner of Pensions. He called my attention to this error in the reprint of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 21, strike out the word "such" and insert the word "each."

The SPEAKER. Is that the way the gentleman wants it?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is it.

Mr. CANNON. Does this take care of the widow who has married the third time?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; or the fourth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to offering this amendment?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], who desires to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion which has been made to suspend the rules and pass this bill be modified so as to provide for an amendment on line 17, page 2, after the word "this," by adding the word "amended," so that it will read "after the passage of this amended act."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is aware that we are amending section 2 of the act passed on September 8, 1916.

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There might be applications pending under other classes to which the amendment of the committee has no relevancy whatever, and at the present time have not been adjudicated, and yet with the gentleman's amendment they would be denied a pension until this amended act was passed. The gentleman will realize the injustice that would be done under that condition.

Mr. BLACK. What I am trying to do is to prevent an injustice that will be done to the Treasury if the amended act we are about to pass is made a retroactive act, and these pensions that have been disallowed are dated back to the time of filing the claim in the Pension Bureau after the passage of the original act. I do not think that should be done, but that all such classes of claims should date from the passage of this amended act.

Mr. LANGLEY. Where would the injustice come in?

Mr. BLACK. Because Congress has never passed any law of that kind, and it takes this law to give them that status. The very fact that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has reported this bill is sufficient proof within itself that the classes of claims which it is intended to cover now have no pensionable status.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, It seems clear to me that this bill, if it is passed, ought to deal fairly as between all persons who are entitled to pensions; that the widows who have applied heretofore and have been denied pensions under what was clearly an unwise construction, because it was a construction contrary to the intention of this House, should not be discriminated against, while others who applied at an earlier date have been carried on the pension rolls despite this ruling. I suggest that we amend the bill by adding section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. Pensions granted under this act shall be payable and paid from the date of the filing of the application therefor heretofore or hereafter.

That makes the act take effect from the time of the filing of the application, and it puts all applicants on the same basis. Of course they should not have a pension until they have applied for it. They should be reasonably diligent, but, on the other hand, the bureau should not be continually giving unwise or unjust or unfair rulings—rulings contrary to the intention of this House.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course it could not be section 3, because the original bill has section 3. The gentleman will have to add another paragraph to this bill or else make it section 2 of this bill. He could not have section 3, because there is a section 3.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. WALSH. Simply add another paragraph.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Add as a paragraph, striking out section 3?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It seems to me that the amendment suggested would make the bill fair, just, and reasonable as between the various applicants. It would carry out the intention of this House. We ought to insist with the department when we pass a law that we are going to have it construed according to its purpose, according to a fair interpretation of the language, according to what the House intended to do, and in passing this amendment we are simply insisting upon a construction of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would the gentleman change the present bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not know whether the amendment changes it or not, but it does make it plain.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under the present bill they get it from the time of the application, whether before or after.

Mr. DEMPSEY. You might get it and you might not; this is to make the meaning plain and beyond question.

Mr. FIELDS. According to the gentleman's amendment they would get it from the time the application is filed.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. According to the language in lines 15 and 16, page 2——

Mr. DEMPSEY. This is to avoid any question as to construction. My experience with the bureau has been that it gives the most narrow and the most illiberal construction it can, and if we give them this language it seems to me we will not have any doubt about it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I misunderstood the purpose of the gentleman from Texas when I indicated my concurrence in the amendment he suggested a while ago. Now that I understand the purport of it, I am opposed to it, and I am in favor of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], because there is no question but what it would be a rank injustice to permit this misconstruction of what was the clear purpose of the committee and of the Congress in passing the act of 1916, to deprive those who were the victims of the commissioner's ruling of what we intended them to have and what many other remarried widows have in fact received, whose cases are exactly the same.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. In a moment. To deprive some widows of part of the benefits of this act of September 8, 1916, while others are not so discriminated against, would be unjust and indefensible. Now I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will give the gentleman an illustration of the kind of construction that we get in the Pension Department. A man was discharged from the service and his discharge certificate stated his age. The day he was born of course affects his pensionable status, the amount to be paid depending upon his age, and the Pension Department refuses to accept that certificate of discharge which gives his age at the time when there was no object at all in stating it falsely by an officer charged with that duty, and they substitute for it and instead of it the census age which they say was taken at a certain time in that locality.

Mr. LANGLEY. I agree with the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, in his statement that the department is too rigid in construing the pension laws sometimes, and the case the gentleman gives is one illustration of it, and its construction of the Ashbrook Act is another. I thought the gentleman from Ohio had consulted the bureau, and had so framed the bill that there could be no question about the retroactive effect of the bill, so as to give a pension to all remarried widows, regardless of the number of remarriages, as we really intended by the act of 1916, and date the pension back so as to put them all on the same footing, and if there is any doubt about that as the bill is now phrased, I think the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York ought to be adopted.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I just wish to make this statement to the House. After further reading and considering this bill, I am of the opinion that the pension will begin from the date of the filing of the application under this amended law, because, if you read lines 15 and 17, the language states:

Such pension to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act.

Mr. LANGLEY. That was not the intention of the author of the bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That was not the intention, and I think it should be amended so that the pension will begin from the filing of the application under the old law.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 7, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Public Health Service in the treatment of patients for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1078); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Department of State for printing and binding for the Pan American Union, fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. 1079); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Department of State for contingent expense, foreign missions, fiscal year 1918 (H. 4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of Labor submitting a proposed paragraph of legislation extending for the fiscal year 1919 the appropriation made in the act of March 28, 1918, for advancing transportation to wage earners (H. Doc. No. 1081); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of War submitting a proposed clause of legislation authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to allow and credit in the accounts of Capt. No. 1082); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 7, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we desire to approach Thee in deep humility of soul. Thou art the great God who inhabiteth eternity. Thou art the creator of all worlds, the preserver of all things, and the judge of all men. Thou hast a right, therefore, to demand our service. May we render unto Thee the glory which is due unto Thy name. Day by day may we walk under the shadow of the Almighty.

Bless Thy servants as they enter upon the task of this day. Give them wisdom and grace to meet the great responsibilities under which they rest. In this awful time, when the eye of the world is upon our Congress, help Thy servants to act well their part; and may the glad day be near when the angels shall sing again their triumphant song, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men; and Thy name shall be praised, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION—GUTZON BORGLUM.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read the following letter from the President to myself.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 6, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You were kind enough to consult me the other day about the wholesale charges in regard to the production of aircraft which have been lodged by Mr. Gutzon Borglum. I take the liberty of writing you this letter in order to say more formally what I said to you then informally, namely, that every instrumentality at the disposal of the Department of Justice will be used to investigate and pursue charges of dishonesty or malversation of any kind, if the allegations made by Mr. Borglum are considered worthy of serious consideration, and I sincerely hope that the matter will be treated as one for searching official investigation by the constituted authorities of the Government. Only in this way can the reputations of those whose actions have been perfectly regular and blameless be protected and the guilt, if there is any, definitely lodged where it should be lodged.

Sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the letter just read was the result of a conference I had with the President on Friday afternoon last and which in turn was due to the discussion in the Senate upon Thursday and Friday, in which certain sensational statements of Mr. Gutzon Borglum, coupled with reports of the Aeronautical Society of America, were referred to and both placed in the RECORD of those respective dates.

I should perhaps add, in view of the publicity given to those discussions and that report, that since my conference with the President I have been favored with an inspection of the documents and statements relating to the association of Mr. Borglum with a certain manufacturing concern for the production of airplanes, but which was never consummated.

Let me say further, Mr. President, before taking my seat, that regardless of the truth or falsity of the general charges of Mr. Borglum, the documents to which I have referred reveal a line of conduct not at all to the credit of Mr. Borglum, and, if true, they seriously and justly reflect upon the importance and the credibility of his statements.

DEATH OF LIEUT. DINSMORE ELY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk an extract from the Washington Star of recent date entitled "United States Aviator Ely killed while fighting in France." I wish the Secretary, if no objection is made, to read the extract inclosed with the pencil marks. I think it indicates a spirit of devotion to the public defense which is equal to anything since the days of the Revolutionary War or the war for the preservation of the Union.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES AVIATOR ELY KILLED WHILE FIGHTING IN FRANCE.

CHICAGO, May 5.

Lieut. Dinsmore Ely, United States Army, of Winnetka, a north shore suburb, was killed in France in Aviation Service on April 21. A few days before his death he wrote a letter to his father, Dr. James O. Ely, which was received yesterday. The letter closes thus:

"And I want to say in closing, if anything should happen to me let's have no mourning in spirit or in dress. Like a liberty bond, it is an investment, not a loss, when a man dies for his country. It is an honor to a family, and is that the time for weeping? I would rather leave my family rich in pleasant memories of my life than numbed in sorrow at my death."

CHARLES H. WEINSBERG AND THE ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, several days ago during a current discussion I had occasion to offer an extract clipped from the Post-Dispatch of St. Louis. It referred to Charles H. Weinsberg, the president of the Missouri branch of the German-American Alliance. It was an interview which I regarded as very detrimental to the public interest. I was surprised, to say the mildest of it, at such a news item appearing.

I am very happy, Mr. President, now to present from Joseph Pulitzer, jr., of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, an explanation of the entire transaction.

If the Senate will bear with me a couple of minutes, in a telegram to me he says that he sent two reporters to interview Mr. Weinsberg. He delivered himself of this interview, which was published; and in the clipping that I gave and made known to the Senate they followed it with an editorial the next day in very severe criticism of Weinsberg, and suggested that he ought to be arrested. They furnished the evidence from the office of the Post-Dispatch which led to Mr. Weinsberg's arrest under the laws of the country for the interview, the substance of which appeared in the paper. The Post-Dispatch, both its editorial and the entire staff of reporters connected with the matter, secured the evidence and presented it to the Federal authorities, which led to Mr. Weinsberg's arrest, and I believe will lead to his conviction.

This telegram from Joseph Pulitzer, jr., is addressed to me, and I ask that it be printed at length in the RECORD, because it explains the transaction and shows the Post-Dispatch in a very creditable light; and I am very glad to add this to complete the account of the transaction.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 6, 1918.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We believe your statements in the Senate Saturday regarding the Post-Dispatch publication of an interview with Dr. Weinsberg, head of the Missouri branch of the German-American Alliance, were made without full knowledge of the facts and under a misapprehension of our purpose in publishing the interview. Our purpose is set forth in the following excerpt from a Post-Dispatch editorial published Sunday: "The Post-Dispatch sent two reporters to obtain the interview, which was published in order to expose the disloyalty of Dr. Weinsberg and to give further convincing reasons for the abolition of the German-American Alliance, which was then on trial in the Senate. Two reporters were sent to obtain two witnesses to the accuracy of the interview, with the definite expectation that Dr. Weinsberg would be arrested for his utterances. Similar statements had been made previously to one Post-Dispatch reporter. A warrant for Dr. Weinsberg's arrest was issued within an hour of the appearance of the publication, and the testimony upon which he was subsequently indicted was supplied by the Post-Dispatch reporters who interviewed him. The attitude of the Post-Dispatch with regard to the publication of the interview was clearly indicated in the following editorial, which appeared the next day:

"What about Dr. Weinsberg? In the light of Dr. Charles H. Weinsberg's statement in the Post-Dispatch that Germany will win the war in six months and impose a German peace on America and our allies, the disbanding of the Missouri State branch of the German-American Alliance, of which he is president, is a timely act. There is not a spark of the American in the man who holds and announces his opinion not only that Germany will crush France and destroy the allied cause in Europe but that America, with Britain, when this happens, will surrender and cravenly accept the autocratic peace terms of the Kaiser; in short, that America will shamefully lay down her arms, beg peace from the Kaiser, and consent to his mastership of the world. Dr. Weinsberg is giving all the aid and comfort of which he is capable to the enemy and is throwing whatever influence he possesses against America putting another man or another dollar into the war. Dr. Weinsberg's German-American Alliance ought to go at once, but what of Dr. Weinsberg? We know where he stands in the war, but his arrest and trial will demonstrate where he and others of his kind stand under the law. In publishing this interview calling the attention of the district attorney and the public to Dr. Weinsberg's attitude, the Post-Dispatch did what it conceived to be and still holds to have been its clear duty. We regard it as a public service."

We have requested our Washington correspondent, Mr. H. B. Swope, to lay all the facts before you, and trust you will correct the erroneous impression created by your remarks of Saturday.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH,
JOSEPH PULITZER, Jr.

PLATFORM OF ILLINOIS STATE SOCIALIST PARTY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD without reading the platform of the Illinois State Socialist Party, which on Saturday last held a convention in Chicago adopting a platform. I call particular attention to the latter plank of the platform demanding that the American Government shall immediately recognize the "socialist Russian Government"—the bolsheviki.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIALISTS OPPOSE WAR—ILLINOIS CONVENTION ASKS RECALL OF ARMY AND PEACE EFFORT.

CHICAGO, May 4.

Illinois Socialists, assembled in State convention in Chicago to-day, declared for constant opposition to the war, for immediate recall of American soldiers from France, and asked that President Wilson demand at once a conference of delegates from all warring nations—selected by the various peoples, not the Governments—to execute a peace for the world and democracy.

The convention demanded, too, that the American Government immediately recognize the "socialist Russian Government"—the bolsheviki.

DELAYED TRANSPORTATION OF FLORIDA PRODUCTS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have a communication from the Manatee County Growers' Association, of Florida, which is illustrative of conditions in other portions of the State in the transportation of fruit products. I want to have it read—it is not very long—because it bears on a very important subject, on which I am trying to get light and relief as far as possible. I hope it will come to the attention of those who can offer some remedy for the situation. I ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

MANATEE COUNTY GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
Brandentown, Fla., May 3, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Realizing that the United States is engaged in a conflict more serious than ever before in history, necessitating a revision of conditions, whereby the most expedient and proficient methods may be utilized to their fullest capacity, we, as true and loyal citizens of the United States, are anxious to be of service to the fullest extent of our ability.

In the past we have been growers of perishable commodities for distant markets and have produced as many as 6,000 cars a season from Manatee County alone, and have enjoyed prosperity in common with other American citizens up to and beginning with the season of 1917–18. We, then, realizing that a new era was dawning, made inquiries from officials of the Government and railroads as to the advisability of continuing our industries to capacity and were assured that we would be given every consideration suitable to our needs.

Furthermore, we were urged to plant heavily, as a war measure, to furnish an abundance of food. We responded cheerfully, disregarding the 50 per cent increase in cost of labor, fertilizer, containers, and other materials.

As the shipping season approached there were rumors of embargoes, delayed transportation, etc., which later became realities, and breakages occurred, caused by rough and careless handling at receiving stations, to the extent that we suffered severe reverses that have depleted our finances to an alarming extent. Delayed transportation caused such decay that thousands of packages were a total loss to the producers and of no value to the consumers. The railroads and supply houses have made the only profits, at the expense of the producers and at the loss of foodstuffs to the Nation.

We now approach a new season, beginning July 1, 1918, and we fear that national conditions do not warrant any improvement of prospects over the conditions of one year ago. Materials are scarcer and higher, labor shortage is more acute, and we as growers of perishables can not stand further financial losses from destruction and consequent low prices of our products.

We are therefore at a loss to know how to proceed in order that we may serve our country, to promote the general welfare, protect ourselves, and secure our families the necessities of existence. We respectfully submit the foregoing facts for your consideration, and ask you to instruct and advise us as to the prospects for any betterment in conditions and further need for our produce.

Very truly, yours,

MANATEE COUNTY GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
———— ————, Secretary.

THE AERONAUTICAL SOCIETY OF AMERICA.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the other day the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] asked me a question concerning the Aeronautical Society of America and I answered as best I could from the information I then had. I send to the desk a letter which I received yesterday from the president of the society which I should like to have the Secretary read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE AERONAUTICAL SOCIETY OF AMERICA,
New York, N. Y., May 4, 1918.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: The editorial attempt in the Tribune to-day to discredit the qualifications of the Aeronautical Society of America for the purpose of minimizing the value of the report rendered by our investigating committee is thought not worthy of public answer, but I think it proper to furnish you with some facts concerning the caliber of the men who prepared that report.

Mr. Leon Cammen, chairman of the committee, is an engineer of deep learning and known ability as an inventor and profound student of aeronautics. He has many patents and inventions in aviation, including proven means for regulating the temperature of the cooling system for motors, means for silencing the exhaust of airplane motors without affecting the power, output, etc. Mr. Cammen has written and lectured extensively on aeronautics and has always expressed sound and incontrovertible views respecting the power plants as well as the aerodynamics of aircraft. For five years Mr. Cammen has been one of the two editors of the mechanical engineering department of the American Year Book, compiled by the leading authorities in each art. Mr. Cammen is associate editor of the Journal of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. He is also a member of the New York Academy of Science, the Society of Automotive Engineers, and is vice president and director of the Aeronautical Society of America.

Mr. Charles W. Howell is manager of a factory engaged in precision work of a high order. Privately for many years he has devoted himself to the scientific development of airplane propellers and has labored most earnestly and consistently as an inventor and engineer in the development of the aeronautical art. Both Mr. Thomas A. Hill and myself are patent attorneys whose professional work has been very largely devoted to aeronautical inventions for many years past, by which means we have gained an intimate knowledge of every phase of the art, so that our services to the society have been largely of a critical nature where developments have been discussed.

Our membership includes aircraft and motor manufacturers, aircraft and motor engineers, mechanics engaged in production work, and in general the society comprehends an earnest body of men devoted to progress in aeronautics.

We hold meetings every Tuesday evening, when matters of aeronautical interest are thoroughly discussed, and we may logically claim that the society is the center in America for searching consideration of existing types of aircraft and pending improvements.

Since the creation of the society in 1908 a great many technical and scientific papers have been read and discussed at its general meetings, which are open to the public.

Very truly, yours,

THE AERONAUTICAL SOCIETY OF AMERICA (INC.),
F. W. BARKER, President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, since I asked to have that letter read I have been informed by a colleague that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] had put some letter from the same gentleman into the RECORD this morning before I got on the floor. If I have duplicated that letter, I apologize.

Mr. THOMAS. No; the letter which I asked to have read, and which was read, was from the President to myself, and it appeared in yesterday afternoon's newspapers. It was evidently given to the public before I received it; but I thought, in view of the fact that it related to a subject of present importance to the Senate, it should be put into the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it is quite proper that it should be.

Mr. President, I want the Senate to understand and I want the country to understand that when I brought this matter to the attention of the Senate I did so because I saw it in what I thought was a reliable newspaper—the New York Times. I simply read into the RECORD their editorials and their statements. I know nothing about the subject myself. I do not want to incriminate anybody or to asperse the reputation of an innocent man. That would be the furthest thing from my thought. I have never made a charge against anyone that I did not have the facts to substantiate, and I never shall.

I know nothing about this matter. I simply know that, in this terrible emergency that the world is now facing, to have charges and insinuations and statements published by responsible newspapers and sent broadcast through the land, such as that which was published in the New York Times, impairs public confidence, and the men who make the charges either ought to prove up or shut up—one of the two. I thought it was best to have this thing aired and investigated. All I ask is the truth. I know absolutely nothing whatever about the situation. I know nothing about airplanes or aeronautics or motors, or anything of that kind. All I know is when I see in a great metropolitan newspaper articles such as were published in the New York Times I do not think it behooves us to sit silent and let such things go along. Confidence and integrity and trust in ourselves and in our Government are what will win this war, if we win it; and if anybody is abusing that confidence or trying to destroy it, if anybody is making false charges, he ought to be pilloried before this Nation and punished. If, however, there is any truth in the charges or intimations that have been made, then somebody else is guilty and ought to be punished.

I think it is the duty of the United States Government, as the President of the United States evidently thinks it is his duty, to ascertain the truth of this situation and to expose it to the world. That is all I ask, and that is all I have to say about it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I feel impelled to make a few observations, in view of the letter from the President to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I have never seen the Borglum report referred to therein. I have never had any conversation with Mr. Borglum, although I saw him a little while yesterday in the committee room in company with a few other members of the committee.

I infer, in a general way, from the statements which have been published with reference to the Borglum report, that it had reference more particularly to dishonest transactions or transactions of a pro-German character affecting the general work of the Aircraft Board. Whether that be true or not, I do not know. I should like to see that report at some time, and I shall make an effort to read it, as well as the other reports bearing upon the same situation.

The Committee on Military Affairs some time ago made a report dealing in a general way with airplane production, without going into detail as to the expenditure of particular sums of money by the Aircraft Board or by any of those associated with it in airplane construction. The committee felt at that time that their work would be well done if they could reach a general conclusion as to aircraft production and what was necessary to be done in order that it might be speeded up. That report is now a part of the records of the Senate.

It is only necessary to say that the conclusions of the committee were the same conclusions as those which were reached by the Marshall committee, which investigated the whole subject at the request of the President of the United States. I am advised that in their report they made the same recommendations that the Committee on Military Affairs made, and the same conclusions they reached were also reached by Mr. Borglum in his report; in other words, that there ought to be a change in the method of aircraft production; that there ought to be centralization of effort; and the President of the United States has now undertaken to carry out these suggestions made in all of these reports by centralizing the work under the direction of Mr. Ryan. I hope to see better results follow from this centralization of power, authority, and effort, placing the whole aircraft program in the hands of a man who has been accustomed to do things well, as shown by his own history and by his own life, and who, having been successful in his own affairs, is likely to be successful for the Government of the United States.

The President has referred the Borglum report, according to his letter, to the Department of Justice, with instructions that every instrumentality at the disposal of the Department of Justice be used to investigate and pursue charges of dishonesty and malversation of any kind. As I said a while ago, the Borglum report, as I understand from the press reports, deals with the expenditure of moneys only, or largely with the expenditure of moneys, so that if any of these sums have been diverted or if any of them have been misappropriated the Department of Justice will have ample opportunity to investigate that aspect of the report under instructions from the President.

May I say here, Mr. President, that the Department of Justice is practically the only department which can investigate a particular case into which the criminal element enters. It has men on the ground everywhere in the United States who can investigate charges of dishonesty and investigate any charges that might be made against any members of this particular board or any agent of the Government in connection with aircraft production.

But let me say to the Senate now that it is not the purpose of this committee to abandon its efforts to ascertain the truth with reference to aircraft construction. There has been something radically wrong in the whole program, Mr. President. I have not been able to put my hand on the expenditure of the moneys, and I do not think there is any member of the committee who can account for the expenditure of anything like $640,000,000, or probably $840,000,000. The committee, if I can have its consent and the consent of the Senate, is going to pursue this thing and ascertain, if it be possible to do so, where these moneys have been expended and where the delay has been occasioned.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. Should not the committee, independent of the criminal question, investigate and ascertain to whom this money has been paid and for what purposes it has been paid?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was just undertaking to say that the committee is going to pursue its efforts to try to find out the truth of the whole situation. I am very glad, indeed, to know from the President's letter that he approves of a searching official investigation by the constituted authorities of the Government. The Military Affairs Committee of the Senate is a constituted authority of the Government, and the Military Affairs Committee, without fear or favor, Mr. President, intends to do whatever is necessary to get at the bottom of this whole matter. I am sure that is what the President wants, and I am glad, indeed, to know that this course has his approval in advance. Only this morning a few of the members of the committee got together for the purpose of discussing this very situation.

This aircraft construction is not the development of a day, Mr. President; the investigation itself is not the development of a day. We make our investigations and think we have closed them on one day, and the very next day the mail will bring to members of our committee—to most, if not to all of them—charges of a sensational kind, made in many instances by reputable citizens of this country who are interested only in the winning of this war. Then it becomes a question as to whether these particular charges in every particular instance ought to be investigated and gone into by the committee. These charges must be segregated and the motives of the complainants analyzed. Charges are coming to me every day; new information is coming to me every day, and it is coming to members of this committee—charges, for instance, such as are made in the Borglum report, which this committee never saw; and other charges are coming to the committee from various quarters. It becomes a question, then, in each instance as to whether or not the committee ought to investigate further. But, Mr. President, this committee is determined to do whatever is necessary to win this war, and if there is responsibility for a lack of speeding up this committee hopes to put its finger on the man or men who are responsible for it. It proposes to do that without fear. It does not propose to protect the reputations of any individuals who have been connected with any dishonest transactions, from the highest to the lowest. It is the purpose of the committee to find out and to point out to the country the men who are responsible, if such there be, and it does not propose to engage in any whitewashing process, either.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator know—and I apprehend the information is obtainable—the amount of the $840,000,000 that has been spent for building aeroplanes and airships?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I only know in a general way that the amount appropriated was $640,000,000, and I understand that there is to be a deficiency appropriation of $200,000,000 more, in regard to which I presume a report will be made in due time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Can the Senator tell the number of airplanes that have been built out of that fund and that are now in use?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that is a difficult proposition; that brings up again the discussion of a matter that has been discussed here from various angles at various times, and no conclusion has ever been reached.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There is no difficulty about finding the number of planes constructed, I apprehend.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There has been so much of misrepresentation about this whole business that it is pretty difficult to learn the truth about it. America has not put any planes upon the battle front of France, unless it has been done within the last two or three weeks. I mean battle planes constructed and built in America and shipped abroad for the use of the American troops. There have been planes built in France, Mr. President, at the expense of America, and these have been put on the battle front. If the Senator calls them American battle planes, then some have been built. How many, just now I do not know; but some have been built and have been placed upon the battle front.

In addition to that America has sent over to Europe—to Great Britain and to France—materials out of which airplanes are to be made, and is continuing to do that. There has never been any effort upon the part of our committee to differentiate between the actual construction of planes in France and the actual cost of planes built in France out of raw material America has sent over to be utilized in the construction of planes there.

It seems to me, Mr. President, and I think I am safe in saying it has seemed to the majority of the members of the Military Affairs Committee, that our people ought to be informed of the truth of the situation, and they never have been because those who ought to know the truth do not tell it all. I am not blaming anybody for it; possibly it is impossible for anybody to know what the truth is. I do know this, however, that it was testified to before the committee that the flower of American youth to the number of about 1,500 were sent abroad to be trained in France in the use of battle and other planes on the front; and yet at this very day some of those men have not had the advantage of training in American-built or in any planes whatsoever; and it has become the purpose of the Chief Signal Officer, as he testified before the committee, that these young men would be returned to America and trained here after having been kept over there nearly a year with nothing to do. Some of them will not have an opportunity to train there; they must be brought back to America to train. If America has all the planes that she needs, why has she not placed them in the hands of these young men to be utilized on the battle front of France? There is not any question about that. The Chief Signal Officer himself says that the young men can not be trained over there, and I might say some——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I have always thought the story that the Senator is now telling us a most extraordinary one. I assume that those 1,500 men must have been sent over to France by the head of the Signal Corps?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They were.

Mr. WALSH. And that same head of the Signal Corps now tells us he thinks about bringing them back?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He does.

Mr. WALSH. Is not that a confession in itself?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Some of them; not all of them.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. Did he explain how it was that his expectation that those 1,500 men would receive training in France were defeated?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I may say to the Senator from Montana that it was the extreme optimism of the Chief Signal Officer and the men associated with him in airplane production that caused these young men to be sent over there. They thought, in perfect good faith, I have no doubt, that they would have the planes there for the use of these young men.

Mr. WALSH. Did he indicate to the committee the basis of his expectation that they would get training there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, Mr. President, if the Senator had been watching the newspapers and watching the testimony as it was adduced before the committee, he would know that they have been disappointed in nearly every expectation they have had. If the Senator will come into my committee room some day, I will give him a confidential statement that shows the situation and that he can almost read at a glance. There were some things said before the committee that it did not deem wise to print. In answer to the question of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] I simply state that as a fact to show that we have not had in France the planes that we needed there.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true that there were young men sent over there who were partly trained, ready to go on with flying, who have not had their feet off the ground since they have been there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I could not state that positively.

Mr. LODGE. I can only state it in a general way; but they have not had an opportunity to fly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I have a letter in my possession from a young man who went over to France who claimed that the morale of these 1,500 young men was almost destroyed by months of weary waiting. They went over there, I may say, expecting to become the aces of America. They were the young college men from the different colleges in the United States who were sent there because it was deemed that they were the most efficient and likely to be the best fighters that America could send over for battle-craft use. Since they have gone over, selected as they were as the best young men in the country, others have gone over outranking them in commissions; and an effort is now being made to try to arrange the order in which the commissions shall be issued to protect these young men, as far as it is possible to protect them, against the optimism of the Aircraft Board.

Mr. LODGE. I know personally of just such cases as that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is not any question of that.

Mr. LODGE. Men who were good fliers left this country and have never been able to get a machine since they have been over there.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One more question, and then I will yield to the Senator from Florida. We are about to be asked, as I understand, to appropriate a billion dollars more for the Aviation Service. I understand the Senator to say that we have spent $640,000,000 and probably two hundred millions more for a deficit, $840,000,000; and the Senator has described sufficiently what returns we have had. I was very glad to hear the Senator say that it was the intention of the committee to investigate that expenditure. I confess that I have a curiosity—it may be a morbid curiosity, but I have a curiosity—to know what has been done with $840,000,000, with these results.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope we may be able to enlighten the Senator. If we are not able to do it, I am sure that the Appropriations Committee will be able to do so, because the Appropriations Committee will have charge of the bill for the deficiency.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, they bought an airplane with it, did they not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, we got an airplane.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a statement just here?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I think, Mr. President, that about two hundred millions of the sum just mentioned has been actually expended. The remainder of it is represented by contracts, which will absorb it when the contracts are performed; and of course a good part of the amount expended has been expended in the construction of aviation fields, and in the training of men, and in matters of that sort. I think, too, that while I am on my feet I ought to say, if the Senator will permit me, in justice to Gen. Squier, that when these young men were sent over to France he had assurances that they could and would be trained in the French schools; but those schools, for some reason, have proved inadequate for the total number of men we forwarded under that understanding.

Mr. LODGE. They had no machines to give us, did they?

Mr. THOMAS. They had training machines.

Mr. LODGE. But not enough?

Mr. THOMAS. But not enough. That was one reason; and another was, I suppose—this is mere conjecture, however—the pressure of the numbers of French aviators that the schools had to provide for.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I just rose to suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as the matter has been mentioned in a rather critical way, not by the Senator from Oregon, but by others, that these young men who were sent to France and to England, according to the testimony, as I recall it—the Senator will correct me if I am wrong about that—were sent there at the request of the French and the British officers. I think that is the truth in connection with that matter. In other words, it was not a gross mistake or error on the part of our people in sending those young men over there to be trained; but it was at the suggestion, anyhow, and I think at the request of the French and British officers, that we send that number of our best material over there to be trained. If I am wrong about that I should like to be corrected; but that is my understanding of the testimony.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator another question, if the Senator from Oregon will permit me? Do I understand him to say that the men in the Aviation Service, who are enlisted men or commissioned officers of the Army, are being paid out of the funds appropriated for aircraft construction?

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator mean their salaries?

Mr. LODGE. No; I mean their regular pay as soldiers.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, no; I think not. I think their regular pay comes out of another fund.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator referred to the expense of training these young men. I supposed their expenses were paid like the expenses of all other soldiers, out of the general appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator is correct about that. I did not mean to include the pay of the men in the Aviation Service as coming from the fund under discussion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the Senator will find, in addition to that, that even conceding that his statement of the facts is correct, Gen. Squier testified that we were to furnish planes to train them.

Mr. FLETCHER. That may have been the understanding also.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the point I have been trying to make; and I am not criticizing that particularly, except in answer to the charge that is being made all the time that America has got all the planes she needs in France.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not make this suggestion by way of raising the slightest objection to what the Senator is saying, or indicating in any way that I am opposed to this investigation. I think we should go to the very bottom of it. I think we should hue to the line and let the chips fall where they will. My position about the reports, and the reason why I did not sign either report of the committee, was that I felt that we had not gotten to the bottom of it, and I felt that the reports were premature. I favored submitting those facts to the President, in order that we might draw out all the facts, all that we had, the Borglum report, and the report of his own committee, and that the committee might pursue the matter further to reach a definite fixing of responsibility, and determine where the responsibility lies. I am heartily in accord with the position the Senator takes with regard to his purpose in that connection.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Referring again to the matter that was the subject of colloquy a few moments ago, it had occurred to me that either the chief of the Signal Corps sent those men over to France without any kind of assurance whatever that they could be accommodated in the schools there, or else that he had assurances sufficient to justify him in the belief that they would be accommodated in the schools over there. I was hoping that the Senator from Oregon, who is so familiar with this matter, would give us his understanding as to what the testimony is, as to whether it was a wild, thoughtless, heedless act on the part of the head of the Signal Corps here, or whether the expectation that he justly indulged failed by reason of the fact that the French Government were unable to accommodate the men as they had promised to do at their schools.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope the Senator will not conclude, from anything I have said, that I question the sincerity or the motives of Gen. Squier. Nobody holds him in any higher esteem than I do as an officer of the Army. I honestly believe that Gen. Squier had assurances that airplanes in sufficient quantities would be delivered there for the purpose of training these young men; but he was a nonexpert in airplane construction, who was depending upon the Aircraft Board or somebody who had the production of these aircraft and airplanes in charge; and, basing his action upon the estimates that they had given him, he acted in perfect good faith.

Mr. WALSH. Then I understand the Senator to say that they were unable to get training in France because the American Government did not send over planes as apparently they had agreed to?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They did not.

Mr. WALSH. That is the trouble, then; that the planes were not forthcoming?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The planes were not forthcoming, either from America or manufactured in France.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. President, I ask the Senator how it is that the American schools and the American aviation fields were abundantly supplied, as I understand the case, with training planes, and the French schools were not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that leads up to another question. This whole business has been camouflaged and misrepresented to the American people. It has only been recently that the American aviation fields have been supplied with proper planes for the training of these young men; and yet the statement is constantly being made that there were sufficient airplanes for the training of the American boys here and abroad.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question for information? I should like to ask the Senator what the program was as to the number of airplanes we were to have. I think the people ought to know what we had in view.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not recall just exactly what the number was that we were to have in Europe by the 1st of July; I think something like 2,500 or 3,000, with a possibility of increased production.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Do we propose to have fifty or eighty thousand there finally?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We will not.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask another question right there. Will the Senator state how much the planes were to cost apiece? There must have been an estimate of what each plane ought to cost us.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I presume that testimony is before the committee, but I do not recall the amount just now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator, then, that from the investigations I have made those machines ought to be produced at a big profit at $3,000 apiece; but even allowing $10,000 apiece, with a billion dollars we could place at our own disposal 100,000 planes costing $10,000 apiece.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, it seems to me that inasmuch as we have spent nearly a billion dollars and have not got anything, we ought to find out what has become of it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, when I rose to address the Senate this morning it was only in reference to the pending investigation, and I had not gotten together the testimony on any particular proposition. I can only state these things in a general way. That testimony is before the committee, but I do not recall it now, because there are very many different kinds of planes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not think the statement ought to go out to the country that planes suitable for the fighting service can be produced for $3,000 apiece.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, no.

Mr. REED. Or for three times $3,000. The British and French pay largely in excess of that. The Senator from North Dakota does not want a statement to go out to the country that is wrong. The Handley-Page machine, the testimony shows, costs Great Britain $47,000. A battle plane is not a simple little device consisting of some sticks and some canvas and a tin can for an engine. It demands the highest type of engine that the genius of man has ever produced; it demands the highest class of machinery that the genius of man can conceive; it demands guns that cost money, and some of them are so contrived that they shoot between the rapidly revolving blades of the propeller without striking the propeller. That takes some time and some ability to arrange. It is not a matter that is done overnight.

Mr. McCUMBER. It requires ability to get the type; that is all.

Mr. REED. You can not have it done by an ordinary plumber. These machines require a photographic apparatus, one that will take accurate pictures of trenches when the machine is 20,000 feet in the air. They require gas tanks to supply oxygen to the aviator when he has reached an altitude where breathing is impossible. The modern machine has an electrical appliance by which the hands and feet of the operator are kept warm. These are a few of the difficulties that have to be met, and no statement ought to be made to go to the country that machines of this kind can be made for $3,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator that the plans for an airplane are so intricate that they involve as many parts as there are to the architectural design of a battleship?

Mr. REED. That is another valuable statement. Now, since the Senator who has the floor has been so kind as to permit this long interruption, he will perhaps permit me to say this in addition: That the aeroplane is changing almost with the rapidity of light. The machine that was a good fighting machine six months ago is now obsolete, or partially obsolete. If we had the most perfect machine in the world to-day, the probabilities are that it would be necessary to be making changes in it next week. All these problems have come forward to involve in difficulty the great work of production. At the same time, so that I may not be misunderstood, I have no doubt that there has been blundering of the most colossal character.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, if the Senator from Oregon will allow me, I think we are all aware of those constant changes and improvements; and yet England and France and Germany have managed to keep great numbers of fighting machines on both fronts in constant use.

Mr. REED. That is true. We made the primary colossal blunder of undertaking to build an engine and to fit almost every airplane in the world to that one engine, whereas skilled mechanics and men who understand the business say that in every instance the engine must be built to fit the plane; and the so-called Liberty motor is only adaptable to two or three types of planes, and among those types is not included the battle plane proper.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make one suggestion in response to the statement of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator's argument is based upon securing an original machine. I am assuming in my statement that you have agreed upon a standardized machine. Now, it may take $10,000, it may take $100,000, to perfect the engine of the first machine; but after you have standardized it and have standardized your tools for making it, it is then practically all made by machinery, and it ought not to cost more than $3,000 per machine.

Mr. REED. The Senator is in error. My statement is not based upon the cost of the original machine. It is based upon the latest cost we have from England on the latest machines which they are now producing, not the original machine, not original experiments, but the machines that they are now producing after three and a half years of actual work upon the battle front.

If the Senator can perform the miracle he has just described of producing the machines for $3,000 apiece, he is of more value to the United States and to the allies than any man living, including the commanders of the Army and Navy. I say that with all respect and with all kindness, but no man can produce these planes for $3,000. It is an absolute impossibility.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say finally if that board had said to Mr. Ford or to the Packard Co. we want 50,000 standardized machines of this size, and if it had employed them to produce the best French machine out of that number of standardized machines, they would have produced the machine. I am not talking of the gun and the cost of the gun, because that is not paid out of this fund whatever.

Mr. REED. Since the Senator has brought that up, they did get Mr. Coffin. Mr. Coffin was a great automobile producer, producing as many machines I think as are produced by the Packard Co., and it is under the supervision of Mr. Coffin that this lamentable failure has occurred, because Mr. Coffin thought he could standardize an engine that would fit any machine on earth, and he has found out that up to date the problem has been a very illusive and impossible one.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that the program mapped out when the $640,000,000 appropriation was asked for was as follows: There were to be built 22,000 aeroplanes. The $640,000,000 was to pay for the completion of 22,000 planes. It came before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and when the appropriation was asked for that committee went into the details as to the cost, and there was no question at that time but that the $640,000,000 would complete 22,000 aeroplanes. The question as to when they should be finished was also discussed, and it was stated to the committee that all haste possible was to be made, and the hastening of the making of the planes would entail an extra cost of nt least 10 per cent. I agreed that it would not only cost 10 per cent extra but that it would cost 20 per cent; and yet with the 20 per cent allowance for increase of cost for forced work the $640,000,000 covered the building of 22,000 planes.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not mean to be understood as saying that the appropriation of $640,000,000 was to pay for planes alone? It was to pay for your schools and your grounds and everything else.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the wording of the law, if the Senator wants me to read it.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator yield to me to submit a conference report, that it may be printed?

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps it is too long to take of the time of the Senator from Oregon. I will call the attention of the Senate to it in my own time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am obliged to the Senator. I will say to the Senator from Virginia I merely wish to make one statement in conclusion.

When I rose to this subject it was only to state that it was the purpose of the Committee on Military Affairs to continue its investigation, not only with reference to aircraft production but with reference to every other branch of the service that needs investigation so far as the war is concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator a question before he yields the floor. I am not particular about doing so now, but can ask it later.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will yield in just a moment. The committee is going to do that without any fear. The charge, Mr. President, that has been made from time to time in various sections of the press and sometimes on the floor of Congress that those who want to arrive at the truth in reference to the expenditure of the money which belongs to the people of this country are pro-German in tendency and in character and that their course may possibly serve our enemies rather than America will not deter the individual members of this committee from the performance of their duty as they see fit. That charge, so far as I am concerned, may be made from now until the end of this war, but it shall not swerve me one iota from the track I have marked out for myself in the discharge of my duty, and that is to bring the truth home to the American people.

I have no doubt that those who are serving the Government faithlessly and dishonestly will be brought to task and to justice promptly by the American people. All that is needed to speed up this war is to let the people know the truth, and knowing it they dare perform whatever is necessary to be performed to win this war against the most efficient and most cruel military nations on the face of the earth.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator takes his seat——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska first.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon if he can give the Senate information on the proposition as to whether the Governments of England and France or either of them had contracted with us for a large number of Liberty motors? The question was discussed here in the Senate the other day, and I noticed, I think, last night—I have sent out for the paper—one of the afternoon papers here gave a glowing account of the very large number of Liberty motors that England had purchased.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. England did contract for a large number of Liberty motors with America.

Mr. NORRIS. Have they been delivered?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I deem it best not to say what the result of that contract was, but if the Senator will go into my office I promise to read him a confidential report that is now before the committee. That will tell just exactly what happened.

Mr. NORRIS. On one side of the proposition that goes out to the country, and I have heard it disputed upon the floor. I am anxious to know what the truth is. Last night or night before last an evening paper here gave an account of all this transaction, in which it was stated, I think, that only two or three had been delivered, and they were to be delivered on acceptance. Some Senators said they had not been accepted. they had been rejected, and that as a matter of fact none had ever been delivered. But in the face of that I see the statement made in the public press that it is a great success, and that we are manufacturing them now and sending them across to England, and she is buying them. I think the statement said that England had already bought a thousand of us. I should like to know what the truth is.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it is proper to say that I believe the British Government found the Liberty motor an excellent motor. They are going to use it. They have contracted for some, but I say they have not received all or any large part of those that were contracted for. Whether they will be delivered finally or not I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator state how many have been shipped to England?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I could not state that to-day, because it varies. It is fair to say in this connection that we are all the time reaching a point where quantity production is most possible, and we are in better shape to-day to do it than we were a month ago, and in better shape than we were two months ago.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator say a thousand Liberty motors have been sent to England?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I prefer not to state the number.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it fair to say that the number actually shipped is merely nominal.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator state how many?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I know how many, but I do not think it is proper to state it. It is a merely nominal number. The number contracted for is considerable, because both Great Britain and France are anxious to have motors. They are not able to make what they need, but the number we have been able to supply is merely nominal, because we are not able to supply ourselves as yet.

Mr. NORRIS. Are they in operation there? Are they using them?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are not.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON. I simply wish to ask the Senator a question for the information of the committee of which I am chairman. We would like to know whether the Committee on Military Affairs is investigating the expenditures made in the war?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; the committee is not making that investigation now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to take only about two or three minutes of the time of the Senate. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has nominally held the floor for three-quarters of an hour, but he has been compelled to yield to other Members most of the time.

I wish to say that I am exceedingly glad to learn from him that the Committee on Military Affairs intend to keep a vigilant eye upon this whole question of our military preparedness, not only the airship program but the whole military situation.

I read in the papers that the President has ordered the Department of Justice to conduct an investigation of the aircraft program and of all the circumstances surrounding it. Mr. President, the Department of Justice is the prosecuting branch of the Government. If there is any crime connected with the airship production the Department of Justice has got to conduct the prosecution. But the Department of Justice, the Attorney General and his deputy attorney generals are not the gentlemen who determine upon the public policies of this country by a long shot. They are appointed by the President just as the Secretary of War is appointed by the President. They are a part of the executive branch of the Government; they are the agents of the President. Nobody knows what this whole airship program is, which is generally admitted up to date, if not to have fallen flat, at least, to have been very disappointing. Nobody knows what the situation is. There have been several investigations by gentlemen who have had letters from the President to investigate it and by committees appointed by him, and now the President is going to have another investigation by his own appointee. To whom is the Attorney General going to report after he makes his investigation? Is he going to report to Congress? No; he will report to the man who appointed him, the President. The President has already two reports which he has not made public. The Lord only knows whether he will make the other report public if there is anything bad in it; I do not know.

I am glad to hear the courageous and able Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the great Military Affairs Committee, announce here publicly this morning that he does not propose to abandon his functions, and he does not propose that a great coordinate department of the Government, the legislative branch of the Government, comprising 96 Senators from sovereign States and three or four hundred Members of the House of Representatives, shall abdicate their functions and be squelched. I am glad to know that he takes the view that in this gory struggle, in this titanic contest between despotism and democracy the world over, the Congress of the United States proposes to have a hand in determining the policies of this Government, and proposes to understand what is going on, and when some little fellow comes over here and demands billions and billions of dollars to be appropriated, and taxes to be laid upon the backs of the American people to an extent unheard of in history, we have not yet become so subservient, so craven, as that we do not want to know what has been done with the money which we have wrung from the taxpayers of the country. The people want to know. They are entitled to know. The press wants to know. It is entitled to know. We want to know. We are entitled to know.

This war can not be won, Mr. President, in this attitude of seeing things through a glass darkly. It can not be won in privacy and secrecy and mystery. The public are giving their sons and fathers and brothers to a bloody death in the trenches. They are up against poisonous gas and shot and shell and exploding bombs, and they will not submit to be deprived of their property at home and their lives abroad and have it all done behind a glass darkly.

If there is any virtue in coordination, let us coordinate. We have three coordinate departments of the Government. Now, let us coordinate. This war is not going to be won by Col. House. It is not going to be won by any pet or favorite of the President. It is only going to be won by the people of the whole country having confidence in their Government, and if the Government warrants the confidence which the public places in it.

Mr. President, I have no partisanship in this war. They can take my property; they can take my life. They are taking the lives of the fellows they draft into the Army, and they can have my life. I have only one life to live, and I have only one death to die, and I know of no better cause in which to sacrifice my life than in standing against this German brute who is trampling over civilization.

But, my God, Mr. President, I am a free man. I am not a partisan. No word that I have said on this floor has any partisan tinge to it. To be sure, when the President presumes, as I think at times, to be a superman and to think his judgment is better than that of the whole hundred million people of the country, I make some jokes about it and some sarcastic references to it. There is no ill nature about that, and I am not doing it for politics; I am doing it in the hope that at last he will one day realize that there are other people in this country besides him who have some brains and some loyalty and some patriotism.

Mr. President, my grandfather was a Democrat. My father joined the Republican Party because he did not believe in human slavery, and I was born a Republican. I would not hesitate to get out of the Republican Party and join the Democratic Party or any other party the minute the Republican Party abandoned the principles that I believe in. We are Americans now, Mr. President, and we ought to act like Americans.

I would rather see the whole American Continent sunk 20 leagues under the sea than to see the Kaiser stalking around here in his tall boots, with his spurs on, bossing the American people.

You can not win this war by talking about woman suffrage and prohibition. We won every war we ever were in without woman suffrage and prohibition. We won the Wars of 1776 and 1812 and the Mexican War and the War of 1860 and the Spanish-American War, and there were no pink-tea parties talking about putting pink chemises on the men and Plymouth Rock pants on the women. The women do not propose to go over in the trenches abroad and do the fighting. It is the men who have got to do that. Instead of bleating around here about their saving democracy by forcing their way into caucuses and conventions, they had better go home and knit bandages and pick lint and get ready to take care of their brothers and sons and fathers who are going to be shot to pieces in the trenches abroad.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The women are doing that very thing to an extent that they ought to be congratulated upon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do congratulate them to the extent they are doing it; but if they would get out of this lobby and go back and do more of it I should be better pleased with them.

Now, Mr. President, they talk about prohibition——

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not yield to the Senator just at present. I want to finish the thought that I have in mind, and then I will yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to give the Senator the thought I had in my mind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not so anxious about the Senator's thought. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, take the boy in the trenches "over there," standing all night in 2 feet of ice water, with orders in his pocket to "go over the top" in the cold, gray dawn in a chilly fog, to put his unprotected body up against shot and shrapnel and machine guns and poisonous gas, in addition to frozen feet, and they say they are going to fill his belly full of ice water before he starts as a moral stimulus to him. It is perfectly absurd. Every army abroad gives its men a drink of something to expand the cockles of the heart before they go up against the cold, blue steel, and it may be the last one the poor devils will ever get. Yet you would think that this war is going to be won by such fads and fancies and frills as that.

Now, let us "get down to brass tacks" and win this war. Let us find out the facts and let us investigate all these irregularities in a nonpartisan way and report to the representatives of the people, and then let the people pronounce the verdict.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there has been a great deal of confusion, apparently, in the minds of some of the public and of some Senators, and to such an extent that it has created some confusion in my own mind as to the amount of money that has been appropriated for the production and use of aeroplanes. In view of that uncertainty that seems to be in the atmosphere on the subject, and the subject itself being capable of being made certain by the official records, I want to cite the appropriations that have been made for that purpose.

Mr. President, on the 24th day of July, 1917, Congress appropriated in one act probably the largest amount of money that was ever provided for the purchase and production of aeroplanes and for the Aviation Service—$640,000,000. In addition to that, the urgent deficiency bill, which was passed June 15, 1917, contained an appropriation of $43,450,000 for the same program of aeroplanes and aviation. The Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1918 contained an appropriation of $10,800,000 for the same purpose. In addition to the items to which I have already called attention, there were smaller items for the regular Aviation Service of $500,000, appropriated in October, 1918, for the Panama Canal region, and of $1,200,000 in the fortifications act of 1918 for the Philippines and Hawaii. That makes a total, Mr. President, of $695,950,000.

In addition to that amount of money which has been appropriated—and adding to that the further sums of money for which the Government has been obligated—there is in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury addressed to the President of the Senate on March 12, 1918, a request for a deficiency appropriation of $200,000,000 as another item. As to the $200,000,000 asked by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the request of the Acting Secretary of War, Maj. Gen. George O. Squier, Chief Signal Officer of the Army, says in his letter, which is addressed to the Secretary of War and upon which the entire recommendation is based, this:

> This amounts to $200,000,000, and covers deficiencies already existing.

I want to emphasize that statement. In addition to all that, Mr. President, in this same report to the Senate made by the Secretary of the Treasury, he uses this language:

> In addition to the appropriation of $200,000,000 requested, the estimate also provides for contract authorizations not to exceed $250,000,000.

As to that item of $250,000,000 for contract authorizations, Gen. Squier, Chief of the Signal Service, in the same letter to the Secretary of War, upon which the Secretary of the Treasury requests appropriations and authorizations of $450,000,000 additional, states as follows:

> In addition, it is estimated that an amount totaling $250,000,000 will be needed before the end of the present fiscal year for the same purposes.

"Will be needed before the end of the present fiscal year" which is June 30, 1918. So, Mr. President, adding the two items which will be needed and a portion of which has already been expended—covering deficiencies, Gen. Squier says already existing—the $200,000,000 and the $250,000,000, and the $695,950,000 heretofore appropriated for this program, we have a total sum of $1,145,950,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH and Mr. JONES of Washington addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3895) to regulate the allowance of overdrafts by national banking associations, and to provide penalties for its violation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the morning business concluded. We have not yet had an opportunity to do so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have been waiting here and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has also been waiting for weeks, trying to get bills of this character passed. They are bills which have been unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; Mr. President, there is. I want to have the morning business concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection. The further presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the matter that has been discussed all the morning, except to say that if the Committee on Military Affairs wants to find out how money has been wasted in connection with aeroplane work, if they will go out to the western country and get some men who know how to get out material for such construction and also know the methods which have been pursued by those who have had charge of the work, the committee will find out not only how money has been wasted but how the supply of spruce for airplane production is really being very seriously endangered. It may be that the committee has gone into the matter along those lines. If they have, well and good.

Mr. THOMAS. They have not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If they have not, I suggest that they follow that course, and they will find where a great part of the money has gone and why it is that this program has not come up to expectations.

PRICE OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I present a petition adopted by the board of trustees of the Washington Retail Grocers & Merchants' Association (Inc.), at a meeting held in Seattle April 20, calling attention to the price of wheat flour, and then to the prices for substitutes for wheat. I wish to say that this petition along with many others that I am getting—and I have no doubt other Senators are getting similar communications—together with letters show that there is a feeling developing throughout the country that is likely to result in a very serious state of affairs. The people are beginning to wonder why it is when they go to buy flour they must buy an equal amount of substitutes, and when they get the prices of these substitutes they find that they are much higher than the wheat flour which they have to purchase. It is going to cause a whole lot of dissatisfaction.

They call attention in this petition to the fact, as they understand it, that the Food Administration, under the licensing provision of the food law, has fixed the price of wheat products, and they do not understand why it is that under the same provision the Food Administration can not fix the price of the substitutes. I am not going to ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, but I wish to present it and ask that it be appropriately referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire the petition read?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not care to have it read. I have made a statement about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also present a petition of Shipyard Laborers, Riggers, and Fasteners Local Union 38-A-2, International Longshoremen's Association, of Seattle, indorsed by the Metal Trades Council, and also by the Central Labor Council of Seattle, relating to the same subject. They call attention to some interesting facts to which I desire briefly to direct the attention of the Senate. They say that according to the report of the Department of Agriculture for 1918, the following prices of food grains were given, as of the date of October 1, 1917. Wheat represented by 200.6; corn, 175.1; oats, 62.3; barley, 113.9; rye, 169.8.

Then they call attention to the requirements of the Food Administration with reference to wheat and substitutes for wheat, and call attention to the retail prices of the substitutes on April 15, 1918, and state that they "range from 15 to 35 per cent higher on the local markets than do the products of wheat, namely, wheat flour, $6 per 100; rye flour, $8 per 100; barley flour, $7.50 per 100; corn flour, $8 per 100; and oat flakes, $7.70 per 100." Therefore, be it resolved that Congress or the administration, or some authority, get to work and regulate the price of these substitutes.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will yield in just a moment. I have received a great many letters along the same line. I think something ought to be done, either by Congress or through the Food Administration. I am at a loss to understand, if they can fix the price under the licensing clause of one class of manufactured food products, why they can not fix the price of other manufactured food products. I present the petition for reference.

I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] rose first, and I yield to him.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I simply rose to say that I indorse what the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has said with respect to the wisdom of fixing the price of all substitutes for flour. It has been my observation that the very moment the Food Administration has suggested any substitute for flour, immediately the price of that substitute is raised. That has been true of corn meal; it has been true of rye flour; and, while I am not so certain about it, I believe it to be true of barley flour. I do not think that the Food Commission should delay for a single hour the fixing of the prices of these substitutes. There never was at this time of the year more corn in the markets of the United States than there is to-day, and yet its price is going skyward.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I can not help but reply briefly to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. The Senator from Ohio needs no defense; as a rule he is able to defend himself; but I do question the advisability of taking his advice in regard to the fixing of the prices of food products. Certainly, Mr. President, he will not be indorsed by what has happened in the past, for every historian knows that the fixing of prices by any government has caused ruination. There is not a Senator on this floor who does not know that wherever price fixing on food products has been put in force or wherever it has been practiced it has caused ruination to the people.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] asked the question why the prices of the other articles of food mentioned are higher? I think it is not difficult to answer that question. The legitimate laws of supply and demand regulate the price of corn, of oats, of rye, and of barley; and I will say to the Senator from Washington they are not too high.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GRONNA. Not just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Senator does not want to put me in a wrong attitude. I did not ask anything about why the prices were high.

Mr. GRONNA. I thought the Senator did.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not at all; I know why they are high.

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator, if he thinks I am putting him in a false attitude; I do not wish to do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to say that I did not ask the question.

Mr. GRONNA. I listened very carefully to what the Senator said.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not ask the question why the prices were high; I simply called attention to the fact as set out in the resolution presented by me. The prices are high, and the Senator suggests the law of supply and demand as the reason; but the demand is a forced demand by the Food Administration by regulations imposed by it requiring people to get these things whether they want them or not. Of course, that makes the price go up.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have at times differed with the Food Administrator. I do not think that the Food Administrator is responsible for the high price of corn or the high price of barley or the high price of anything else; but I do know that he is responsible for the indefensible and low price of wheat.

We know that it does not require more than a barrel of flour per capita per year to feed the people, and yet the Senator from Ohio would make us believe that it would be a great blessing for the laboring element of this country if flour were perchance made a dollar and a half a barrel or so lower.

What will be the benefit to labor, I ask the Senator from Ohio, if they can buy a barrel of flour, which will furnish bread for an entire year, for $1.50 per barrel less than a given price? How much are you benefiting labor by that, when their wages have increased at least 100 per cent, and they have increased in the Senator's own State 100 per cent?

If a man has a family of five, he buys five barrels of flour a year at $12 a barrel. That is $60. A man laboring on the farm who used to receive $30 a month now receives not less than $60 and as high as $90 a month and board. That is the price the farmer has to pay. The Senator from Ohio the other day indicated that any man who spoke for a higher price for the farmer showed disloyalty. I challenge that statement.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that statement was made the other day and it is made now. I made no such statement as that.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Ohio made the statement, and the RECORD will so show, that there were a few people in Ohio such as he refers to. Let the RECORD speak for itself.

Mr. POMERENE. I am quite willing that the RECORD shall speak for itself. What I said was that there were a few people there who wanted those prices. I did not say that they were disloyal. Those words were put in my mouth by another Senator, and now the Senator from North Dakota seeks to repeat them.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad to know that the Senator from Ohio makes it plain that he did not make that statement. He did not make it plain at the particular time when he made his speech; at least he did not make it plain enough for me to understand it, and I am very glad to have him say so now.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will do me the courtesy of reading the RECORD, he will find that I made no such statement as that.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I accept the Senator's statement. I do not wish to further delay the proceedings of the Senate, but I want to say I believe that in order to successfully prosecute this war there must be coordination; there must be a united effort; and you can not discriminate against the great agricultural class; and that class, sir, has been discriminated against.

I hear a great deal of talk about this price fixing. There never was a man or a set of men in the world who were able to fix prices that will be satisfactory to everybody. It is often suggested to me by farmers from my own State that we ought to fix the prices on all agricultural implements, on cotton, and on all the things they buy. There may be some justice in the suggestion, but I believe it would result in failure and ruination. I have said to them, sir, that I believed it would be a mistake to do so. We have crippled the industry of farming, we have lowered the production of wheat. Are you going to lower the production of these other grains and make it impossible for the American people, for the boys on the battle field and for the allies, to secure food at all?

I, for one, am not willing to do so; and I know as well as I know my own name that to interfere with these things simply means and spells ruination to the industry. I am not willing to fix a price on cotton any more than wheat. I am not willing for any government to fix the price of anything. I say we should let the laws of supply and demand fix the prices. If we do that, there will be plenty of wheat, there will be plenty of everything. If anyone makes undue profits, sir, let the Government step in and by taxation regulate his profits. In that way it can be done, and in no other way can it be successfully done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order. If there be no further reports of committees, bills and joint resolutions are in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4505) granting an increase of pension to Louis Miller (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4506) granting an increase of pension to John R. Winter (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

CANCELLATION OF LOANS TO FRANCE.

Mr. KENYON. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be properly referred. I would like to have the joint resolution read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 154) providing for the cancellation of all war obligations of the Republic of France to the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all obligations of the Republic of France to the United States of America for moneys borrowed or funds advanced since the commencement of the present war, including interest thereon, be, and are hereby, canceled.

LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CALDER. I offer a Senate resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 240), was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the United States what part, if any, of the land in East Potomac Park in the City of Washington which last year was either allotted to, cleared by, or cultivated by the Boy Scouts of America or any of them, is now withdrawn from cultivation to be laid out as golf links, and why the ground east of the railroad track in said park now being made into golf links should not be allotted for cultivation and production of food crops during the period of the war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

H. R. 9959. An act to increase rates of pensions of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to take occasion to say that the fact that the House passed yesterday House bill 9959, which has just been referred to the Committee on Pensions, will deter me from asking the Senate to consider Senate bill 3783, Calendar No. 230, until after the Committee on Pensions has acted upon the House bill.

Mr. THOMAS. The House bill is a general pension bill also?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a general pension bill also.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 255. Joint resolution authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

ALLOWANCE OF OVERDRAFTS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3895 be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIBBY in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3895) to regulate the allowance of overdrafts by national banking associations, and to provide penalties for its violation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let the bill be read first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the officers of national banking associations shall present in writing at each meeting of the board of directors a list of all overdrafts made or allowed since the last meeting of the board, which list shall be noted on the minutes of the meeting and filed as a record of the association.

SEC. 2. That national banking associations doing business in a State, the laws of which prohibit overdrafts and impose penalties therefor, shall be subject to the same restrictions and penalties that are prescribed by such State laws for State banks and trust companies.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to release any association, or the officers and directors of any association, from the liabilities imposed by section 5239 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the first place, I notice that there is no report from the Treasury Department as to what effect the passage of the bill may have upon the existing law, nor does the department recommend its passage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state that this bill was drawn by the Treasury Department itself and sent down here. There is a series of bills that have been considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and this bill is one of that series. They are amendments to the national banking law so as to better protect the banks. The bill itself requires that the amounts of overdrafts shall be presented at each meeting, so that the attention of the directors will be called directly to them. It is unquestionably a wholesome measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think there is any national bank in the country that does not do that to-day?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, Mr. President, there are directors of national banks who never sit with the board of directors.

Mr. SMOOT. This bill if enacted into law would not compel them to do that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is another bill here that requires them to do it, and not to put up their names before the public for the purpose of drawing bank accounts through them and at the same time performing none of the duties of a director. There is a series of these bills, and they are bills that are recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Comptroller of the Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The attention of the Chair is called to the fact that there is a favorable report, but it simply says that the bill is reported favorably.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill is so plain that it does not need to have any reasons given for its passage.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Chair that I made my statement upon the basis of a report upon Order of Business 330, made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and submitted on April 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report is a very short one. It says that the bill is favorably reported, however.

Mr. SMOOT. The report simply says:

Your Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 3895) to regulate the allowance of overdrafts by national banking associations, and to provide penalties for its violation, having considered the same, respectfully report the bill favorably without amendment.

This bill becomes a new part of the national bank act and prevents the abuse of overdrafts.

My statement simply was that the bill had not been referred to the department, and that there was no favorable report from the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Oh, yes. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill, but I want to speak upon the bill. I certainly want a chance to speak upon its provisions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; of course the Senator has that right.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say, with relation to this bill, and some other bills that the Treasury Department desires to have enacted, that they are bills simply for the purpose of perfecting and making more certain measures that will be of benefit to the banking system. I can not conceive how anybody would object to the passage of this bill. It is simply a measure that requires the directors to have laid before them, every time they meet, a list of the overdrafts that are made by depositors. It is unquestionably proper that the directors should be notified of all overdrafts, and this compulsory statute is one that will have a tendency to make them place their minds upon each particular account, and consequently they will examine into the question whether it is safe to permit such overdrafts. There are some banks that permit overdrafts for months and months and years and years, and this is for the purpose of stopping that abuse, so that the attention of the directors will be called to it, and they will examine the account of the particular depositor and determine whether or not it is safe that this practice in banking should continue.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague a couple of questions regarding the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS. The first is whether the subject of overdrafts can not be regulated satisfactorily by the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it seems not. He seeks this authority. This bill comes directly from the Comptroller of the Currency. There is another provision of this bill, in section 2, that says that national banking associations doing business in a State——

Mr. THOMAS. That is the other matter I wanted to ask the Senator about.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. THOMAS. The bill proposes to subject the national banks to the operation of the State laws. Now, I recall that shortly after the State of Oklahoma adopted its guaranty law the Attorney General, in an opinion which was asked by the proper authorities, held that the national banks, being the creatures of a Federal statute, were not and could not be made subject to the operations of a State law. Does it not seem, upon the face of things, that what is now proposed is, if the opinion of the Attorney General to which I refer be correct, out of the power of Congress to enact?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, Mr. President. In that case the situation was the reverse. The State law attempted to impose that guaranty upon the national banking system, and the Supreme Court held that the national banking system could not be made the subject of State law. This bill is not making the national banks subject to State law. This adopts the State law, and it could adopt the banking system of the State if it desired to do so. In fact, there is a bill pending before the Senate now as to the question of adopting a certain form of insurance for deposits; but we know that having a law in a State prohibiting overdrafts in the State does not place the State banks and the national banks upon an equality. There is an advantage gained by reason of no restriction, and it is not right that it should be so. In fact, in my judgment, all of these banks should be made national banks, and a uniform system should exist. I believe that it is far better that that should be the case, for if so the banking system of the United States would be augmented in its importance and in its power and in its ability to resist runs much better by reason of that. But, Mr. President, it seems to me that this matter of prohibiting overdrafts is so clearly a matter of right, so clearly a matter that will be of benefit to the system itself, that there ought to be no question about the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not time to discuss this bill as I should like to. I will simply say now that no one will object to section 1 of the bill. It seems to me that if any bank of the United States is run in any other way than this section provides, the directors of that bank ought to have been dismissed long ago.

I know of no national bank, Mr. President, certainly none with which I have ever been connected, but that has a report made to the directors at every meeting in detail of the overdrafts, and not only of the overdrafts but of every loan that has been made during the month preceding. Those loans are first passed upon by the loan committee of the bank, and if there is a question of doubt about any of them they are never made until the board of directors pass on them; and if there should be any loan made by the loan committee that any member of the board questions, it is immediately investigated, and at the very first opportunity that particular loan is called, and it is never renewed, and as far as that person is concerned his account is closed.

The Senator knows that every bank must report to the Comptroller of the Currency the amount of overdrafts. When the national-bank examiner makes an investigation of the banks, he makes a list of every overdraft, giving name and amount. That is reported here to Washington. The regulations are very strict upon the overdraft question. Sometimes, I will admit, they are abused, but the regulations to-day provide all that is necessary, and if they had been enforced I know there would have been less overdrafts in the banks of the country than there have been in the past or less than there are at present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The argument which the Senator is making is the very best argument for the passage of this bill. He says good banking requires it. Then why not make it apply to those who will not pursue that system of banking?

Mr. SMOOT. I said in my opening statement I had no objection whatever to section 1 of the bill, but when it comes to section 2, that is an entirely different proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate joint resolution 152.

RENTAL OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Hollis	New	Sterling
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Thomas
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Tillman
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Trammell
Curtis	Kendrick	Pomerene	Underwood
Fall	Kenyon	Ransdell	Warren
Fletcher	King	Saulsbury	Watson
France	Kirby	Shafroth	Weeks
Gerry	Knox	Sheppard	Wolfley
Gronna	McCumber	Smith, Md.	Williams
Hardwick	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Henderson	McNary	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). My colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is unavoidably absent on official business.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. LENROOT, and Mr. SHIELDS answered to their names when called.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. SIMMONS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, on consideration by some members of the committee, we think we can rescue at least one of the fragments of the Constitution which decorated the atmosphere yesterday afternoon for quite a while by changing the phraseology of the last proviso of the joint resolution, and I offer the following amendment, which is practically a change of the verbiage. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, page 2, after the word "That," insert "all judicial remedies of the lessor based on"; and in line 13 strike out "is hereby declared to be void" and insert "are hereby suspended," so as to read:

Provided, That all judicial remedies of the lessor based on any provision in any oral agreement or written lease that the same shall be determined or forfeited if the premises shall be sold are hereby suspended while this resolution shall be in force.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senate will appreciate that the effect of this is simply to suspend a remedy on account of a provision mentioned instead of declaring it void.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Secretary read the joint resolution as it has been amended up to date.

Mr. POMERENE. Before that is done would the Senator have any objection if I should offer a preamble to it?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever.

Mr. POMERENE. Then I offer the following preamble, to be inserted immediately before line 1 of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the entire joint resolution with the proposed preamble.

The Secretary read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia.

Whereas by reason of the existence of a state of war, it is essential to the national security and defense, and for the successful prosecution of the war, to establish governmental control and assure adequate regulation of real estate in the District of Columbia for and during the period hereinafter set forth: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That until the adjournment sine die of the present session of the Congress no judicial order for the recovery of possession of any real estate, now or hereafter held or acquired by oral agreement or written lease for one month or any longer period, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, and all leases thereof shall continue so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, except on the ground that the tenant has failed to take reasonable care of the premises, or has committed waste, or has been guilty of conduct which is a nuisance or amounts to a disturbance of the peace of adjoining or neighboring occupiers, or a violation of law, or that the premises are reasonably required by a landlord or bona fide purchaser for occupation by himself or his family while in the employ of or officially connected with the Government, or where the property has been disposed of to a bona fide purchaser for his own occupancy; and where such order has been made, but not executed before the passage of this resolution, the court by which the order was made may, if it is of the opinion that the order would not have been made if this resolution had been in force at the date of the making of the order, rescind or modify the order in such manner as the court may deem proper for the purpose of giving effect to this resolution: Provided, That all judicial remedies of the lessor based on any provision in any oral or written lease that the same shall be determined or forfeited if the premises shall be sold are hereby suspended while this resolution shall be in force, and every purchaser shall take the conveyance of any premises subject to the rights of all tenants in possession thereof under the provisions of this resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator explain why he has selected the 3d day of March next as the day for the termination of the operation of this law?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator has not apprehended the true meaning of the joint resolution. The wording was until the adjournment sine die of the present session of Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would make it then still shorter. It might end then in July of this year?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes; in July of this year. I will state the reason for that. We have reported a bill for the Committee on the District of Columbia to govern the cases provided for in the joint resolution and additional cases; in other words, taking up the whole subject of land tenures in the District of Columbia. We anticipate that while we may get that bill through the Senate with reasonable rapidity after full discussion it will require some time to adjust the differences between the two Houses, as it is an amendment of the House bill and proceeds to regulate this matter of tenure in the District of Columbia on an entirely different principle from that proposed by the House. Of necessity there will have to be a conference committee, and we think that the conferees will require quite a long time to determine which bill is the best. I think the whole matter is in a state of flux now. We think in the District Committee that this course is the best. The House doubtless thinks their method is the best. In the meantime there is going on in the District a practice among lessors who lease apartments to others, and also many of the smaller dwelling houses, that is actually producing almost a system of terrorism in the District. I was in conference this morning with a captain in the War Department and he told me that last week he had 1,100 cases that he had to adjust in one way or another. He says at least one-third of the people who come down here for service in the departments leave because they are not able to get proper housing accommodations.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is simply to meet the present exigency until a general law can be passed by Congress covering the whole situation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Precisely, and unless we can pass such a law covering the whole situation by the adjournment of this session this resolution naturally falls. This is merely an exigency resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yet I can not see why, even then, it is necessary to have it expire with the session, because it could be amended in such a way that it would be repealed by the very law that we would enact, and it would so declare. In that way we would be sure to have this necessary law even though we failed to secure the enactment of the other law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We anticipate the same difficulty in getting this resolution through the House in such a shape as we would have in getting the bill through which the committee has reported, because it disagrees with the views which the House have in favor of their bill. The reason for the immediate passage of this resolution, as we conceive it, is that these notices are now being given broadcast to tenants or the occupiers of apartments, and we want to fix the status of the present tenants and the landlords until we can suitably and with reasonable care dispose of the whole question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I tried to follow the amendment as read from the desk, but was unable to decide in my own mind just how far the amendment went. So I am going to avail myself of this opportunity to ask the Senator a question.

Last evening I had a case brought to my attention like this: Some four years ago—nearly five, now—a gentleman purchased a home on the installment plan in the District of Columbia. Some two years ago he was taken ill. His wife undertook to keep the payments up, but failed. A little while ago he died, and it was impossible for her to make a living. So she made a lease of her home. The payment on the principal of the home becomes due now within about 30 days. She will be compelled to sell the home, or else they are going to lose all they paid for the place up until the time the husband was taken sick. What I want to know is whether the joint resolution affects a case of that kind, and whether she could sell that home and deliver it to a bona fide purchaser?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes; for his own use or to be used by any employee of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. She could not sell it, then, to a real estate man who desired to resell it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; not to profiteer on it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that it would be profiteering.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is the idea.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state the details of the case as she told it to me, and then you will know about it. She said she had a friend who had advised her to sell this property some time back, and they put a price upon it that it was impossible to secure, but, now that she is compelled to sell it, she is willing to sell it to this friend. He does not want to purchase it if he can get the amount from somebody else, but he has already promised her that if he can not sell it to somebody else he will take it rather than see her lose the property. Under the joint resolution is it possible for that party to purchase this property?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Entirely so. The only possible difficulty will be that the purchaser will take it and allow the present tenant to continue in occupancy of it.

Mr. SMOOT. He may want to sell it, and he could not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. He could sell it to anyone who would occupy it himself or to any Government employee. The idea is to prevent speculation in real estate.

Mr. SMOOT. I am in full sympathy, I will say to the Senator, with the idea of the joint resolution and the object sought by it, but it looks to me it goes too far in many respects.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It only recognizes the position of the present tenant. That is all the joint resolution professes to do.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I understand the joint resolution, the premises may be sold any number of times, so that you recognize the rights of the tenant.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Precisely. There is no restriction on sale. It is merely that the tenant has a claim to continue in the tenure of the property unless a bona fide purchaser buys it for his own use or unless some Government agent is placed in it.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the joint resolution is submitted to a vote may I inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill reported, I think, yesterday, and which is to be substituted for this when it is enacted, if it is his purpose to press the consideration of the measure?

Mr. POMERENE. I was not aware that I was especially in charge of the bill, but if the question was addressed to me we hope to take it up at a very early hour. It is on the calendar, and we expect to press it because we are anxious to have it passed. We believe there is such a state of conditions here in the District that a due regard for the many thousands of people who have to rent houses will require very prompt action.

I may say that I do not believe Senators generally appreciate the anxiety that exists among people now residing temporarily in the District unless their attention has been specially called to this subject. I think it was a surprise to nearly every member of the District of Columbia Committee that there was such a general feeling existing in the city and a real necessity for some legislation upon this subject

We realize that there are certain differences of opinion perhaps between the House and the Senate relating to this subject, and we felt that it would be the part of wisdom to present the present joint resolution with the hope that it could be promptly passed and relieve to a certain extent the minds of those who are renters in the District. We expect to press the other bill at the earliest moment possible.

Mr. THOMAS. That is very satisfactory to me. I quite agree with the Senator that no time should be lost in placing such a law upon the statute books.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I suppose some legislation on this subject has got to be passed, but I am very fearful of the outcome of this measure in its effect upon the things we are really trying to cure. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] pointed out last evening, the effect of it will be to at once stop any further building operations in the District. Today it is difficult to build houses at a profit. Building materials and labor are 50 per cent higher than they were two years ago, and there is no money available for building-loan mortgages. Perhaps 95 per cent of the building construction in this city, and I might say in the large cities of the country, is on borrowed money. Mortgage concerns, insurance companies, banks, and other people with money to loan advance about one-half the money usually required to construct apartment houses, hotels, and dwelling houses that are built to sell or to rent.

Already there is very little money to be had, even for permanent real-estate mortgages. This will close the market so that we need not expect any relief in the construction of additional buildings. That is one thing that worries me about this legislation. I had hoped that we might approach it in some different way, so as to prevent men who own dwelling houses and apartments here from charging an exorbitant rent.

I may say the same condition which exists here, to a more or less degree, exists in every large city in the country. We have had no new buildings constructed in the last two years, or none to speak of, and no money can be borrowed for their construction. In some parts of New York City rent has increased 25 per cent. There are no apartment vacancies in New York City, and, I am told, the same condition exists in Philadelphia, St. Louis, Chicago, and other large cities of the country. So this measure will stop, while it is in operation, all the construction of buildings, and perhaps in the end that might be more disastrous to the District than to encourage building operations and let the supply and demand adjust the rent.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I can not agree with my friend from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I regret the necessity of legislation of this kind just as much as he can regret it. I do not want to interfere with normal conditions, but if this legislation is passed we shall not be interfering with normal conditions. My heart goes out to the people of the city of Washington, who are here on meager salaries, who are barely able to make ends meet, and then are to be confronted by an increase of from 33⅓ per cent to more than 100 per cent in the rents which they have got to pay. Some of the people who are coming in here, some of these "dollar-a-year men"—and I do not want to disparage the very great work they are doing—come and offer almost any amount of rent. They are displacing a good many very deserving people. I have always felt a keen dislike for any legislation of this kind, but it does seem to me that we must profit by the conditions as we see them. I have not any doubt about the fact that unless the Congress of the United States grants some relief along the lines of the pending legislation a great many of the employees of the Government of the United States at this time, when we need their services here in this District, are going to be dispossessed or they will be required to pay exorbitant rents. That is the situation that confronts us. I regret it exceedingly, but we must take counsel of what we see.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I only want to interject one good word for the "dollar-a-year men." We have all agreed that sometimes their activities are not of as great benefit as they might be; but I want to say to my friend from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] that even the "dollar-a-year men," who have come down here and paid very high rents for houses, have been affected by this condition. I know, for example, of a gentleman who is paying $15,000 a year for a house. The owner said that he or she wished to come back to the house, but if the "dollar-a-year man" would increase his rent to $30,000 a year instead of $15,000 a year, he might continue. The "dollar-a-year man" said even though he might be serving the Government for a dollar a year he was not going to be blackmailed into buying a house with a year's rent, and he has obtained a residence somewhere else.

Another condition occurs to me. I was told not long ago by an employee about the Capitol, when something was said about raising salaries here, "I should like very much to have my salary raised, but I hope my landlord will not find it out, because, if he does, he will take it away from me the next morning." That is the condition. It is not unfair to describe the general conditions in this town in somewhat that way.

We were talking about some notices which have been given apartment holders in two houses as to which the Senator from Ohio and myself produced notices. I heard to-day from a gentleman who is attending to the housing for the employees of the War Department that in one case, where 33⅓ per cent more rent is now demanded, last October an advance was made of 25 per cent in the rent. So 25 per cent last October and 33⅓ per cent now makes a very wholesome sum for any person living here on a fixed salary to pay.

These conditions, I think, may be taken to be the generally prevailing conditions in this District. I think, practically, that is the only reason why the District Committee came to the unanimous conclusion that this sort of legislation must be resorted to. I therefore hope the joint resolution will be passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, there is comparatively a small number of tenants here who are not in the Government service who would be affected by this joint resolution or by the succeeding bill, which will be before the Senate in due time. The larger part of those embraced in the provisions of this joint resolution, or who will be affected by it, are in the Government service in some capacity or other. Unless something is done to relieve these tenants, the changes that are forthcoming will compel a large part of them to leave Washington. Practically all this joint resolution does, Mr. President, is to preserve the present status of affairs.

There is some measure of truth in what the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] has said, that the passage of the joint resolution may delay or may for the time being check building operations; but practically there will be no contract entered into for the building of tenement houses or apartment buildings in Washington after existing contracts shall have been completed. A number of those who are the principal apartment-house owners in Washington practically stated before the committee that the existing contracts would be carried out, but that they would not have undertaken their present contracts if they had known the conditions in the market, in connection with labor and material, which they are now facing. However, they are under contract, and they will complete the buildings which are now in process of construction; but for the future, while the war is in progress, I believe there will be very few of them that are in contemplation now or will be entered into until the close of the war. Practically the building-construction trades in all the principal cities of the country are at a standstill. I know the Building Trades Council in Chicago has reported the condition of business as being practically at an end in their operations. We will have to get along, outside of what the Government is doing in the vicinity of camps and in shipyards, with our present housing facilities. Any increase in facilities in all probability will come as a result of Government operation, just as is the case in Washington, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Alexandria, and other points of that kind. So I do not regard that the passage of this joint resolution will very largely diminish any of the prospective housing facilities in Washington. I do not look for those operations to be very extensive; practically they will be negligible for the future until the war closes.

Unless some such legislation as this is passed, there will be very great hardship among many of the tenants who are here in the Government service. There has come to my attention, by correspondence and by those who have interviewd me at my office and at some other points, and those who have come to my home, a number of tenants who will suffer very great hardship if existing conditions are allowed to continue.

I am not impressed with the disposition of many of the property owners—I do not apply this to all of them, but to many of the property owners and landlords, or the real estate agents who represent them—to practice any great self-denial in the matter of making leases.

Many of the sales that are made are merely colorable sales; they are merely a sort of what stockbrokers would call wash sales; they are simply intended to extort more money from the tenant or to remove the tenant entirely, and to put some one else in his place who will submit to a greater charge for rent. There are so many of those cases which have come to me by correspondence or by personal communication that I have come to the conclusion that, while this is an unusual form of legislation, the conditions are unusual. The city of Washington is an unusual city. There are more tenants in Washington and fewer owners than there are in any city in the United States. It is a place where any injustice practiced by a landlord, or by the landlords generally, will affect a larger number of people than it would in any other place in the country.

If landlords are permitted to live with a fair degree of certainty, with some profit—it is not a question of making 50 or 100 per cent; it is not a question of making rents that would be commensurate with the ordinary profits that go with war contracts; it is a question of maintaining the existing status of things, enabling the property owner to keep his property in repair, to pay taxes, and not to be permitted to oppress the tenant—if the landlords can live until the war closes, that is about all that anybody not engaged in direct war contracts will be able to do. Most of the mercantile houses, many manufacturers in lines of trade not directly connected with war, are satisfied to be able to live. If they can keep their doors open, if they can keep their pay rolls together, if they can pay expenses, and make even a very close margin of profit, if they can simply transact business until the war closes, many of the men of the country will be satisfied. Many of the clothing merchants are doing business on that basis; many of the grocers are making very low profits now. Their prices, it is true, are fixed under the Food Administration act on many staple articles, but the hardware men, all of the men who have been engaged in stone and concrete work, in concrete building and street contracts, paving, and the like, are satisfied if they can keep their machinery from rusting out, and can make enough simply to keep their pay rolls together, and not scatter their employees to the four corners of the earth, until the war closes. In many areas of my own section of the country and adjoining States those engaged in concrete work have found it impossible to take contracts especially if it is for reinforced concrete, where they need a certain amount of steel and iron to make the framework that reinforces their concrete.

They have finished all their profitable work; and all they are now doing is simply endeavoring to keep enough of the employees on their pay roll together so that they will not have to close their offices. While those conditions prevail it seems to me that the landlords in Washington ought to submit to some measure of this kind, which will enable them to pay taxes and to keep their property in repair; and as the bill which is to follow this joint resolution will provide—I think it is proper for me to state—a fair margin of profit, whatever form it may take, whether it be 7 per cent, as in the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], or some other per cent, or whether it finally reaches the legislation proposed by the bill in the other House, that offered by Representative JOHNSON—whatever form this final legislation may assume, Mr. President, it will give the property owner a margin of profit that will, it is true, not be a war profit, but will be enough to enable him to live and to keep his property in order. If that is done during the war, I think the landlords of Washington ought to be satisfied.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say one word further, if I may. I received a letter this morning from an officer in the Navy, who resides at the Cordova, I believe; at any rate, he resides in one of two apartment houses which are managed by the same agent. An increase of 33⅓ per cent was demanded of him, and it was required that the lease should be signed on or before May 10. The custom has been for the tenant to enter into his lease for the ensuing year on or about September 1, the year expiring September 30. In this particular apartment house there happened to be a number of officers of the Army and Navy and their families. Many of these officers are now in the service in France, and here comes this request for an increase in rental of 33⅓ per cent, the lease to be signed on or before May 10, when heretofore the leases were not expected to be signed until about the 1st of September. I am advised also that there was an increase of 25 per cent last October; and now another raise of 33⅓ per cent. There is something that this Government owes to the families of its officers in the service.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to say to the Senator that in some instances—I know of one particularly that came under my personal observation—the increase last fall was 50 per cent, and there have been increases two or three times since.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not surprised to hear of that. I do not believe that Senators realize the extent to which the increasing of rents has been going on. I am glad to say that there are some real-estate men in the city who deplore these raises just as much as Senators do; but I can not help but feel that there is a duty which the Congress of the United States owes to our officers, our soldiers and sailors, as well as to the employees of the Government here. The practice against which this joint resolution is aimed ought to be prevented, and it can be prevented.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator has suggested that we shall have a bill on this subject. I hope that that bill will be broad enough to cover the entire United States, because I am informed that conditions in the neighborhood of the various camps and cantonments and elsewhere are as bad as in the city of Washington. I have had occasion several times in the city of Washington to open up my own home to those who were nearly strangers to me because of their inability to find any place to stay without paying such exorbitant charges as would be beyond their means. This condition, however, is not peculiar to Washington alone. It will be found in many other places, and I hope that the provisions of the new bill will be broad enough to cover every place where a similar situation prevails.

Now, I wish to ask the Senator another question, because I want the idea to be remembered when we are considering the bill which is to be taken up. There is nothing in this joint resolution, so far as I observe, that will take care of the subtenants of a tenant. I know personally of many instances where an individual rented a large number of rooms, wherever he could get them, in the city last summer and last fall, furnished them with second-hand furniture that could probably be bought at any second-hand store for from $5 to $10, and is now charging enormous rents for the use of those rooms to subtenants. Certainly we ought to relieve those cases as well as the cases of tenants of landlords.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I must differ from the Senator in the construction which he places upon this measure.

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly I am in error; I have not read the measure over very carefully, because my attention has just been called to the matter to which I have referred.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator will find that it protects all tenants, whether they are tenants or subtenants, so far as the right of the landlord to dispossess them is concerned.

Mr. McCUMBER. So far as present rights are concerned, I understand that is so; but we ought to have a remedy that would go back of that and compel the acceptance of reasonable rentals, irrespective of any contract that has been made.

Mr. POMERENE. I think if the Senator will take the opportunity to study the bill which has been reported to the Senate, he will agree with the committee that it meets the conditions the Senator has in mind.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in line with one of the suggestions of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and at the same time in response to one suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] with reference to the bill to be considered covering this whole matter, I wish to say that the matter that was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia had reference only to conditions in the District, and I imagine the committee did not consider that it had jurisdiction and the right to include in the measure recommended by it the whole United States. Therefore the bill which will follow this measure, as it has been reported to the Senate, at any rate, only applies to the conditions in the District of Columbia. I recognize that a similar situation exists in a great many places, as the Senator from North Dakota has indicated; but the committee, as I have said, did not understand that it had jurisdiction to go outside of the District.

Mr. President, I have here a letter with reference to conditions in the Alabama Apartment House, here in the city, from which I am going to read one paragraph. I know the man who writes it, and he is a thoroughly reliable, responsible man. He says:

> It may be of interest to you and your committee to know that an accurate census of 40 of the 49 apartments in this building, taken to-day, shows that 97 Government employees live in those 40 apartments—

And this now is in line with what the Senator from Ohio just suggested—> and that 27 men have gone from them in uniforms into the war—

Now, it is proposed either to raise the rent for the apartments in this house or, under the guise of a sale, to put all of the tenants out of this apartment, including the families of the 27 men who are fighting on the battle front in France for the liberties of the people of the whole country and of the District of Columbia, in order that some man may secure a little more money. Congress, if it can stop anything of that kind, ought to do it, and I believe it can. The writer of the letter continues—> and that their wives and other dependents still living here will find it difficult, if not quite impossible, like the rest of us, to find other homes in this city, and certainly not at rental prices they can afford to pay.

Then, also, as showing the utter disregard of associations that must have grown up among these tenants and this landlord, I call attention to this paragraph:

Many of these people have lived in this apartment house since it was first opened 13 years ago, and the average length of the tenancy of all the families here is about 8 years.

Although these people have been living there for from 8 to 13 years and their means of support in many instances are fighting on the battle line in Europe, the owner of this property must take advantage of conditions now to enrich himself at their expense. That is not the only example of the kind in the city.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the preamble offered by me.

The preamble was agreed to as follows:

Whereas by reason of the existence of a state of war, it is essential to the national security and defense, and for the successful prosecution of the war, to establish governmental control and assure adequate regulation of real estate in the District of Columbia for and during the period hereinafter set forth: Therefore be it.

ALLOWANCE OF OVERDRAFTS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3895. It is a bill which we started to discuss before the joint resolution relating to rents in the District of Columbia was taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3895) to regulate the allowance of overdrafts by national banking associations, and to provide penalties for its violation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the passage of Senate bill 3895 now under consideration, provided section 2 of the bill is eliminated. I realize that it is almost a waste of time to try to speak upon a bill when there are so few Senators present; but I think when the Senator having the bill in charge stops to consider section 2, he himself will conclude that it is a very unwise provision. Section 2 reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That national banking associations doing business in a State, the laws of which prohibit overdrafts and impose penalties therefor, shall be subject to the same restrictions and penalties that are prescribed by such State laws for State banks and trust companies.

Mr. President, that is nothing more nor less than making national banks subject to State law. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that there are State laws that regulate the amount of loans that may be made to any one person based on the percentage of the capital stock and surplus. The national banking act carries a similar provision but a different percentage. And there are other provisions of the national bank act that conflict with State laws affecting State banks. There is nothing in the report of the committee to show how many States have passed laws affecting overdrafts, or what they are, and we are going blindly at passing this bill.

So far as the first and third sections of the bill are concerned, I do not believe that anyone could object to them, but it does seem to me that it is unwise for Congress now to make the national banks of this country subject to State law, and that is what section 2 of this bill does.

Mr. McCUMBER. They have always been subject to State law with reference to usury, have they not? In other words, the usury laws of the States always apply to national banks just as they do to State banks?

Mr. SMOOT. That is, as to money that is loaned to a citizen of the State. There is no general national law upon that subject, and there is a good reason for this.

Mr. McCUMBER. This bill relates to only one specific matter, does it not, namely, the matter of overdrafts?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is limited to that?

Mr. SMOOT. It is limited to overdrafts. But does the Senator know what the law is in regard to overdrafts in any one of the States?

Mr. McCUMBER. I presume the State laws differ just as the law of one State differs from the law of another State with reference to the penalties for usury, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the case of the guaranteeing of deposits in Oklahoma under State law the courts held that the national banks are not subject to State law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, that was because the State law attempted to make the national banks subject to the provisions of the State law, was it not?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the State law did not undertake to do that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; it did. It said that before national banks should be permitted to do business in the State they should join in a fund for the guarantee of deposits.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the State went so far as to say that if the national banks did avail themselves of the State law they were to pay the same percentage as the State banks paid toward the fund that would reimburse depositors that might have deposits in a failed bank. That was all that was involved in that question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, that case involved the question whether or not a national bank itself could subscribe for and participate in that fund and whether it could accept the guaranty which was there; and the court held that a national bank, being a bank that was limited by its very charter, its powers being prescribed by the United States statutes, it did not possess the power to use the funds of its depositors in making a guaranty fund.

That, however, is a different question from the one that is here.

As the Senator from North Dakota has said, there are many State laws that are operative as to national banks, as in the illustration of the laws that relate to usury; and there are many other laws of the same kind. Prosecutions are made under State laws for theft, whether the theft is from a national bank or whether it is from a State bank.

I do not see that there is any conflict of powers. It may be a question of policy as to whether or not section 2 should be adopted, but so far as the authority is concerned I have no doubt about it, and the Solicitor of the Treasury has recommended this measure, and it is his draft of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, it may be that the Treasury Department drafted the bill, but certainly, as the Senator says, whether it is a wise policy or not ought to be decided by Congress. I think it is a very unwise policy. I do not believe that we ought to embark on this kind of legislation. Therefore I am going to move to strike out section 2 of the bill.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. I want to say that I entirely agree with the Senator from Utah, for the reason that I think it is extremely bad policy to subject institutions that are subject to the exclusive regulation of the United States to a dual system of law, except in cases where it is absolutely essential.

Referring to the illustration given by the Senator from North Dakota as to national banks being subject to the usury laws of the various States, there is a very excellent reason for that provision of the national banking law, namely, that the value of money varies in different sections of the country. The market value of money is more in some parts of the country than it is in other parts, and the States are perhaps the best judges of what ought to be a usurious rate within their borders. The people along the Atlantic coast would not know so much about what the rates should be along the Pacific coast, or in the Northwest, or in the Southwest. For that reason, in order to enable the banks to charge the current, legal, market rate for the money that they lend, they allow the national banks to charge as much as the State banks, and make that usury in a national bank which is usury in a State bank.

I have not any objection whatever to penalties being prescribed for overdrafts, if it is considered good policy to incorporate a provision of that kind into our national banking system; but, if so, we ought to do it ourselves. It is a national banking system, not a State banking system, nor is it a national banking system subject to control here, there, and elsewhere by the States.

As to the first section of the bill, while I think perhaps all well-regulated national banks do require their cashiers to present at every meeting of the board of directors a statement of the overdrafts, and those that do not ought to be compelled to do it, I think that is a first-rate provision; but in the absence of a declaration of a policy of general application to all national banks with regard to a penalty for overdrafts, I do not believe we ought to leave some national banks subject to such a penalty because they happen to be located in particular States where they do have a provision of that kind.

I would readily vote for a penalty for overdrafts in all national banks, but I do not think we ought to provide in this bill a penalty only in States where penalties are imposed under the State law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, can the Senator fail to see some inconsistency in a State law that would be applicable to one bank doing business in the State and not applicable to another? Suppose there was no law at all passed by Congress with reference to national banks in the matter of overdrafts, and it should be made a criminal offense in a State for any State bank to accept a check which would overdraw the account. Then we would have the peculiar situation of this being perfectly legal if it is done in a State bank and illegal and subject, perhaps, to a very heavy penalty if it is done in another bank in the same State. That does not seem to me to be just.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I think there is a good deal of misapprehension about overdrafts. Some people have a notion that an overdraft is necessarily something that is wrong. There are communities where a great deal of credit is extended in that way. It depends altogether on who is making the overdraft and what there is back of the man whose account is allowed to be overdrawn.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would cover the propriety of it; but the point I wanted to make was the impropriety of having a law which would be operative in a particular State against one financial institution but would not be operative against another financial institution in the same State.

Mr. KNOX. In reply to that, Mr. President, I should like to say that the banking laws of the States and the National banking law are not consistent at all, and are not intended to be consistent. The national banking act is a very much more severe code of banking than the generality of the State statutes, and they are full of inconsistencies. For instance, a national bank can not lend an amount more than 10 per cent of its capital and surplus to any one person, and yet under the laws of most of the States a State bank can lend him just as much as it thinks his credit entitles him to receive.

For that reason, in a great many States where the prohibitions of the national banking act are considered too severe by the commercial interests of the State, you will find the national banks, at the same time that they are operating under the national banking system, likewise controlling a trust company or a State bank, where they can have greater liberality in dealing with their customers.

So my reply, to put it in general terms, is that there is no design that there should be consistency between the two systems; and to revert to what I said a moment ago, if overdrafts are inherently wrong and are commercially not the correct thing to allow we ought to impose the penalty under the national banking act itself.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it seems to me that when we understand this provision, it is very plain and clear that an evil is intended to be corrected. I have been told by a banker on the floor of the Senate that more than one-third of the losses to banks have been from overdrafts; that they are generally made either by men who are large stockholders in the bank, or by men who are officers of the bank, or by men who have some peculiar confidential relation with some of the officers of the bank; and it is an evil that the United States Government would like to get rid of. It would like to prevent any overdrafts; but, Mr. President, it can not very well do it, because if State banks are permitted to cash overdrafts, people will argue that they can get accommodations at a State bank when they can not get them at a national bank. It is on that account that I understand the national bankers have objected to prohibiting overdrafts generally, because, if the State banks do not prohibit them, it compels the national bankers to lose business.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator tell me of a State in the Union that has a law against overdrafts?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can name one to the Senator. My own State makes it a criminal offense, if I remember correctly, to draw upon a bank or to issue a check upon a bank for an amount greater than the amount of your credit at that bank, and it does not make any difference whether it is a State or a National bank. I again refer to the inconsistency of making my colleague guilty of a misdemeanor if he should overdraw his account in a State bank while I go scot-free if I should overdraw my account in a national bank in the same State. If it is a criminal offense or an offense which carries with it any penalty against the individual, it does seem to me, notwithstanding the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the law ought to be the same in both instances.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that there is not an overdraft in any bank in the State of North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator wants to ascertain whether anyone is ever allowed to overdraw his account, he would have to go to the banks. I simply say that there is a law making it an offense for anyone to overdraw his account.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know of a State in this Union that does not allow overdrafts, and the law to which the Senator has referred has nothing whatever to do with an overdraft. That law applies to a man who willfully issues a check upon a bank when he knows he has no money there and has not made arrangements for his checks to be paid, and has no credit whatever in the bank.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I thought my colleague made it very plain that the State of North Dakota has a law which makes it a crime to make an overdraft, no matter how long the person may have had an account with the bank. My colleague stated the truth. I know it to be a fact.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is president of three banks in North Dakota, as I understand. Will the Senator say that there is never an overdraft in any one of the three banks of which he is president?

Mr. GRONNA. If there is, it is contrary to the law.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what I asked. I asked the question whether the Senator, as president of those three banks, never allowed an overdraft?

Mr. GRONNA. If there is an overdraft, I will say to the Senator that it is a violation of law.

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply make the statement that there is not a bank in the United States that at some time or other does not have an overdraft.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me further——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. With regard to the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I want to say that we find it very difficult to incorporate in a national statute any provision penalizing overdrafts. There are many States, of course, that have no statutes providing a penalty for overdrafts. There are many States that do have laws making it a crime of some kind, and penalizing overdrafts. Now, the Comptroller of the Currency, when he drafted this measure—and it is a measure that was drafted by the department—of course had it in mind that the national banks ought to be subjected to the same penalties to which the State banks are subjected. I think it is only fair, and I think it is no injustice to the national banks, and it is no injustice to the State banks. In fact, the bankers of my State welcome such a law as this, because it gives the banker an excuse for stopping overdrafts. He can say to his customers that there is a State law and there is a Federal law which makes it a crime to overdraw an account. That is a protection to the banker.

Of course, if the Senator from Utah wants to strike out section 2, we might just as well not pass the bill, because the provision embodied in that section is all there is to the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, whether or not there are other States than North Dakota which have laws which prohibit overdrafts is immaterial in this discussion. If there are no States that are affected by it, the great damage and harm which the Senator from Utah indicates and predicts as the result of this measure would not take effect in any State. But I have no doubt that the Senator from North Dakota is correct when he says that it is the law of North Dakota, and I have no doubt that there are other States in the same position. The Treasury Department has drawn this bill for the purpose of meeting an evil, and that evil evidently arises from an abuse of some kind; and while I have not a list of the States that have that law, I have no doubt that there are a number of States that have laws to that effect.

Mr. President, an overdraft is one of the insidious ways of people getting into the debt of a bank, and it is difficult for the cashier or the officers of the bank to say "no," because the check comes to them without any explanation. It may be that it is something that was very urgent at the time, and the banker does not like to offend his depositor, and the result of it is that the bank assumes the risk; but that is a risk which good banking absolutely should prohibit, as it seems to me.

I am satisfied that is the intention of the Comptroller of the Currency in presenting this proposed law. He can not very well make it operative as to the entire United States without making it an inducement for the depositor to keep his account in a State bank in preference to keeping it in a national bank, because the depositor could get accommodations in a State bank, where there was no law prohibiting it, when if the United States were to pass a general law of this kind he could not get the accommodation in the national banks. For that reason the law ought to be uniform in the banks of each State.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator very correctly stated that we can not make a law covering the entire United States. That would be an injustice to the national banks in States which do not have such a law affecting the State banks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the suggestion that was made by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], it seems to me, is another splendid reason for making the law uniform in the State, whether it applies to national banks or whether it applies to State banks. When a man has a transaction with a State bank he ought not to be subject to a penalty if the same kind of a transaction in a national bank would make him free from any such liability. These are penal statutes, and they ought to apply to both State and national banks in the same State. If it is wrong to have overdrafts and to draw on banks in which you have no money, it seems to me the law ought to be applicable in both instances or in neither instance; and inasmuch as it is the general concensus of opinion of bankers that overdrafts are not wise, there ought to be a penalty, and the party ought to be prohibited from drawing on his account beyond the amount which he has on deposit in both State and national banks. These are some of the reasons why all banks should come into the Federal Reserve System. Bankers want this law, because they want to be able to say to their customers: "I can not do this; the law prohibits it. I would like to accommodate you as I did in years gone by, but I can not do it now. I am not going to subject myself to a penal statute of the United States in order to accommodate you. You must absolutely conform to the law." It is wise banking, and the depositor can not take offense at it, and in every way it seems to me to be to the interest of both the national banks and the State banks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if it is admitted that overdrafts should be prohibited—and I have no objection whatever if that is to be the policy of the Government—then we should say so in plain language in this bill. If they are wrong, they ought to be prohibited, and we ought to pass a law saying that hereafter no national banking association shall grant an overdraft at any time to anyone.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator believe that the Congress could pass a law that would affect State institutions?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. Then would it not be a discrimination against the national banks?

Mr. SMOOT. If the practice is a vicious one, if it is wrong, it ought to be stopped in the national banks; and if the States think the same way they will pass laws stopping it with respect to State banks.

Mr. GRONNA. But it would not be stopped merely by the Federal Government passing the act.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but the Senator from Utah takes the position that as far as the Government of the United States is concerned Congress enacts the laws governing the national banks. If Congress makes a change in existing law affecting the national banks, let it do so; but let it not try to undertake to put the national banks under the provisions of a State law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. I think he fails to consider the criminal law question in this matter. Should not an act committed in a particular State which is made a crime in that State be punishable if it is committed against one bank just as much as against another bank?

For instance, in Ohio they may not have any usury law at all. They may not think it is necessary. Some years ago I understood that they had no usury law, and I do not know that they have a usury law to-day. In our State we have a very severe usury law. Now, I think the Senator must agree with me that if in the State of Ohio they have no usury law the condition should be the same whether it is with reference to a national bank or with reference to a State bank.

Mr. SMOOT. But the trouble is that it is not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know; but if Ohio sees fit not to make usury a crime, then it will not be a crime whether committed by a national bank or by a State bank or by an individual; whereas in North Dakota, if we see fit to make usury a crime, it is a crime whether committed by a national bank, by a State bank, or by an individual. Now, why should we make a distinction between the characters of banks that take usury or any of these other things?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Comptroller of the Currency has notified all the national banks of the United States that there shall be no higher rate of interest than he has designated charged upon certain loans. That applies to all the national banks. The national banks of Ohio have to comply with that requirement. If the State of Ohio does not desire to pass a usury law the majority of the people of Ohio no doubt approved that policy; and as far as any impropriety in it is concerned, the national banking laws and the State laws do not agree upon many, many questions; among them, the questions referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

The Senator knows that a few years ago a national bank was not allowed to lend upon real estate. I do not care what the value of the real estate was, even if it was the very best security in the world, the national banks could not lend a dollar upon it. On the other hand, there was not a State bank but that could lend money upon that same real estate. It is a question for the State as to what the policy of the State shall be. We are legislating, not for State banks, but for national banks.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, right there, suppose the policy of our State is that it shall be an offense for me to overdraw my account in any bank. Why, then, should the Senator say that, although the offense may be applicable if I overdraw my account in a State bank, it shall not be applicable if I overdraw my account in a National bank? It is the individual that I am trying to protect and have the same law apply to him wherever he may be.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the State institutions are to be controlled by the legislature of the State; and I say now without fear of contradiction that if there is a law in North Dakota making it a crime to have made an overdraft in a bank there is not a single, solitary day in all the year that it is not violated. All the States have a law imposing a penalty for issuing checks upon a bank when the individual has no account in the bank and has no credit in the bank and has made no arrangements there for a credit, and when the check has been issued for the purpose of securing money under false pretenses. Every State has that kind of a law; but I say now that we can go to the Treasury Department to-day and go through the last reports of the national banks of the United States, and we will find that there is not a city in all this country but that the reports of the national banks located in that city will show that there are overdrafts in them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator seems not to take into consideration at all the purpose of a law penalizing an overdraft. The purpose of the law in my State is to prevent a fraud upon an individual to whom you issue a check. It is the purpose of the law to protect the individual. According to the theory of the Senator, the law would be nugatory, or should be nugatory, if a check was issued against a national bank. It is just as much of an offense to impose upon some one by purchasing something from him and giving a spurious check upon a national bank as it would be upon a State bank, and the penalty ought to be exactly the same, because the offense consists in the fraud, in the injury that is imposed upon the people of that State.

Mr. SMOOT. It ought to be exactly the same, Mr. President, and it is the policy to be the same. But suppose we pass this bill with a provision making it a crime for anyone to overdraw his account in a national bank, this would be the result: The Government of the United States would enforce it as to the national banks in North Dakota, when as to the State banks under the law there existing to-day it is not enforced.

Mr. President, we know if Congress passes a law that makes it a crime to have an overdraft in a national bank that law will be enforced. The Senator from North Dakota admits that there is overdrafting in his State when there is a law against it and it is not enforced. Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me it is a question that we should not deal with in this way. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to vote for the remainder of the bill, but I do not want to vote for the bill with section 2 in it. Therefore, I move to strike out section 2.

Mr. PAGE. Let me ask the Senator from Utah a question before he makes his motion. I heard the discussion between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from North Dakota in which the Senator from North Dakota says he wants to protect the man whose check is drawn. I should like to know if it is true that the drawing of a check on a bank where the drawer of the check has no balance is not the securing of money under false pretenses, just as much as though this law existed?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator it is, and that is what the law in most of the States undertakes to prevent, but nearly every bank in the country, I will say, has an understanding with its regular customers that if they desire an overdraft they can have it up to a limited amount, but not over and above that amount. The law in North Dakota is against overdrafts, but there are overdrafts in North Dakota just the same.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, speaking as one who is interested in banks, I want to say that I presume bankers for many reasons would be glad to have a law that would make it imperative upon the bank officials to say to everyone overdrawing, "We shall certainly protest your check if your account is overdrawn"; but it is a fact that many times a check comes in which overdraws the account of the bank's best customer, one who has by inadvertence or mistake overdrawn his account and who promptly makes his account good on notice that it is overdrawn. We know that if we protest the check it is a blot upon the credit of a good customer and that the protest will injure him a great deal.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will suggest to the Senator, Mr. President, that if the State does not have a law that makes it an offense, then it does not apply in that State. On that account it seems to me it would not disturb the uniformity of the rule that exists in any one State. This is intended to make the action uniform in those States where they have a statute preventing overdrafts. It seems to me that it mystifies things when you do not have them uniform.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say to the Senator, in answer to his suggestion that the State of Vermont, and I presume practically all the States, have a law governing State banks which says that banks shall not loan except upon stated securities or upon good names, and the moment that a banker permits an overdraft he is usually, at least technically, violating the law. But I do not recall that any bank which tried to keep within the law, which tried to do right, which tried to remedy a mistake on the part of a responsible customer was ever prosecuted for a technical violation of the law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know that that is a law in most States. I think in most States there is no such law except that which arises from obtaining money under false pretenses by a man issuing a check on a bank where there is no money deposited to his credit. There are some States, I am satisfied, in the West that have a law absolutely against it in a State bank. If you permit a law of that kind to apply to State banks and leave the national banks free to make overdrafts the result of it is that there is a discrimination between the banks. It is an advantage in that instance to the national bank to accommodate its customers in that way and at the same time it is not right to the State bank that that should not be permitted to be done.

Mr. PAGE. Let me say to the Senator, in answer to his suggestion, that I believe there is not a single State in the Union where there are not laws which state upon what collateral or what names the State banks may loan, and the moment a bank allows an overdraft it is guilty of at least a technical violation of the law. I think you will find that the State laws are quite uniform in prescribing what security or names the State banks may and what they may not loan upon. Usually loans must be made upon real estate or upon two good names, or on stocks or bonds as collateral. I think that in most of the States the making of a loan by way of an overdraft would be a violation of the banking laws.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If that is true as to the State banks, ought it not also to be true as to the national banks in that State?

Mr. PAGE. Perhaps it should, but as far as I know the law is never enforced where unintentional and unimportant overdrafts occur.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be, but in some way it seems to me the inhabitants of the States ought to be put on notice that it is the same transaction, whether it be with a State bank or with a national bank, and that they are to be treated the same way. Consequently, I think making it uniform is a wise provision.

Mr. PAGE. I simply answer the Senator by saying that this constant tampering with our laws because somebody happens to think of something which they imagine may be improved is bad policy, and when we have for 50 or 100 years pursued a course in banking that has been found convenient, wise, and safe, let experience be our guide and let well enough alone.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it conducive at all to the dignity or to the strength of the national banks to say that their operations must depend upon some State law? Is it not a fact that the national banking system was devised by the Federal Government, for the Federal Government, as an instrumentality and agency of the Federal Government, independent of the States? The States have their banking system; the Federal Government has its banking system. Why should the Federal Government tie itself to each of the States of the Union and attempt to conform its banking rules and its banking regulations and its banking practices to the whims and caprices of every legislature of every State in the Union?

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question right there? Does not the Senator recognize that the usury laws of the States apply to the national banks and that there is no usury law of the United States? Does he not recognize that it is wise that it should be so? If you have a high rate of interest in one State and a low rate in another, the best way to have a banking system is to have it conform as near as you can to the laws of the State. Consequently there is a State law as to usury which says in my State 8 per cent, which says in Vermont probably 6 per cent or 5 per cent.

Mr. PAGE. Six per cent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is perfectly right that it should be controlled by the State law, because as a matter of uniformity it makes for good transactions.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know that any wrong has been done in making the national law in some respects conform to the State law; but during the present session bill after bill and bill after bill has come in here to change the national-banking system, and I believe it is unwise.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator does he not think that the Comptroller of the Currency, who has held that official position for some years, is in a pretty good position to know whether or not there ought to be a change in the law, and owing to the very fact that the suggestion comes from the Comptroller of the Currency or from those connected with the control of national banks would he not consider that there were some reasons why it ought not to appear as a whim of some outsider longing for a change?

Mr. PAGE. I want to say in regard to the Comptroller of the Currency that I know nothing against his administration of the affairs connected with his office, but I do know that some of the banks of the country think that either Mr. Williams or the Banking and Currency Committee are seeking to inject into our banking matters a multitude of changes, which they regard as wrong. I am a great believer in accepting, especially in banking matters, the results of long experience. If we have for 50 years been running along successfully and satisfactorily under a law which somebody now wants to change I want to be clearly shown good reasons for the change.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize the fact that perhaps the greatest legislation upon finance that ever has taken place in the United States is the Federal Reserve System, which is entirely different from the banking laws of the United States previous to that time? It does seem to me that to just wipe out of existence every suggestion of good that is to be obtained by a general declaration that you do not believe in changes and believe in the old system we never would have any improvement.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say to the Senator that the Federal reserve law is not the result of hasty action. Years and years ago all parties recognized the fact that there must be something done to safeguard conditions in times of panic. After long, painstaking, and thoughtful consideration of this great financial problem we brought forth the Federal reserve law, and I hope it will prove to be good.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not attempting to speak of those who participated or did not participate in it. It is generally conceded now that the Federal Reserve System is the most perfect system of banking in the world. Other nations are trying to copy the laws with relation to the Federal Reserve System, and changes have been made, as they must be made, in order to overcome conditions that have proven to be injurious.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the very illustration that he gave. He said the United States did not permit any lending of money on real estate. That was true for many years, and the national bankers saw that they were at a disadvantage. They saw that it was not right that they should not be permitted to lend money on land when the State banks were permitted to do so. It is by reason of that, to a large extent that there are 26,000 State banks in the United States and only about 7,000 national banks. It is because more privileges have been given to the State banks. This is one of the privileges that exist as to State banks, and the object is to make them uniform, to make better banking and less likelihood of bank failures.

I want to say the whole banking fraternity recognizes that, because the Federal Reserve System has provided that they shall lend on real estate to the extent of one-fourth of the capital of the bank and surplus, it was a wise thing. They have found it has not hurt anything by reason of it, and it has placed the national banks to that extent upon an equality with the State banks.

Here is a provision simply with relation to overdrafts. Everybody, it seems to me, ought to encourage their not being incurred, yet, it seems to me, if in one State the State law does not permit it in the case of State banks, and the national banks are permitted overdrafts, there is an advantage in favor of the national bank with relation to its customers.

If the Congress of the United States were to pass a law prohibiting absolutely overdrafts, then you would find certain State banks would have the advantage of saying, "Our customers can be accommodated by an overdraft, and therefore we will attract accounts that the national banks will not attract."

Mr. PAGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator know of any banking community that has complained because of the want of such a law as we would have under section 2 of the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether they have or not. I have not the correspondence which the Comptroller of the Currency has, but I know the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has said that the Comptroller of the Currency is in a position better to know of the complaints and better to know of the defects in the national laws than anyone else, and when he sends a recommendation here, unless there is a very plain and palpable reason why the legislation should not be enacted it seems to me that we ought to enact it.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say in regard to the liquidity of national banks that I am not at all certain that the Senator's theory that it is best to have national banks loan on real estate is for the best interest of the banks of the country. It may work out well in Colorado, but I have yet to reach the conclusion that this change in the law will be beneficial in the long run to the national banks of this country. We have savings banks that are organized largely for the purpose of loaning money on mortgages. Our national banks are organized largely for the purpose of doing a commercial business. I am far from certain that we had not better have let the national banks adhere to their checking or commercial business and let the savings banks loan their money on mortgages.

I am not saying that I am absolutely certain that section 2 is wrong. I do say, however, that I do not believe in changing a banking law under which we have been working successfully and satisfactorily for 50 years and change it simply because some man has an everlasting yearning for a change. I should like to have the Senator tell me if he believes any banker living wants to do business with a concern that is constantly overdrawing its account? I know, as every banker knows, that banks do not like that kind of accounts, and if they permit overdrafts at all they do it because they want to conserve the credit of their valuable and responsible customers or possibly tide them over a temporary pinch.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator says it is bad banking; that he does not believe in it and the bankers will not do it. This is to put national banks under the same rule that exists as to State banks, and where overdraft is prohibited by the State law it prohibits overdrafts. For that reason it seems to me there can be no objection to it.
